I. DEFINITION. — Insolvency is the state of a person who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due, in the usual course of trade or business.¹

II. JURISDICTION — 1. Original Jurisdiction — a. WHAT COURTS HAVE. — Proceedings in insolvency are purely statutory in their nature and origin. Consequently, the only courts having juris-

1. In Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 127, Shaw, C. J., said: "By the term 'insolvency' * * * as used in these statutes we do not understand an absolute inability to pay one's debts at some future time, upon a settlement and winding up of all a trader's concerns; but a trader may be said to be in insolvent circumstances when he is not in a condition to pay his debts in the ordinary course, as persons carrying on trade usually do." To the same effect see also Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 594; Herrick v. Borst, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 650; Ferry v. Central New York Bank, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 445.

For a full discussion as to what constitutes insolvency, see Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law, title Insolvency.

diction over such cases are those which are designated by the statute providing for such proceedings.¹

b. EXTENT OF JURISDICTION. — The courts having cognizance of insolvency proceedings being creatures of the statute, their jurisdiction is special and limited in its character, and confined to the authority conferred by the statute.²

It Is Impossible to Lay Down Any General Rules as to what is within the jurisdiction of such courts and what is not, and the practitioner can only be referred to the statutes, and to the cases cited in the notes.³

Where a debtor under the New York Insolvent Act of 1811 presented his petition to the first judge of the county, who appointed a day for the creditors to appear and show cause, etc., and before the day a commissioner was appointed for the county, and the insolvent on that day presented his petition, etc., to the commissioner, who completed the proceedings so begun before the first judge and granted a discharge to the insolvent, it was held that the discharge was void for want of jurisdiction in the commissioner, the act having made no provision in such case, and he having no authority unless the proceedings were commenced de novo. Muzzy v. Whitney, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 226.

3. Examination of Debtor. — In California the Superior Court has jurisdiction to make an order requiring a debtor to appear and be examined touching the affairs of his estate, upon the application of a receiver. Goodday v. Superior Ct., 65 Cal. 580.

Cannot Modify Order Pending Appeal.

— On a petition by a debtor to the Superior Court the usual order was made, adjudging him insolvent and staying all proceedings against him. Subsequently S., a creditor, took an appeal to the Supreme Court from said order of adjudication. Thereafter, and during the pendency of the appeal, on application of a judgment creditor, C., the Supreme Court made an order modifying said order of adjudication to the extent of permitting C. to take out execution upon his said judgment and levy it upon certain real estate, constituting the homestead of the insolvent. On certiorari to the Supreme Court by S., it was held that the Superior Court had no authority, during the pendency of the appeal, to modify the order appealed from. Stateler v. Superior Ct., 107 Cal. 536.

Sale of Lands Outside County. — In Kentucky Gen. Stat., c. 44, art. 2, § 3, provides that proceedings by creditors to have a debtor adjudged insolvent "shall be conducted as actions and proceedings for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons are now required to be conducted, so far as the same are applicable." Under this statute, in connection with the Kentucky Civil Code, § 65, providing that "an action to settle the estate of a deceased person must be brought in the county in which his personal representative was qualified," the trial court in insolvency proceedings has jurisdiction to decree the sale of lands situated elsewhere in the state than in the county in which the action was brought. Fishback v. Green, 87 Ky. 107.

Injunction. — In Maryland the Court of Common Pleas, when acting as an insolvent court, can issue an injunction in such proceedings only in the instance provided for by the Maryland Act of 1880, c. 172, to prevent the disposition of the insolvent's property, pending inquiry to determine the insolvency of the debtor. Paul v. Locust Point Co., 70 Md. 288.

Summary Proceedings Against Trustees.

— The insolvent courts have exclusive jurisdiction in the distribution of insolvents' estates, and may proceed in a summary way against the trustees for default or neglect of duty. Purviance v. Glenn, 8 Md. 202.

Cannot Annul Discharge Without Notice.

— In Massachusetts, where it appeared

Amendment of Record. — Where the insolvency court is a court of record, it has authority to amend errors in its record.¹

2. Equity Jurisdiction — a. IN GENERAL. — Since the jurisdiction of insolvency courts is limited and statutory, it follows that when the limit of such jurisdiction is reached, further relief must be sought in equity.²

b. SUPERVISORY JURISDICTION IN SUPREME COURT. — In some states the Supreme Court is given a general equitable jurisdiction over all proceedings in the insolvency courts.³ Under from the record of the Insolvent Court that a decree had been entered in due form for the issue of a certificate of discharge to an insolvent debtor, it was held that the judge of that court could not pass an order annulling such discharge without notice to the parties interested, if a decree was actually made and truly recorded, or without formal amendment of such record, if it was erroneous. Marsh v. McKenzie, 99 Mass. 64.

Stay of Proceedings Against Corporation. — A commissioner of insolvency has no jurisdiction to stay proceedings in the case of an insolvent corporation. Cheshire Iron Works v. Gay, 3 Gray (Mass.) 531.

Setting Aside Verdict of Jury. — In New Jersey if an insolvent debtor applies to the Court of Common Pleas for a discharge, and the case is tried before a jury, the court has power to set aside the verdict for sufficient reasons and order a new trial. Van Waggoner v. Coe, 25 N. J. L. 197.

Admitting Further Testimony. — In New York after the testimony was declared closed, in proceedings for a discharge, and the judge was holding the case under consideration, the consenting creditors moved for and obtained an order to admit further testimony; it was held that this order was clearly within the discretion of the judge. Matter of Dimock, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 301.

Continuance with Consent of Parties. — On a petition in insolvency by a debtor, the judge does not lose his jurisdiction by continuing the hearing for more than thirty days with the consent of both parties. People v. Behrman, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 81.

Order of Lower Court Staying Execution. — In Rhode Island the Supreme Court, upon the dismissal of an insolvent's petition, has no power to dissolve an order of the Court of Common Pleas staying an execution of that court against the insolvent until further order. Matter of Allen, 5 R. I. 384.

Power of Federal Court to Stay Proceedings. — Where a debtor petitions to the Supreme Court of Rhode Island for a discharge in insolvency, the United States District Court has no authority, pending the petition, to grant a stay of proceedings against the insolvent. Matter of Hopkins, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 567.

1. Marsh v. McKenzie, 99 Mass. 64.

2. Gable v. Scott, 56 Md. 176.

May Compel Assignee to Perform Trust. — Courts of equity have jurisdiction to compel an assignee in insolvency to perform his trust and account for the property assigned. The remedy afforded creditors, under the law regulating insolvency proceedings, is not exclusive. Sanderson v. McIntosh, 65 Cal. 36.

3. Maine. — Under the Maine Rev. Stat. of 1883, c. 70, § 13, the Supreme Judicial Court has jurisdiction to revise the proceedings, orders, and decrees of the courts of insolvency, in all cases in which no other remedy is given by statute. Harris v. Peabody, 73 Me. 262.

Massachusetts. — Under the Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 15, the Supreme Judicial Court is given a general superintendence and jurisdiction of all cases arising under the insolvent laws of that state. Kimball v. Morris, 2 Met. (Mass.) 573; Cushing v. Arnold, 9 Met. (Mass.) 23; Thayer v. Mann, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 371; Barnard v. Eaton, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 294; Harlow v. Tufts, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 448; Richards v. Merriam, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 582; Hill v. Hersey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 584; Cheshire Iron Works v. Gay, 3 Gray (Mass.) 531; Hanson v. Paige, 3 Gray (Mass.) 239; Merriam v. Sewall, 8 Gray (Mass.) 316; Gross v. Potter, 15 Gray (Mass.) 556; Lee v. Wells, 15 Gray (Mass.) 459; Bartholomew v. McKinstry, 2 Allen (Mass.) 448; Lancaster v. Choate, 5 Allen such a statute the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to revise the proceedings of the insolvency courts,¹ and will, for sufficient cause, vacate the proceedings for a discharge.²

How Application Made. — Application for the benefit of this jurisdiction may be made by any party aggrieved,³ and must be by bill, petition, or other proceeding in equity.⁴

(Mass.) 530; Rice, Appellant, 7 Allen (Mass.) 112; Marsh v. McKenzie, 99 Mass. 64; Kempton v. Saunders, 132 Mass. 466; Claflin v. Lowe, 157 Mass. 252; Clarke v. Stanwood, 166 Mass. 379; Fairweather v. McKim, (Mass. 1897) 46 N. E. Rep. 427.

To Expunge Proof of Fraudulent Claim. — The Supreme Judicial Court has power, under its general superintendence and jurisdiction, as a court of chancery, of all cases arising under the insolvent law, to expunge the proof of a fraudulent claim against the estate of an insolvent debtor, on the petition of his assignee, who did not know of the fraud until the expiration of the time allowed by the law for an appeal from the allowance of the claim by the commissioner of insolvency. Hill v. Hersey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 584.

To Compel Transfer of Fraudulent Mortgage. — The Supreme Judicial Court has jurisdiction in equity to compel the grantee in a fraudulent mortgage of real estate, who took the mortgage with knowledge of fraud, to transfer the same to the assignee in insolvency of the grantor. Bartholomew v. McKinstrey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 448.

1. Harris v. Peabody, 73 Me. 262; Harlow v. Tufts, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 448.

Matters of Fact. — The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts has jurisdiction to revise and correct the decisions of a judge of insolvency as to matters of fact; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction is not limited to the evidence which was before him, but may allow the parties to introduce other evidence. Lancaster v. Choate, 5 Allen (Mass.) 530.

To Reverse Decree of Insolvency Court. — Under the Massachusetts Public Statutes, c. 157, § 15, giving the Supreme Judicial Court supervisory jurisdiction of proceedings in the Court of Insolvency, that court has jurisdiction to entertain a bill by creditors to reverse a decree of the Insolvency Court, confirming a discharge, notwithstanding that the debtor has departed from the commonwealth, so that service upon him can only be made by a publication. Claflin v. Lowe, 157 Mass. 252.

Sale of Mortgaged Property. — Where a petition in insolvency proceedings was presented to the Supreme Judicial Court, praying a revision of the proceedings of a master in chancery in relation to an application by a mortgagee for a sale of the mortgaged property, and it appeared that the petition had all the characteristics of an original proceeding, the court entertained jurisdiction and adjudicated upon it accordingly. Barnard v. Eaton, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 294.

2. See infra, IX. 1. In General.

3. Who Is a "Party Aggrieved." — Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 15, gives the Supreme Judicial Court supervisory jurisdiction over insolvency matters, on proper process of any party aggrieved. Under this statute it was held that the creditor was not a "party aggrieved" by the refusal of the judge of the Insolvency Court to permit certain creditors to withdraw their assent to the discharge. Clarke v. Stanwood, 166 Mass. 379.

4. Cushing v. Arnold, 9 Met. (Mass.) 23.

Petition in Nature of Appeal. — Under the Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 15, giving to the Supreme Court supervisory jurisdiction over insolvency proceedings, that court has no jurisdiction of a petition in the nature of an appeal by a creditor from the decision of the Court of Insolvency granting a discharge to the debtor. Kempton v. Saunders, 132 Mass. 466.

Remedy Not by Writ of Prohibition. — Under the Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 15, providing that the Supreme Judicial Court shall have a general superintendence and jurisdiction over cases in the Insolvency Court, an error of a judge of insolvency in proceeding irregularly in insolvency to confirm a proposal of the insolvent for composition cannot be corrected by a writ of prohibition; the remedy is by petition or bill to the Supreme Court. Fair-

3. How Jurisdiction Acquired — On Debtor's Application. — Since an insolvent court proceeds under special powers conferred by statute, therefore, in order to invoke its jurisdiction, the statutory requirements must be complied with.¹ As to what steps are necessary before the court can acquire jurisdiction, reference must be had to the statutes. The practice, as far as embodied in decisions, is indicated in the notes.²

On Creditor's Application. — On an application by a creditor to have a debtor adjudged insolvent, the requirements of the statute must be complied with in order to give the court jurisdiction.³

weather v. McKim, (Mass. 1897) 46 N. E. Rep. 427.

1. McDonald v. Katz, 31 Cal. 167; Purviance v. Glenn, 8 Md. 202.

2. In California the court acquires jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties interested on the filing of a sufficient petition and schedules duly subscribed and verified, and by making the proper orders and giving the proper notice. Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92; Friedlander v. Loucks, 34 Cal. 18; Bennett v. His Creditors, 22 Cal. 38.

Jurisdiction Before Notice. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852 it was held that the court could acquire jurisdiction to discharge an insolvent from his debts only by due publication of the notice to creditors, but that the jurisdiction to make the orders which precede publication of the notice to creditors attaches when the petition and schedule are filed. Cerf v. Oaks, 59 Cal. 132.

In Maryland, under the Act of 1805, c. 110, the presentation of a petition by a party in confinement was alone necessary to give jurisdiction, and since the proof of confinement has been dispensed with by the Act of 1830, c. 130, the jurisdiction of the County Court attaches by the presentation of a petition such as is prescribed by the acts in relation to insolvent debtors. Bowie v. Jones, 1 Gill (Md.) 208.

In New Jersey, in order to give the court jurisdiction of an application by a debtor for the benefit of the insolvent laws, the debtor, at the time of giving bond, should be under arrest or held in custody. Bond v. Cox, 30 N. J. L. 381.

Failure to Deliver Inventory. — The Court of Common Pleas has not jurisdiction for the discharge of an insolvent debtor unless he has complied with all the requirements in the Act of 1830, Harr. Comp. 299: Giving bond upon arrest, and omitting to deliver to the officer arresting him an inventory of his estate, etc., under oath, is not such compliance as will authorize the court to hear his application for discharge. Davis v. Hendrickson, 15 N. J. L. 481.

In Massachusetts, under the Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 17, on the filing of a petition in insolvency by a debtor the court acquires jurisdiction to issue a warrant directing the sheriff, his messenger, to take possession of the debtor's property; and under Massachusetts Statute of 1884, c. 236, § 3, such warrant may be issued after the filing of a proposition for a composition. Jordan v. Palmer, 165 Mass. 317.

3. In California, in a proceeding by creditors under the Insolvent Act of 1880, where the petition is properly signed, verified, and filed, and a copy thereof, together with a copy of the order to show cause, is regularly served on the debtor in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil actions, the court thereby acquires jurisdiction. Luhrs v. Kelly, 67 Cal. 289.

In Massachusetts, to authorize the issuing of a warrant under Stat. 1844, c. 178, to seize the estate of a debtor on the ground of his having made a fraudulent conveyance by way of preference, it must be shown, first, that the debtor was insolvent, or contemplated proceedings in insolvency, at the time of making the conveyance, and that he made it with a view of giving a preference to a pre-existing creditor; second, that he then had no reasonable cause to believe himself solvent; and third, that the creditor, at the time of receiving the conveyance, had reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent; and the burden of proving the first and third of these propositions is on the creditor who

III. WHO MAY APPLY FOR DISCHARGE — 1. Debtor. — It is a general provision of the insolvent acts, that the only persons entitled to be discharged in insolvency are debtors having their residence in the state wherein the application is made.¹

Partnership. — Under these statutes a partnership is generally allowed to apply for a discharge like any other debtor.²

2. Creditor. — The statutes in some of the states provide for proceedings in involuntary insolvency upon the application of a creditor. Under these statutes it seems that the petitioning creditor need not be a resident of the state.³

petitions for the issuing of the warrant. Ex p. Jordan, 9 Met. (Mass.) 292.

Nonresident Debtor. — If a nonresident debtor voluntarily appears by attorney on an order to show cause why he should not be adjudged insolvent, and consents to an adjudication, the court thereby acquires jurisdiction over both his person and property. Frankel v. Their Creditors, 20 Nev. 49.

1. California. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1895, § 2, a residence of six months in the county wherein the application is made is a condition precedent to the right to institute proceedings for a discharge. Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530; In re Thomas, (Cal. 1896) 44 Pac. Rep. 327.

Massachusetts. — Under Mass. Pub. Stat. of 1882, c. 157, § 16, application may be made by an inhabitant of that state in the county in which he resides. Ryan v. Merriam, 4 Allen (Mass.) 78; Hassan v. Hodges, 12 Gray (Mass.) 208.

New Jersey. — Three months' residence in the state is a prerequisite to an application for a discharge. Stagg v. Austin, 18 N. J. L. 82.

New York. — The New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2149, requires that the debtor shall be a resident of the state at the time of presenting his petition. And see Otis v. Hitchcock, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 433; Matter of Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134; Jenks v. Stebbins, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; People v. Machado, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 460; Rusher v. Sherman, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 416.

County in Which Debtor Resides. — Under the New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2150, requiring an application by a debtor for a discharge in insolvency to be addressed to the court of the county in which he resides, the debtor must have his "domicil" in such county in order to come within the terms of the statute. Matter of Dimock, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 301, affirming 24 Civ. Pro. Rep. (Ulster County Ct.) 312, 11 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 610; People v. Machado, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 460.

Loss of Residence. — A foreigner who, after a residence of seven years in this state, transacting business as a commission merchant, returns home taking with him his effects, uncertain whether he will return or not, loses his character of an inhabitant; so that though he returns to this state after a sojourn of only three weeks in his native land, he is not entitled to be discharged as an insolvent debtor if after his return he engages in no business, and his residence is merely of a temporary character. Matter of Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134.

Animus Revertendi. — It lies upon a petitioner for the benefit of the insolvent laws, who has been absent from the state prior to the filing of his petition, to show that when he left he went with a clear intention of returning; and if the intent be doubtful the letter of the law will prevail, and the petitioner must be dismissed. Senior's Case, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 118.

2. See infra, IV. 2. Petition by Partnership.

California. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852 partners could not apply, in their joint name, for the benefit of the act. Meyer v. Kohlman, 8 Cal. 44. But the California Insolvent Act of 1895, § 66, expressly provides that the word "debtor" shall include partnerships and corporations.

3. Under the Connecticut General Statutes, § 507, providing for the institution of insolvency proceedings by a creditor, the creditor need not be a resident of the state. Mechanics', etc., Bank v. Versailles Woollen Co., 59 Conn. 347.

A nonresident creditor may institute

IV. PETITION FOR DISCHARGE — 1. Petition by Debtor — a. IN GENERAL. — The petition of a debtor for a discharge in insolvency should in general conform to the statute under which it is drawn, in order to give the court jurisdiction of the proceedings.¹

Formal Objections to the debtor's petition should be taken advantage of when the petition is presented, and come too late in a collateral action.²

Allegation of Insolvency. — The petition should contain an allegation that the debtor is insolvent.³

Account of Creditors. — The statutes generally require the debtor's petition to contain an account of his creditors.⁴

insolvency proceedings under the Maryland Code, art. 48, § 8. Brown v. Smart, 69 Md. 320.

1. Merry v. Sweet, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 475.

New Jersey — No Form of Petition Prescribed. — Where an application is made for the benefit of the insolvent laws no form of petition is prescribed by law. The petition will be sufficient if it shows that the petitioner is so under arrest as to be entitled to a discharge, and thus gives the court jurisdiction of his case. Van Waggoner v. Coe, 25 N. J. L. 197.

Sufficient Petition. — The petition of an applicant for the benefit of the insolvent laws, setting forth that he was arrested by virtue of a capias ad respondendum at the suit of the plaintiff, and being arrested, he entered into bond to apply, etc., is sufficient. It need not appear on the face of the petition that an inventory of his property was delivered to the officer with the bond. Stagg v. Austin, 18 N. J. L. 82.

California — Need Not Allege Debts Not Created in State. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852 it was unnecessary for a petitioning debtor to allege in his petition that his debts were created in that state. Sharp v. His Creditors, 10 Cal. 419.

Need Not Allege Debts Not Fiduciary. — The petition in insolvency need not aver that the debts were not fiduciary, etc., so as to show that the petition is not within the thirteenth section of the California Insolvent Act of 1852. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162.

Insolvent Need Not Sign Petition. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852 an insolvent's petition might be signed by an attorney, the signature of the insolvent not being required by the terms of the statute. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162; Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

Pennsylvania — Need Not Recite Arrest and Giving Bond. — In Pennsylvania a debtor's petition for a discharge need not recite that he has been arrested and has given bond. Lincoln v. Williams, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 105.

2. Greenwaldt v. Kraus, 148 Pa. St. 517. See also infra, XI. 2. a. (2) Certiorari.

Bad Grammar and Crudities of Language used by a debtor in his petition are not fatal to the jurisdiction, and will not vitiate the pleading. In re Ramazina, 110 Cal. 488.

3. Assets Exceeding Liabilities. — Although the petition of a debtor may show that his assets exceed his liabilities this showing is not necessarily inconsistent with a state of insolvency, and unless controverted by the creditors, the allegation of insolvency is of itself sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of the court. In re Chope, 112 Cal. 630.

Where it appears from the petition that the valuation of the partnership assets exceeds considerably the liabilities of the partnership, but the petition further discloses that the partners undoubtedly are hopelessly insolvent, it is a sufficient showing of insolvency, within the purview of the California Insolvent Act of 1880. In re Ramazina, 110 Cal. 488.

Cause of Insolvency. — Under the Pennsylvania Insolvency Act of 1798 a petitioning debtor was not required to state the cause of his insolvency. David's Case, 1 Browne (Pa.) 377.

4. California. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852 a petition in insolvency was required to state the name of each creditor, if known, and if unknown, to state such to be the fact. McAllister v. Strobe, 7 Cal. 428.

New York — No Particular Form of Account. — Under New York Laws of

Conclusion. — It is held in California that the petition need not conclude with a formal prayer for a discharge.¹

Amendment. — The petition may, in proper cases, be amended before the hearing.²

b. TO WHOM ADDRESSED. — It seems that the petition may be addressed either to the judge or to the court, the terms being regarded as convertible.³

c. ALLEGING RESIDENCE. — The statutes of some of the states require that the debtor's petition shall specify his place of residence.⁴ But it seems that although the statute may require a certain period of residence as a prerequisite to an application 1831, c. 300, § 13, requiring a debtor who petitioned for a discharge to deliver an account of his creditors, but prescribing no particular form in which to deliver such account, it is sufficient if there be a full and intelligible account of creditors delivered in any form. People v. Behrman, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 81.

Name of Deceased Creditor Instead of Administrator. — Where, in a list of creditors in a debtor's petition for his discharge, the name of a deceased creditor appeared instead of that of his administrator, there being no evidence that the petitioner was aware of the death of the creditor, it was held that the court was not obliged to set aside the discharge on that account. Wheeler v. Emmeluth, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 369.

Consideration of Indebtedness. — Under 2 New York Rev. Stat. 200, § 8, an insolvent must set forth in his petition the consideration of his indebtedness to each creditor. Wright v. Crawford, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 338.

Amount Unknown, or in Dispute. — If an insolvent debtor, in his petition, or upon the exhibit made by him on the hearing, puts down a creditor without naming the sum due to such creditor, but sets it down as unknown to him, or in dispute, it is no ground for dismissing his application. Le Chevallier v. Hamilton, 18 N. J. L. 260.

1. In re Chope, 112 Cal. 630.

2. In re Brown, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 473.

In Johnson's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 157, it is held that whenever, in the investigation of the petition of an insolvent debtor, the court is satisfied that he is a fair and bona fide applicant, it will not dismiss his application because his petition is not in all formal particulars in strict compliance with the requisitions of the insolvent laws, but will afford him an opportunity of conforming to the law by postponing the hearing of his petition to another term, with liberty to attend in the interval.

3. Addressed to Court. — It is no objection to insolvent proceedings that the petition is addressed to the court and not to the judge, as required by statute. The court has jurisdiction of the matter, and the words "judge" and "court" are in this and other places used as convertible terms. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162; Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

Addressed to Judge. — Where a debtor petitions the County Court for a discharge in insolvency, the fact that his petition is addressed to the judge in person, and not to the court, will not invalidate the discharge. Borthwick v. Howe, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 505.

4. California. — Insolvent Act, 1895, § 2. See In re Thomas, (Cal. 1896) 44 Pac. Rep. 327.

New York. — Code Civ. Pro., § 2151. Formerly, in New York, preliminary proof of the fact of residence was required. Jenks v. Stebbins 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; Matter of Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134; People v. Machado, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 460; Rusher v. Sherman, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 416. But an averment of residence was sufficient proof. Russell, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 472. And see Develin v. Cooper, 84 N. Y. 410.

Massachusetts — Need Not Allege Residence. — Although a petitioner for the benefit of the insolvent laws must be a resident of this commonwealth, and have his residence or place of business in the county in which the proceedings are instituted, his petition need not allege these facts. Ryan v. Merriam, 4 Allen (Mass.) 78; Whiton v. Nichols, 15 Gray (Mass.) 95.

for a discharge, such period of residence need not be alleged in the petition.¹

d. AFFIDAVIT TO PETITION. — Where the statute requires an affidavit by the debtor to be annexed to his petition, such affidavit must be made in the manner and at the time prescribed by the statute, or the court acquires no jurisdiction.²

e. CONSENT OF CREDITORS — (1) In General. — In New York the petitioner for a discharge in insolvency must annex to his petition the written consent of creditors holding at least two-thirds of all the debts owing by him to creditors within the United States.³

1. Although the California Insolvent Act of 1880 makes a residence of six months in the county, next preceding the filing of his petition, a condition precedent to the right of the petitioner to institute the proceedings for his discharge, yet it is not necessary that this fact should be stated in the petition in order to clothe the court with jurisdiction in the premises. Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530; In re Thomas, (Cal. 1896) 44 Pac. Rep. 327. Compare Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92.

In New Jersey it was held that the petition need not state that the applicant resided in the state three months before his arrest, which residence was requisite under the Act. Stagg v. Austin, 18 N. J. L. 82.

2. Ely v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 365.

Affidavit before Wrong Officer. — The affidavit must be sworn to before the officer to whom the petition is presented. Therefore where an affidavit was sworn to before a commissioner of deeds it was held that, as that officer had no statutory right to administer the oath, the discharge was void for want of jurisdiction; and permitting the petitioner to make another affidavit on the hearing did not remedy the defect, as the proceedings in this respect are not amendable. Small v. Wheaton, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 306.

Sworn to in Presence of, and Subscribed by, Judge. — Under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 16, if the affidavit annexed to the debtor's petition is not sworn to in the presence of the judge, nor subscribed by him prior to the order to show cause, the discharge will be void for want of jurisdiction. Ely v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 365, affirming 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 366.

Defective Affidavit. — Under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat., c. 5, tit. 1, art. 3, § 7, the affidavit annexed to a debtor's petition must state that the petitioner had not disposed of or made over any part of his estate for the future benefit of himself or his family, and an affidavit which used the words "for the future benefit of himself and family" was held to be so defective as not to confer jurisdiction on the trial court. Merry v. Sweet, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 475; Hale v. Sweet, 40 N. Y. 97.

An affidavit verifying a petition for discharge in insolvency, which omits the words, "that I have in no instance created or acknowledged a debt for a greater sum than I honestly owed," fails to conform to section 5438, Mich. Comp. Laws, and is so defective as not to confer jurisdiction on the commissioner. Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 500.

Massachusetts — Sufficient Verification. — A petition in insolvency is sufficiently verified by an oath which states the allegation therein contained to be true, according to the petitioner's best knowledge and belief. American Carpet Lining Co. v. Chipman, 146 Mass. 385.

3. New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2152.

Two-thirds of Creditors Must Consent. — Where it appeared on the face of the proceedings that less than two-thirds of the creditors had joined in the petition, it was held that the officer had no jurisdiction of the case and a discharge rendered therein was void. Morrow v. Freeman, 61 N. Y. 515. See also Frary v. Dakin, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 75. The same rule applied under the New York Act of 1813. Salters v. Tobias, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 338.

No Amount Opposite Names. — Where names were signed to the petition without any amounts set opposite to them, it was held that such persons not being named in the schedule as creditors, they were not to be considered as consenting creditors. Rusher v. Sherman, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 416.

The Massachusetts statutes require the written assent of a majority of creditors who have proved their claims, only when the insolvent's assets do not pay fifty per cent. of his debts.¹

(2) Relinquishment of Securities. — A consenting creditor must include in his consent a written declaration relinquishing to the trustee any security held by him which is a lien upon the real or personal property of the petitioner.²

In Minnesota creditors may, under certain circumstances, share in the distribution of the insolvent's assets without releasing their claims.³

Creditors Residing in Other States. — In Warrin's Case, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 457, note, it was held that when creditors residing in other states petition, they must annex the original accounts or sworn copies thereof, and the original specialties or securities, if any, upon which their demands arise; and that an omission to do so is fatal to the proceedings, and the defect cannot be supplied.

1. Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 157, §§ 86-90.

Where Assent of Requisite Majority Not Filed. — The Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 90, provides that when a discharge is refused for the reason that the assent of the requisite majority of creditors has not been filed, the judge, on application of the debtor, with the assent of a majority of the "creditors who have proved their claims," may grant a discharge. Under this section the assent of a majority of creditors who have proved their claims at the time of their application, although not within six months of the assignment, is sufficient. In re Ruffin, (Mass. 1897) 46 N. E. Rep. 626.

Second Application. — The assent of three-fourths in value of the creditors of an insolvent debtor, which is requisite to his second discharge under Stat. 1844, c. 178, § 5, must be filed within six months of the date of assignment. Wills v. Prichard, 10 Gray (Mass.) 327.

Assent by Attorney. — In Massachusetts an attorney may assent to the discharge of the insolvent, in the name of a creditor, without showing by written evidence his authority to do so. Clarke v. Stanwood, 166 Mass. 379.

2. New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2158.

Sufficient Relinquishment. — A statement that "for value received, I hereby release to the assignee to be appointed all claims of the estate of C. C. that I have by reason of the judgment against him assigned to me," is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute. Augsbury v. Crossman, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 389.

Omission to Relinquish Security. — Where, on signing a petition for the discharge of an insolvent debtor, judgment creditors omit to add to their signatures a declaration that they relinquish their judgments to the assignee to be appointed, the omission is a mere irregularity which can be cured by attaching such relinquishments to the petition afterwards, and does not deprive the judge of jurisdiction. Matter of Phillips, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 108; Saule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48; Russell, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 472.

Minnesota — Who Must Release. — Under the provisions of our Insolvent Act, the person in whose favor a claim against the insolvent is filed and allowed is the creditor by whom a release must be made and filed, and to whom notice of the time limited for filing releases must be given, if such notice be ordered by the court. Adamson v. Cheney, 35 Minn. 474.

3. Minnesota Stat. 1894, § 4249.

Sufficient Complaint. — In proceedings by creditors under the proviso in section 10 of the Insolvent Law of 1881, for the purpose of obtaining an order allowing them to share in the insolvent estate without filing releases, a complaint is sufficient which alleges that the debtor has fraudulently concealed, encumbered, and disposed of his property with intent to cheat and defraud his creditors. Matter of Gazett, 35 Minn. 532.

Need Not Allege Preference. — A petition under Laws 1881, c. 148, § 2, against an insolvent debtor, on the ground that he has confessed judgment in favor of one of his creditors, need not allege that the creditor thereby ob-

(3) Affidavit of Consenting Creditors. — The consent of a creditor must be accompanied by an affidavit stating his demand, its nature, and the general ground or consideration of the indebtedness.¹ Where the judge decides that the affidavit of a creditor is in compliance with the statute, the question as to any omission therein is no longer open.²

f. SECOND APPLICATION. — It is held that the pending application of an insolvent debtor to be discharged relieves him from the necessity of making a second application in pursuance of a bond given to another creditor upon a subsequent arrest.³ Where there has once been a full hearing and decision on the merits, the court will not hear another petition made under the same circumstances.⁴

ained a preference. In re Graeff, 30 Minn. 476.

1. New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2160.

What Particularity Required. — The grounds of creditors' claims need not be stated with such particularity as is required in a statement for a judgment by confession. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

Sufficient Statement of Ground and Consideration. — Where the affidavit of a petitioning creditor stated that a sum of money, being the sum annexed to his name, subscribed to the petition, is justly due to him from the said insolvent for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered, secured by indorsement of M.'s note, it was held sufficient to support an insolvent's discharge. Pratt v. Chase, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 150.

Insufficient Statement of Ground and Consideration. — An affidavit of a creditor specifying that the indebtedness to him is "on account of a judgment entered against said insolvent upon a promissory note," does not sufficiently state the ground and consideration. Merry v. Sweet, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 475; Hale v. Sweet, 40 N. Y. 97.

An affidavit of a creditor specifying the indebtedness to him to be "on account of judgment entered against said insolvent, justly due to him from said insolvent," is insufficient as not showing the ground and consideration. Merry v. Sweet, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 475; Hale v. Sweet, 40 N. Y. 97.

The affidavit of a petitioning creditor that a certain sum "is justly due to this deponent from the said insolvent, on a note of hand given by the said E. C. [the insolvent] to this deponent, on a settlement of accounts between us," is insufficient because not stating the nature of the account on which the settlement took place or the general ground of indebtedness. Matter of Cook, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 183.

A specification that the debt is due on a promissory note, without setting forth the consideration thereof, is insufficient. Slidell v. McCrea, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 156; Wright v. Crawford, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 338.

Affidavit Sworn to in Another State. — An affidavit of a petitioning creditor, sworn to before a New York commissioner resident in another state, need not have annexed to it the certificate of the secretary of the latter state, proving the official character of such commissioner, in order to give jurisdiction to the judge before whom the proceedings are pending. Rusher v. Sherman, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 416.

2. People v. Stryker, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 650.

3. M'Clure v. Foreman, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 279.

Arrest in Another County. — An insolvent debtor whose application to be discharged is pending in one county cannot make a second application in another county where he has been arrested and given bond. Caldcleugh v. Carey, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 155.

4. Abbott's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 69.

The Only Mode for a Debtor to Adopt, whose petition has been rejected on a hearing on the merits, is to present a special petition reciting the former proceedings and decision, and ask for a rehearing, which the court will grant or refuse in the exercise of a sound legal discretion. Abbott's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 69.

Insufficient Bonds — Second Application.

— An applicant for the benefit of the insolvent laws who is refused a dis-

2. Petition by Partnership. — A petition by a partnership for the benefit of the insolvent laws must aver the individual insolvency of all the partners,¹ and must show the surrender of all the individual property of each member, and not merely of the partnership property.²

3. Petition by Creditors — a. IN GENERAL. — A petition by creditors to have their debtor adjudged an insolvent should, in general, conform to the requirements of the statute under which it is drawn.³ It should state fully and clearly the claims of the charge on the ground that his bonds are insufficient may immediately after such refusal surrender himself to the sheriff, give new bonds, and make another application for his discharge. Race v. Dehart, 24 N. J. L. 37.

1. Hanson v. Paige, 3 Gray (Mass.) 239; Dearborn v. Keith, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 224.

Sufficient Averment of Insolvency. — A petition in behalf of a partnership, for the benefit of the insolvent laws, which states that "they are indebted" to the amount of two hundred dollars, "which they are unable to pay in full," sufficiently states the insolvency of the partnership and of the partners individually. Hanson v. Paige, 3 Gray (Mass.) 239.

Including Persons Not Partners. — Proceedings in insolvency against a partnership are not rendered invalid as to the actual partners by the including of persons who are not partners. But, on the application of a person thus wrongly included, the Supreme Judicial Court will vacate the proceedings, so far as they relate to him. Hanson v. Paige, 3 Gray (Mass.) 239.

Need Not Allege Partnership. — A petition in voluntary insolvency is not defective because not containing a direct allegation that the petitioners are partners, if that fact fairly appears, taking the petition as a whole. In re Ramazina, 110 Cal. 488.

2. Meyer v. Kohlman, 8 Cal. 44.

Petition, After Dissolution, by One Partner. — One partner, after the dissolution of the partnership, may commence proceedings in insolvency under Stat. 1838, c. 163, § 21, by his sole petition, so as not only to affect his own property and the property of the firm, but also the separate property of his late partners. Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 127.

Reference to Master. — Where proceedings in insolvency, instituted against a partnership on the petition of one partner without previous notice to his co-partners, are suspended by the court, on the application of a partner not so notified, the case will be referred to a master to inquire and report as to the truth of the statements upon which the proceedings were commenced, before making a final decision. Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 127.

3. California — Sufficient Petition. — A petition by creditors under the California Insolvent Act of 1880 is sufficient if it shows that all the petitioners are residents of the state of California, that the demands are due and accrued in that state, the nature and amount of their several demands, and the other facts required by section 8 of that Act. In re Close, 106 Cal. 574.

For a form of a petition by creditors adjudged sufficient under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, see Campbell v. Judd, (Cal. 1885) 7 Pac. Rep. 804.

Should Show Petition by Five Creditors.

— A petition by creditors under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 8, should show that at least five of the petitioners are creditors of the alleged insolvent. In re Russell, 70 Cal. 132.

To Declare Partnership Insolvent. — An averment in a petition by creditors, under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, to have a partnership declared insolvent, that the parties "doing business under the firm name of A & B * * * are indebted," etc., sufficiently shows that the creditors were creditors of the partnership rather than of the individual members. Wright v. Cohn, 88 Cal. 328.

Partnership as Petitioning Creditor. — In a petition by creditors under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 8, if some of the alleged creditors are described therein as firms or copartnerships, the names of the persons comprising the firm need not be given. In re Russell, 70 Cal. 132; In re Denny, 89 Cal. 101; Campbell v. Judd, (Cal.) 7 West Coast Rep. 372.

petitioning creditor or creditors,¹ and should allege the acts of insolvency on which the petition is based.² The doing by a debtor of any of the fraudulent acts enumerated in the statutes is Need Not File Certificate with Clerk.

— A proceeding in insolvency is not an action as defined by section 22, Cal. Code Civ. Pro., but is in the nature of a special proceeding, and is included within section 23 of that Act. Therefore sections 2436, 2468 of the California Civil Code, providing that partnerships doing business in the state under a designation not showing the names of the partners in such business must file a certificate with the clerk, etc., or shall not be allowed to maintain an action, etc., are not applicable to the signers of a petition in involuntary insolvency. In re Dennery, 89 Cal. 101.

Foreign Corporation as Petitioning Creditor. — Where the petitioning creditor is a foreign corporation it is not necessary that the petitioner should allege and exhibit with the petition proof of the fact that it is a legally incorporated body. Whyte v. Betts Mach. Co., 61 Md. 172.

Where Filed. — Under the California Insolvency Act of 1880, § 8, providing that a petition by creditors shall be filed "in the Superior Court of the county, or city and county, in which the debtor resides or has his place of business," it was held that a petition filed against a corporation within a county wherein its mill was located, its operations carried on, its liabilities contracted, and its creditors lived, sufficiently complied with the statute although the residence of the corporation was in another county, and that the creditors might show by parole in what county the corporation had its place of business. Creditors v. Consumer's Lumber Co., 98 Cal. 318.

1. Same as Complaint in Action. — A petition by creditors under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 8, should state the facts showing the indebtedness with the same degree of certainty and fullness as in a complaint in an ordinary action to recover the indebtedness. In re Russell, 70 Cal. 132.

Sufficient Statement of Claim. — The California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 8, provides that a debtor may be adjudged insolvent upon the petition of five or more creditors whose claims aggregate five hundred dollars or more. A petition under this Act stating that the demand is for a certain sum, and accrued for goods sold and delivered by the creditors to the said respondent "within one year last past, at his request," sufficiently states the claim. In re Dennery, 89 Cal. 101.

Need Not Be Described as on Contract or Judgment. — Under the Connecticut General Statute, p. 380, § 7, providing that any creditor having a claim of one hundred dollars or more against a non-resident debtor owning property in that state may institute proceedings for the settlement of the same as an insolvent estate, it is not necessary that the claim should be described in the petition as founded on contract or on a judgment. Ward's Appeal, 52 Conn. 565.

2. Sufficient Petition — California. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 8, prescribing what the creditors' petition must set forth as acts for which a person may be adjudged insolvent, a petition alleging that the debtor made a transfer of his property to one F., with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, and that, in contemplation of insolvency, he made a grant, sale, conveyance, and transfer of his property to the said F., with the circumstances of time, place, and general description of the property sold, is sufficient. In re Patton, 110 Cal. 33.

Maryland. — Under the Maryland Code, art. 48, § 24, a petition by creditors in involuntary insolvency, which states the facts with sufficient certainty and directness to show the acts of insolvency upon which the petitioning creditors rely for the adjudication, sufficiently complies with the statute. Whyte v. Betts Mach. Co., 61 Md. 172.

A petition in involuntary insolvency which alleges that the defendant, being a merchant and engaged in business, and being then insolvent and indebted to the petitioners in an amount exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, did, within sixty days before filing the petition, convey to his wife a mortgage which he then held, and other personal property, with intent thereby to delay, hinder, and defraud his creditors, contains every fact necessary to make the case one of involuntary insolvency under the Maryland statute, and a verdict thereon "for the petitioners" is suffi-ground for proceedings in insolvency against him, without alleging or proving that he is insolvent.¹

Verification. — In California a petition by creditors may conclude with the usual form of verification including matters stated on information and belief.²

Signature. — A petition by a creditor should be signed by the creditor or by one duly authorized.³

b. AMENDMENT. — A petition by creditors may be amended so as to allow creditors who were not originally parties to the petition to become parties thereto on leave of the court;⁴ and it is sufficient to sustain a judgment. Bowland v. Wilson, 71 Md. 307.

Massachusetts. — Under the Massachusetts General Statutes, c. 118, § 103, a petition by creditors for a warrant against an insolvent debtor, alleging that the debtor made two mortgages of his personal property to secure the payment of pre-existing debts to the mortgagees, with intent to secure to them a preference and defraud his creditors, the debtor being at the time insolvent and having reasonable cause to believe himself insolvent, is sufficient without alleging that either of the mortgagees knew or had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent at the time of making the mortgages to them. Lothrop v. Highland Foundry Co., 128 Mass. 120.

Specifying Person to Whom Transfer Made. — Under the Maryland Act of 1886, c. 298, a petition in involuntary insolvency which specifies the person to whom the debtor has "assigned, given, sold, and transferred" his property, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors while insolvent, and in contemplation of insolvency, is sufficient. Castleberg v. Wheeler, 68 Md. 266.

Specification of Particular Acts of Insolvency. — A creditor's petition for a warrant in insolvency which alleges that the debtor, within sixty days, and with intent to defraud the petitioner, "has concealed his property, or some part thereof, to prevent its being attached or taken on legal process," is not so defective as to require the proceedings in insolvency to be quashed after the petitioning creditor, by order of the commissioner, has filed a specification of the particular acts of concealment relied on. O'Neil v. Glover, 5 Gray (Mass.) 144.

Information and Belief. — An affidavit that the facts stated in a petition for a warrant in insolvency against a debtor are true, according to the best knowledge and belief of the person making it, is sufficient to justify the issuing of a warrant. O'Neil v. Glover, 5 Gray (Mass.) 144. And see In re Roberts, 71 Me. 390.

1. O'Neil v. Glover, 5 Gray (Mass.) 144.

2. Wright v. Cohn, 88 Cal. 328.

Where Corporation a Petitioner. — Under a statute requiring that a petition by creditors to have their debtor adjudged insolvent must be verified by three of the petitioners named therein, if one of the petitioners is a corporation the verification may, under § 446, California Code Civ. Pro., be made by the vice-president thereof, without setting out his appointment to that office. In re Close, 106 Cal. 574.

3. The Want of an Authorized Signature to the petition of a creditor under the insolvent laws is ground for setting aside the proceedings. Merriam v. Sewall, 8 Gray (Mass.) 316.

May Be Signed by Attorney. — A petition for a warrant in insolvency against the estate of a debtor may be signed and sworn to by the attorney of the petitioning creditor. O'Neil v. Glover, 5 Gray (Mass.) 144.

4. In re Roberts, 71 Me. 390.

Relates Back to Commencement of Proceedings. — An amendment to a creditors' petition in insolvency, by adding other creditors as parties, relates back to the commencement of the proceedings. In re Roberts, 71 Me. 390.

Other Creditors Prosecuting Petition. — If, after the filing of a creditor's petition for insolvency proceedings on the ground of a fraudulent preference, it is fraudulently agreed between the petitioning creditor and the debtor, in order to carry out such preference and to enable the debtor to obtain his discharge, that the debt of the petitioning creditor shall be paid and the petition dismissed, other creditors are entitled to come in may be amended so as to set forth more clearly the creditors' claim.¹

c. DISMISSAL. — The court may, on motion of the insolvent debtor, dismiss for delay proceedings in insolvency instituted by creditors.²

d. BOND. — The creditors and debtor are alone interested in the bond given by the creditors, and a third party cannot, in a collateral proceeding, raise objection to its sufficiency.³

V. SCHEDULE OF DEBTOR — 1. In General. — It is a general requirement of the insolvency laws, in those states where such statutes exist, that the applicant for a discharge shall present to the court in some form a schedule of his assets and liabilities.⁴ However, the statutes in most of the states are so widely variant and prosecute the petition. Foster v. Goulding, 9 Gray (Mass.) 50.

Withdrawal of Petition — Intervention Too Late. — Connecticut General Statutes, § 507, provides for a petition to the Probate Court by a creditor to have a debtor adjudged insolvent. Section 508 provides that while such proceedings are pending creditors may move to be made parties thereto, and thereafter the original creditor is not allowed to discontinue without the consent of the intervening ones. Where a petitioning creditor withdrew his petition, and thereafter other creditors sought to revive the petition and to intervene, it was held that the proceedings were no longer pending, and if the court revived the petition so as to allow the other creditors to intervene, the petitioning creditors and others interested might sue out a writ of prohibition to check further proceedings. Fayerweather v. Monson, 61 Conn. 431.

1. Merriam v. Sewall, 8 Gray (Mass.) 316.

2. Kornahrens v. His Creditors, 64 Cal. 492.

May Be Commenced Anew. — Where, on motion of an insolvent debtor, proceedings instituted by creditors are dismissed for delay, the proceedings may be commenced anew. Kornahrens v. His Creditors, 64 Cal. 492.

Consent of Creditors — Notice to Parties. — A petition in insolvency should not be dismissed after an adjudication and the issuing of a warrant, unless with the consent of creditors, and after proper notice to all parties interested. McIntire v. Robinson, 81 Me. 583.

Creditors Not Joined. — Under the Minnesota Laws of 1881, c. 148, a petition by creditors may be dismissed by the court without notice to creditors who have not been joined, and who are not known in the proceedings. In re Stoddard, 30 Minn. 553.

3. Mogk v. Peterson, 75 Cal. 496.

Failure to File such bond does not deprive the court of jurisdiction. Creditors v. Consumer's Lumber Co., 98 Cal. 318.

4. California Insolvent Act of 1880, §§ 2, 3; New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2162; and see statutes of other states.

Maryland. — The failure of an applicant for the benefit of the insolvent law to exhibit with his petition "a schedule of his property, and a list of the debts due from and owing to him, with the names of his debtors and creditors, all verified by affidavit," as required by the Maryland Act of 1854, c. 193, § 1, will debar the applicant from obtaining a release from his debts until he does comply with such requirements. Teackle v. Crosby, 14 Md. 14.

Pennsylvania. — A petitioner for relief under the Insolvent Act of April 4, 1798, must exhibit to the court a statement in writing of his losses and the means whereby he became insolvent. Baker's Case, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 462.

Property Assigned. — Where a petitioner for the benefit of the insolvent law has recently made a general assignment for the payment of his debts, he must set forth in some shape the property which passed by the assignment. Woodward's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 107.

Statement in Petition Instead of Schedule. — A summary statement of the insolvent's affairs and a list of his losses may be inserted in his petition instead of his schedule. Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

in their terms and effect that it is difficult to lay down any general rules of practice regarding the debtor's schedule, and the practitioner must, for the most part, be referred to the statutes and the cases collated in the notes.¹

1. Swearing to Schedule.—Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, § 4, the schedule was required to be sworn to "before the judge having jurisdiction;" and where a schedule was sworn to before a notary public it was held that the court had no jurisdiction to decree a discharge. Baker v. Everhart, 65 Cal. 27.

Where a debtor applying for the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act omitted to swear to his schedule when filed, it was held that he might, on good cause shown, be permitted to swear to it at the time of his discharge, nunc pro tunc. Brevard v. Wylie, 1 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 38.

Presenting Schedule in Former Case.—Where a debtor who has been arrested under ca. sa., given bond for the prison rules, filed his schedule, and made application for the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, is arrested under another ca. sa. and gives bond for the prison rules, he need not file a schedule in the second case, but his schedule under the first bond answers for both, and there is no breach of the second bond. Banks v. Ingram, 10 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 28.

It is not necessary that the inventory given by a debtor on discharge from custody, together with his bonds, should be dated or sworn to at the time of his discharge; if he deliver an old inventory, made and sworn to upon a previous discharge from custody, it is sufficient. Race v. Dehart, 24 N. J. L. 38.

Amendment of Schedule.—Under the Georgia Act of 1823 a schedule filed by an insolvent debtor was amendable, provided he showed to the satisfaction of the court, by affidavit or otherwise, that the omission arose from ignorance, inadvertence, mistake, or from inability at the time to make it more perfect. He was required to amend instantly, however, and was not permitted, by doing so, to hinder or delay the creditor. May v. Dawson, 12 Ga. 118.

In the case of a proceeding under the Insolvent Debtors' Law, the court has authority to permit the schedule to be amended so as to make more certain the description of the defendant's interest in matters there set forth, at any time before the oath is administered; and if the plaintiff is surprised it is ground for a continuance. McLeod v. Kirkham, 11 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 509.

Need Not State on What Ca. Sa. Given.—In Kentucky the schedule of property surrendered by an insolvent debtor need not state on what ca. sa. it was surrendered; it is sufficient if that and the magistrate's certificate be attached to the ca. sa. under which the surrender was made, and returned with it. Sheriff v. Buckner, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 127.

Under the Georgia Act of 1823 it was not necessary that the schedule should state that it was filed under ca. sa. issued at the instance of the plaintiff. Rome v. Dickerson, 13 Ga. 302.

California—Must Sign Schedule.—The insolvent must sign personally at the foot of the schedule. Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

Sufficient Signing.—Where an insolvent's schedule consisted of three lists annexed in order to his petition, one of liabilities, one of assets, one of losses, the latter of which lists was signed by him, it was held that this was a sufficient signing of the schedule to protect the proceedings from collateral attack. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162.

On Petition by Creditors' Schedule Need Not Be Verified.—Under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, where a debtor has been adjudged insolvent on a petition by creditors, and, in pursuance of an order of the court, files an inventory and schedule, his creditors cannot resist his discharge on the ground that the inventory and schedule are not verified, verification in such case not being required by the statute. In re Green, 96 Cal. 162.

Kentucky—Schedule Returned to Clerk's Office.—In Kentucky it was held that the schedule of an insolvent debtor who has been taken on ca. sa. should be returned to the clerk's office from which the ca. sa. issued. Sheriff v. Buckner, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 127.

North Carolina—Filing Evidence of Debts.—It is sufficient to file the evi-

It is held in New York that where the judge decides that the insolvent has complied with the provision of the statute relative to the schedule the question as to any omission therein is no longer open.¹

2. Account of Creditors. — The statutes generally prescribe that the schedule shall state the names of the insolvent's creditors, if known.² However, it seems that the omission of the names of certain creditors from the schedule is not sufficient to invalidate the discharge, unless done with fraudulent intent.³

3. Creditors' Place of Residence. — The schedule should generally state the place of residence of each creditor, if known, though great particularity in this respect is not required.⁴

dence of the debts set out in the schedule, which are in the possession and control of the debtor, at any time before the oath is administered. McLeod v. Kirkham, 11 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 509.

1. People v. Stryker, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 650.

2. Where Creditor Unknown. — In California, if the insolvent does not know the name of the owner of notes executed by him, he must state that fact in his schedule. Judson v. Atwill, 9 Cal. 477.

Substantial Compliance with Statute. — Where an insolvent's schedule did not contain the name of a creditor who was the assignee of a note imperfectly described in said schedule, nor state affirmatively therein that the insolvent was ignorant of such name, or that the owner of the note was unknown to him, but did state in the petition to which the said schedule was attached, that the schedule of his debts and liabilities annexed to his petition contained the names of his creditors "as near as he can now state them," it was held that this was a substantial compliance with the statute requiring the insolvent to set forth in his schedule the names of his creditors, if known. Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530.

Idem Sonans. — Where a creditor named "Charles Storrs" did not appear in the list of creditors, but the name "Charles Stores" did appear, it was held to be a case of idem sonans, and that this was a sufficient designation of the creditor. People v. Sutherland, 81 N. Y. 1.

Name Omitted by Advice of Counsel. — The debtor cannot excuse the omission of the creditor's name from his sworn schedules by showing that he omitted it under advice of counsel that he had a good defense to that debt; and in such case, the objection to the granting of the discharge is not cured by the subsequent insertion of the name. Starr v. Patterson, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 19.

3. Williams v. Coggeshall, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 442; American Flask, etc., Co. v. Son, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 333; Small v. Graves, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 577; Hall v. Robbins, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 33; Ayres v. Scribner, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 407; Clinton v. Hart, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 375; Lester v. Thompson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 300. But see Starr v. Patterson, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 19.

A discharge under the Insolvent Law of Pennsylvania was held valid though the petitioner failed to mention in the list of creditors returned to the court the name of the plaintiff at whose suit he was imprisoned, provided he gave the creditor the notice prescribed by the court. Com. v. Cornman, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 2.

Omission Question for Jury. — A question as to whether a name in the list of creditors, variant from that of the plaintiff, was intended to designate him, or whether his name was omitted, and whether the omission was fraudulent, is properly submitted to the jury. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

4. Residence of Creditor. — Under N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 2162, requiring the schedule filed with the debtor's petition to state the place of residence of each creditor, schedules containing the street numbers, but failing to state the city, town, or village of the creditors' place of residence, are fatally defective and give the court no jurisdiction to proceed. Matter of Cohen, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 69, 18 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 156.

4. Statement of Liabilities. — The schedule accompanying an insolvent's petition should contain a statement of his liabilities and describe the same.¹ However, there is no special reason for much exactness of detail in the enumeration of debts and losses,² and want of particularity is no ground for dismissing the proceedings.³

Cause and Consideration of Indebtedness. — The insolvent's schedule should specify the true cause and consideration of his indebtedness to each creditor.⁴

Failure to Designate State. — The schedule accompanying a debtor's petition in insolvency showed that some of the creditors resided at "Eureka" and others at "San Francisco." It was held that the better practice would be to indicate in the schedule the state as well as the locality within the state of each creditor's residence, but that judicial notice would be taken that both "Eureka" and "San Francisco" were incorporated cities in the state of California. In re Choze, 112 Cal. 630.

Failure to State Residence Will Not Avoid Discharge. — In Massachusetts it is held that a failure to state the residence of schedule creditors, if not done wilfully and fraudulently, will not of itself avoid a discharge. Williams v. Coggeshall, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 442.

1. Amount Due Each Creditor. — The schedule annexed to the insolvent's petition, naming his creditors, should state the amount owing to each creditor named therein, in order to confer a jurisdiction on the officer. Where the schedule was in blank as to the sum owing to one of the creditors named therein, it was held that the defect was jurisdictional, rendering the discharge void. Stanton v. Ellis, 12 N. Y. 575.

An Unintentional Misstatement of the amount due any creditor will not of itself avoid a discharge. Small v. Graves, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 576; Williams v. Coggeshall, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 442.

Sufficient Statement of Losses. — Where the schedule of losses, after specifying certain bad debts, states that the petitioner "has lost large amounts of other bad debts, as well as by the depressed condition of business, high rates of interest, and heavy expenses, as mentioned in petition herewith filed," it was held that the schedule was not fatally defective as not giving a list of losses. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162.

Schedule Presumed Correct. — It will be presumed that a schedule presented by an insolvent states a just account of his debts and credits. Hewlett v. Hewlett, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 7.

2. Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

Sufficient Description. — Where the description of an insolvent's debts is but imperfectly made in his schedule, but is sufficient to enable the creditor to indemnify his own judgments against the insolvent, it is a sufficient compliance with the statute to effect a discharge from such debts. Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530.

Mistake as to Nature of Debt Not Material. — Where an insolvent's schedule described a debt as a note of a certain tenor in suit in a certain court, when in fact the debt had passed into judgment a short time before the filing of the insolvent's petition, it was held that the variance was not fatal; that a mistake as to the condition of the insolvent's indebtedness — as whether reduced to judgment or not — is not material if the indebtedness be so described as to enable the holder readily to identify it. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162.

Debts Not Described, or Imperfectly Described. — If the insolvent desires to be discharged from debts not described, or imperfectly described, in his schedule, he must so state in his petition. Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

3. Bennett v. His Creditors, 22 Cal. 38.

4. Slidell v. McCrea, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 156; McNair v. Gilbert, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 344.

Sufficient Statement of Cause and Consideration. — If the specification of the cause and consideration of the debts due and owing by an insolvent debtor, set forth in his inventory, pursuant to the Act of February 28, 1817 (Sess. 40, c. 55), fairly apprises the creditors of the general ground of indebtedness, so as to give them a clew to inquiry, it

5. Statement of Assets. — It is a general rule that the petitioner's schedule must contain a full and true account of all his property.¹

Summons to Garnishees. — In some jurisdictions, where the petitioner's schedule shows that debts are owing to him, the persons owing such debts may be summoned to appear before the court and answer on oath concerning such indebtedness.²

is sufficient. Taylor v. Williams, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 21.

A judgment was rendered against a debtor for money loaned and an open account for beer sold and delivered. After the recovery of the judgment the debtor applied for a discharge in insolvency, and in the schedule of his debts accompanying the petition the debt of the plaintiff and the amount thereof were entered, and the cause and consideration thereof were stated as follows: "Notes and open account for money loaned and interest thereon." This was held to be a sufficient statement of the true cause and consideration of the indebtedness to confer jurisdiction, and to entitle the debtor to a perpetual stay of proceedings on the judgment. Schaeffer v. Soule, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 583.

Failure to State Consideration. — In Massachusetts it is held that a failure to state the consideration for scheduled debts, if not done wilfully and fraudulently, will not of itself avoid a discharge. Williams v. Coggeshall, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 442.

Matter for Judge's Determination. — Where it appears from the papers that the true cause and consideration of the alleged indebtedness of an insolvent debtor to the creditor are not set forth in the schedule annexed to the petition as the statute requires, this is a matter proper for the consideration and determination of the judge who hears the petition. People v. Stryker, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 649.

1. Joint Property of Partnership. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, where partners petitioned in their joint name for a discharge in insolvency it was held that a schedule attached to the petition showing the surrender of all the joint property of the partners was not a compliance with the act which required a surrender of all the property of the insolvent. Meyer v. Kohlman, 8 Cal. 44.

Omission of Notes and Securities. — Where, on application by a debtor for a discharge in insolvency, it appeared that he held certain notes and securities which he had not stated in the account of his property, it was held that the application must be denied until he should make a proper statement. Billing's Case, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 258.

Fraudulent Concealment. — Where an insolvent debtor omitted to insert in the inventory of debts due to him a claim on the United States for services during the war, for which claim he received a compensation after his discharge, it was held that the concealment was fraudulent, and his discharge void. Duncan v. Dubois, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 125.

Omission from Mistake or Misapprehension. — Where the petitioner omits to return a debt due to him, from plain mistake or misapprehension, or an honest conviction that the worthlessness of the claim rendered its return useless, the mere fact of omission, under such circumstances, will not defeat the petition. Oliver's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 112.

Property Exempt from Execution. — A petition by a debtor for a discharge under the Michigan Comp. Laws, c. 168, which professes to set forth in the schedule only such property as is not exempt from execution, is erroneous. Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 500.

Georgia — Sufficient Statement. — If the creditors are so apprised by the schedule as to the nature of the assets as to be enabled to hunt them up, it is sufficient. Rome v. Dickerson, 13 Ga. 302.

A schedule with the oath of the insolvent debtor appended that he had no property or effects of any kind whatever, except as excepted in the oath prescribed by law for insolvent debtors, was held to be sufficient under the Georgia Act of 1823. Lindsey v. Hunter, 18 Ga. 50.

2. Sufficient Summons. — A summons of a garnishee named in an insolvent's schedule, requiring him to appear on a certain day before the court and answer on oath as to whether he is indebted as in the schedule alleged, is

VI. NOTICE — 1. To Creditors — a. NECESSITY FOR. — It is a general requisite of all insolvency acts, that the creditors of the applicant shall be in some way notified of the institution of the proceedings, so that they may be afforded an opportunity for opposing the discharge.¹

b. SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE — (1) In General. — The requirements of the insolvency acts in the different states, regarding the notice to be given to creditors in insolvency proceedings, are so widely variant that no general rules of practice can be laid down in relation thereto, and the practitioner can only be referred to the statutes and the decided cases in the notes.² The notice sufficiently certain. Sheriff v. Buckner, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 127.

To Answer Whom. — Where an insolvent claims in his schedule a debt due to himself, the summons against the debtor should not be to answer any particular creditor of the insolvent. M'Coun v. Sheriff, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 362.

Issuable in Sheriff's Name. — Where an insolvent debtor files his schedule, summonses issued thereon to garnishees named in the schedule are properly issuable in the name of the sheriff of the county wherein the garnishees reside. Sheriff v. Buckner, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 127.

1. New York Code Civ. Pro., §§ 2164, 2165; California Insolvent Act of 1880, §§ 6, 7. And see the statutes of the different states. Starr v. Scott, 8 Conn. 480; Ullman v. Lion, 8 Minn. 381; Jay v. Slack, 4 N. J. L. 86; In re Remington, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 435; Ex p. Cantey, 11 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 520. See also Cavan v. Dunlap, Cheves L. (S. Car.) 241; Matter of Sessions, 6 R. I. 17.

In Stanton v. Ellis, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 319, it was held that in proceedings by an insolvent debtor, in pursuance of the statute relating to "voluntary assignments made pursuant to the application of an insolvent and his creditors," a due publication of notice of the hearing and legal proof thereof was necessary to give the officer jurisdiction, and to authorize the granting of a discharge which should bar the claims of creditors.

Discharge Operates Only Against Notified Creditors. — Under the North Carolina Insolvent Debtors' Law of 1822, Rev. Stat., c. 58, § 10, the discharge of a debtor arrested on a ca. sa. at the instance of a creditor operated only against those creditors who had been duly notified under the provisions of that act. Williams v. Floyd, 5 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 649.

Accidental Omission to Give Notice. — A debtor in insolvency proceedings will not lose his right to a discharge by an accidental omission to give the required notice to one or more creditors. Hogan v. Hutton, 20 N. J. L. 82; Weeks v. Buderus, 39 N. J. L. 448.

Fraudulent Omission, however, of any one or more of the creditors is fatal to the jurisdiction. Berry v. Arthur, 13 N. J. L. 308.

Continuance to Give Notice. — Where notice to creditors had not been published the case was continued until the next term, with leave to the petitioner to publish the notice required by the Pa. Act of April 5, 1855. In re Remington, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 435.

Objection Too Late. — After exceptions have been filed to the schedule of an insolvent debtor, and he has been put on his trial, the plaintiff has no right to object that legal notice has not been given that the defendant would apply for his discharge. Rice v. Sims, 3 Hill L. (S. Car.) 5.

Tennessee — Notice to Attorney-General. — Under the Tennessee Act of 1812, c. 25, § 4, where a defendant has been fined in a state cause and is ordered into custody until the fine and costs are paid, he is not entitled to take the oath of an insolvent debtor without giving ten days' notice to the attorney-general. Rogers v. State, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 368.

2. Georgia — Sufficient Notice. — Where notice was given by an insolvent debtor to his creditors that he would apply at the next term of the Superior Court for an order appointing a time to hear his application for a discharge, and at that term he moved to take the oath, and the creditor was present by counsel and made no com-should, of course, be in compliance with the statute under which the applicant seeks relief, in order to confer jurisdiction on the court or officer.¹

plaint that he was surprised by the form of the notice, it was held that the notice was sufficient. Taylor v. Hughes, 27 Ga. 224.

Maine — Sufficient Notice. — Under the Maine Statute of 1878, c. 74, § 15, it is sufficient notice to the debtor if an attested copy of the creditors' application and the warrant of the judge are left at his last and usual place of abode. In re Roberts, 71 Me. 390.

Maryland — Sufficient Notice. — A knowledge that a party is negotiating or compromising with his creditors, accompanied by the actual information that he was generally considered insolvent in his neighborhood, is, in contemplation of the Maryland Act of 1834, c. 293, notice of insolvency. Brooks v. Thomas, 8 Md. 367.

Massachusetts — Twenty-four Hours' Notice. — A citation issued under Stat. 1844, c. 154, to a creditor, to attend the examination of a debtor arrested on mesne process at his suit, and desirous to take the poor debtors' oath, must be served on the creditor at least twenty-four hours before the time appointed for the examination, adding one hour for travel for each mile from the place of service to the place appointed for the examination. Park v. Johnston, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 265.

North Carolina — Ten Days' Notice. — When a person has been arrested on a ca. sa., and given bond for his appearance at court to take the insolvent debtors' oath, and the case is continued till the next term of the court, a notice served on his creditors ten days before the term to which the case is continued is a sufficient notice under the act for the relief of insolvent debtors. Watson v. Willis, 2 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 17.

South Carolina — Three Months' Notice. — Under the South Carolina Insolvent Law three months' advertisement in a newspaper is sufficient notice to suing creditors generally of an application for the benefit of the act. Cavan v. Dunlap, Cheves L. (S. Car.) 241. See also Ex p. Cantey, 11 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 520.

Mistake in Date. — In Briggs v. Hobson, 3 Ala. 404, a notice published in a newspaper that the debtor would appear at a place designated "on Saturday, the 28th July next," and render a schedule of his property as an insolvent debtor, when in fact the 28th of July was Friday, was held sufficient.

Error Corrected by Record. — Where the petition of an insolvent was indorsed, "Filed this twenty-sixth day of May, 1879," and the order for creditors to show cause was dated February 27, 1879, it was held that the error was of such a character that it might be corrected by the record, which showed unmistakably that the order was not made until after the petition was filed. Smith v. His Creditors, 59 Cal. 267.

1. Not Served in Prescribed Manner. — Where, in an action on a debt which the debtor claimed to be barred by his discharge in insolvency, it appeared from the record that notice had not been served on the creditors in the manner prescribed by statute, it was held that the court did not acquire jurisdiction, and could not allow the debtor to show that notice had in reality been properly served. Billinge v. Pickert, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 504.

An Unsigned Notice of an order made by a judge who was not the officer before whom the proceeding was pending, requiring the creditors to show cause, etc., is not a compliance with the statute, and the defect is not cured by the discharge. People v. Gray, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 468.

Publication in Newspaper. — The fact that a petitioning debtor omitted to give personal notice of the proceedings to a creditor who impeaches the discharge does not invalidate the discharge where notice was duly published in a newspaper, which is all that the statute requires. American Flask, etc., Co. v. Son, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 333.

Act of Legislature Need Not Be Designated. — In the published notice to creditors to show cause, the particular act of the legislature under which the applicant seeks relief need not be designated. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

Failure to Name Street or Number. — The fact that notice to a creditor was directed to him without naming the street or number, does not render the notice insufficient if it appears that the debtor did not know the street or

(2) Notice by Publication.—Some of the statutes prescribe that the judge shall issue an order directing the creditors to show cause, which order shall be published for a certain period in a newspaper.¹ Where the statute directs that such notice shall be published for a certain number of successive weeks the publication must be made once in each week,² and the period between number. People v. Sutherland, 81 N. Y. 1.

Errors Merely Clerical, and such as would not mislead or prejudice a creditor, in the notice and papers served on him under § 14, N. Y. Act of 1831, do not affect the jurisdiction of the judge to whom the petition is presented. People v. Behrman, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 81.

Creditor Residing Without the State.—Where creditors objected to an insolvent's discharge on the ground that notice had not been served on the creditor residing without the state, the court held that a person out of the state was to be considered, as to the purpose of a service under the Insolvents' Act, as not to be found. In re Williams, Col. & C. Cas. (N. Y.) 114.

California — Need Not Run in Name of State.—The notice to be given creditors, under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, on filing a petition in insolvency, is not process; and even if it were process, the fact that it does not run in the name of the people of the state of California is not a fatal error going to the jurisdiction. Brewster v. Ludekins, 19 Cal. 162.

1. California Insolvent Act of 1880, §§ 6, 7; New York Code Civ. Pro., §§ 25, 26; and see the statutes of other states.

California — Thirty Days' Publication.—Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, as amended in 1860, the notice to creditors in insolvency proceedings was required to be published for the first time at least thirty days before the day fixed for the creditors to appear and show cause why the prayer of the alleged insolvent should not be granted; and if not so published a judgment of discharge rendered by default was void. McDonald v. Katz, 31 Cal. 167.

Sufficient Notice.—On the petition in insolvency by a debtor, the court made an order "that the clerk of this court make publication of this notice in the Union Advocate, a newspaper published in said county, for a meeting of the creditors on the 29th day of November, 1862, at my office in Auburn, to contest said discharge as prayed for, and that said publication be made for at least thirty days preceding said date." It was held that this order complied substantially with section 5 of the California Insolvent Act of 1852, requiring the court to order a meeting of the creditors. Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92.

Judge Need Not Designate Paper.—Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, where the order for the meeting of creditors directed notice to be published in the Woodland Democrat, and the notice was published in the Woodland Daily Democrat, it was held that the publication was sufficient, as the statute did not direct the judge to name the paper in which the notice was to be published. Steele v. His Creditors, 58 Cal. 244.

The Date of Publication of notice to creditors, under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, was the first day on which the notice was published. Clarke v. Ray, 6 Cal. 600.

Omission of "Junior" from Debtor's Name.—The Court of Common Pleas refused to discharge a petitioner for the benefit of the insolvent laws, because of the omission, in the advertisement of his application, of the word "Junior" after his name. It was held that there was no remedy for the petitioner but to make his application de novo. Blanchard's Case, 15 N. J. L. 478.

2. Ullman v. Lion, 8 Minn. 381, wherein it was held that where the notice required was to be given by publication in two designated newspapers once in each week for ten successive weeks, an affidavit of publication for ten weeks, without stating that it was once in each week, was insufficient.

Not More than Seven Days Apart.—Under the California Insolvent Act, requiring publication of notice "at least once a week for four successive weeks," it was held that the publications should be not more than seven days apart, and therefore where the publication began on October 31, 1878, the first publication and the day set for hearing must extend over that number of full weeks.¹

c. PROOF OF NOTICE. — Due notice to creditors to show cause may be proved by affidavit,² and the affidavit of the proprietor of the newspaper in which the notice was printed is competent evidence for that purpose.³ It is held that proof of publication and ended on December 5, 1878, it was insufficient. Hernandez v. His Creditors, 57 Cal. 333.

New York — Duration of Individual Publication. — Under 2 Birdseye's N. Y. Rev. Stat., p. 1584, ¶ 17, no length of time is prescribed for the duration of each individual publication of the notice. The statute only prescribes the number of publications, namely, ten publications, each of which is to be successively within one of ten successive weeks, and fixes no definite period of publication. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

1. Anonymous, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 90.

Sixty-eight Days Not Ten Weeks. — Where the statute requires the notice to creditors to be published for ten successive weeks, the period of publication must extend over ten full weeks; and where the time between the first publication and the day appointed to show cause was only sixty-eight days, it was held that the court acquired no jurisdiction. People v. Gray, 19 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 238, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 468.

California — Sufficient Publication. — Under the California Statute of 1863, p. 750, amending the Insolvent Act of 1852, the county judge, on the filing of the insolvent petition, was required to order the clerk to issue notice calling the creditors to appear on a specified day, not less than thirty days from the first publication of the notice. Where the first publication was on December 7, 1878, and the return day on January 6, 1879, it was held that the order of the judge and the publication thereunder was a sufficient notice to the creditors. Dean v. Grimes, 72 Cal. 442.

Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, p. 69, providing that the judge shall direct the clerk of the court to issue the notice calling the creditors of the insolvent to appear upon a specified day, not less than thirty days from the first publication of such notice, where the clerk issued the proper notice to the creditors to appear on the first day of December, and the first publication was made on November 1, it was held to be sufficient. Wilson v. His Creditors, 55 Cal. 476.

2. Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, proof of the publication of the notice to creditors in insolvency proceedings may be made by affidavit. Schloss v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 201.

Affidavit Sworn before Wrong Officer. — Where the statute provides before whom affidavits of the publication of a notice for creditors to appear and show cause, when an application is made by the insolvent debtor for his discharge, shall be sworn to, an affidavit sworn before an officer not mentioned in the statute is of no force or validity. Stanton v. Ellis, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 319.

Affidavit of Service by Mail. — An affidavit presented in insolvency proceedings as proof of notice to creditors averred that the printed notice was served "on each of the following named persons, on the days and in the manner next herein specified;" then followed a list of names of persons under the heading, "Names of creditors," and in a column parallel with the list, and on the same line with each name, a statement of the city or town of residence. After the list was the averment: "By depositing, 1860, April 9th, in the post-office, in the city of Brooklyn, a letter envelope directed to each of the foregoing creditors at the place of residence hereinbefore designated, and in each envelope was a printed notice, of which the following is a true copy, and on each envelope so directed was placed a post-office stamp to pay the legal postage of each letter to its place of destination." It was held that these averments were sufficient to show due service by mail. People v. Sutherland, 81 N. Y. 1.

3. Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530.

Proof Not Limited to Printer's Affidavit. — Proof of publication of notice to creditors to show cause is not limited by statute to an affidavit of the printer, or the clerk or foreman of the printer, although it enables the insolvent to perpetuate the evidence by taking their affidavit. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

is not a jurisdictional fact.¹ In Massachusetts service of notice may be proved by the officer's return.²

2. Notice to Debtor. — Where proceedings are instituted against a debtor to have him adjudged insolvent, notice thereof must be served upon him in the manner prescribed by statute.³

Proceedings Against Partnership. — On the institution of proceedings to adjudge a partnership insolvent, all the partners are entitled to notice.⁴

1. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48, wherein it is held that where a discharge recites due publication, and that due proof thereof was presented, defects in the notice, in its publication, or in the proof thereof on file will not render the discharge void.

Proof of Publication Not Part of Record. — On appeal from a judgment in favor of an assignee in involuntary insolvency, the recitals of an order appointing an assignee in insolvency are sufficient proof of the publication of the notice to creditors, there being no provision of the California Insolvent Act of 1880 making the proof of publication a part of the record. Ohleyer v. Bunce, 65 Cal. 544.

2. Smith v. Randall, 1 Allen (Mass.) 456, wherein it is held that an officer's return which sets forth a service of a notice to a creditor of a debtor's application to take the poor debtor's oath, at a magistrate's office, by leaving a copy thereof at the creditor's last and usual place of abode known to the officer, on the day of the examination and "before" one hour previous to the time appointed therefor, without stating how long before, is sufficient, under Mass. Stat. 1857, c. 141, § 4, to give the magistrate jurisdiction to administer the oath.

Insufficient Proof. — An officer's return stating that a citation to attend at the examination of a debtor was served on the creditor on a certain day, without specifying the hour, when in fact the notice was sufficient if served before, but not if served after, a certain hour on that day, is not sufficient evidence that the citation was duly served. Park v. Johnston, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 265.

3. Whyte v. Betts Mach. Co., 61 Md. 172; Buck v. Sayles, 9 Met. (Mass.) 459; Thompson v. Snow, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 121; Com. v. Martin, 130 Mass. 465.

Formerly, in Massachusetts, notice to the debtor was not requisite. Kimball

v. Morris, 2 Met. (Mass.) 573; Wheelock v. Hastings, 4 Met. (Mass.) 504.

Actual Knowledge Not Sufficient. — The Massachusetts General Statutes, c. 118, § 104, provide that on a petition by a creditor there shall be "notice of the petition given to the debtor by a copy thereof served upon him personally, or left at his last and usual place of abode." Where the debtor has not been served in such a manner, actual knowledge of the filing of the petition in insolvency against him is not sufficient to support an indictment against him, on section 106, for secreting a portion of his estate after "notice" of filing. Com. v. Martin, 130 Mass. 465.

Debtor Appearing Without Required Notice. — Where, after an order of adjudication made without the required statutory notice to the debtor, he appeared to the proceedings, it was held on appeal that while the court would reverse the order of adjudication, it would remand the case in order that the debtor might have an opportunity to show cause against the adjudication prayed for, and to have the benefit of trial as provided for by statute. Whyte v. Betts Mach. Co., 61 Md. 172.

4. Where a warrant in insolvency is issued against partners on the petition of a creditor, without previous notice to them, a formal waiver of notice, filed by one of the partners with the commissioner, does not make the proceedings good as against his copartner. Thompson v. Snow, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 121.

Petition by Member of Firm. — Under the Maine Rev. Stat., c. 70, § 57, providing that on the petition in insolvency by one partner, notice shall be served on the remaining partners, it was held that where one of two members of a partnership, by the direction of the other, filed a petition signed in the name of the firm, official notice to the latter was not necessary. Engel v. Bailey, 82 Me. 118.

VII. BOND BY DEBTOR. — Where a debtor gives a bond to apply for a discharge in insolvency he is bound to keep in motion the proceedings which are to result in the discharge, and if he fails to do so the condition of the bond is forfeited.¹ If the debtor fails to file his petition at the specified time the court cannot grant relief against the forfeiture of the bond.²

VIII. EXAMINATION — 1. Of Insolvent. — There is generally a provision in the insolvency statutes allowing creditors to examine the insolvent debtor on oath concerning his assets and liabilities.³

insolvency against a partnership on the petition of one partner, notice to the other partners, though not prescribed by law, may be required by the commissioner in his discretion, and any partner not so notified may apply to the Supreme Court, under Stat. 1838, c. 163, § 18, to suspend and vacate the proceedings, on showing that the partnership is not insolvent, and that there was no foundation for the allegation of insolvency on which the proceedings were instituted. Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 127.

1. Bartholomew v. Bartholomew, 50 Pa. St. 194; Com. v. Grimes, 116 Pa. St. 450; McDonough's Case, 37 Pa. St. 275.

In Haviland v. Hayward, 35 Pa. St. 459, it was held that a bond given under the Pa. Act of July 12, 1842, § 11, is forfeited by the omission to apply by petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws within thirty days from the date thereof; it is not enough that the application be made at the next term of the Court of Common Pleas.

Sufficient Compliance. — Where a petitioning debtor came into court after the hour of adjournment on the day fixed for the hearing of the petition, and finding the court adjourned immediately surrendered himself to the keeper of the county prison, it was held that the condition of the bond was complied with, and there could be no recovery thereon against the surety. Greenwaldt v. Kraus, 148 Pa. St. 517.

Any Objection to a Bond given by an insolvent debtor arrested under a ca. sa. must be made at the court to which the bond is returnable, and before judgment is rendered upon it. Watts v. Boyle, 4 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 331.

2. No Power to Relieve Surety. — Where the bond has become forfeited by the failure on the part of the debtor to file his petition in time to be heard at the general period fixed for the term, the court has no power to relieve the surety by allowing the petition to be filed and heard at a later day. Claxton's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 102.

Execution Against Debtor. — Where a bond is forfeited by the failure on the part of the debtor to file his petition in time to be heard at the general period fixed for the term, execution may be issued against him the moment it can be legally ascertained that he has not complied with the terms of the law. Simmons v. Hoopes, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 35.

Will Not Hear Objection to Judgment. — If, upon a ca. sa. from a justice of the peace, returnable to the County Court instead of being returnable before a justice out of court within three months, the person arrested gives bond to appear at the County Court to take the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Law, and he fails to appear at the time appointed, and the court renders judgment against him and his sureties, it cannot hear any objection, even at the same term of the County Court, against such judgment. Dobbin v. Gaster, 4 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 71.

3. On Application of Receiver. — In California, the Superior Court has jurisdiction to make an order requiring a debtor to appear and be examined touching the affairs of his estate, upon the application of a receiver. Goodday v. Superior Ct., 65 Cal. 580.

Examination at Any Time Before Discharge. — Under Massachusetts Stat. 1838, c. 163, § 23, a judge of probate may issue a warrant to arrest and imprison a debtor for refusing to obey his order that the debtor appear at a third meeting of his creditors, and produce a schedule of his debts, and submit to an examination on oath concerning his estate. It seems that the judge may, at any time before granting the debtor a certificate of discharge, require him to submit to an examination on oath. Kimball v. Morris, 2 Met. (Mass.) 573.

Supplementary Proceedings — After Discharge. — An order to a discharged in-

2. Of Persons Charged with Concealing Property. — Under some statutes, one who is duly charged with having fraudulently received and concealed property belonging to the estate of an insolvent debtor may be examined on oath touching the same and required to disclose all such matters as may not tend to criminate him.¹

IX. OPPOSING DEBTOR'S DISCHARGE — 1. In General. — When a debtor applies to be discharged from his debts, his creditors may appear in the proceedings and oppose the discharge.² It is held solvent to appear for examination in supplementary proceedings, founded upon a judgment barred by the discharge, will not, on motion of the insolvent, be vacated. Smith v. Paul, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97.

Refusal of Officer to Examine. — The refusal of a commissioner of insolvency to permit a creditor to examine an insolvent debtor will not avoid a discharge. The remedy, if any, is by an application to the Supreme Court under Mass. Stat. 1838, c. 163, § 18. Blanchard v. Young, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 341.

An Oath Administered to a Petitioner that he shall make true answers to all such questions touching his application for a discharge in the matter pending as shall be put to him, is sufficient in form. People v. Behrman, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 81.

Charges Made in Terms of Statute. — In a petition under the Minnesota Insolvent Law, § 10, as amended by the Laws of 1889, c. 30, § 7, asking an order that the insolvent remain within the jurisdiction of the court, and appear for examination, the charges may be made in the general terms of the statute as found in said amended section. Matter of Harrison, 46 Minn. 331.

Extent of Examination. — Where insolvent debtors produced at the meeting of the creditors the affidavit required by Maine Rev. Stat., c. 70, § 62, and at the same time produced an agreement signed by a majority of their creditors, as required by said section, and the affidavit and agreement were duly filed in the court of insolvency, it was held that creditors who were not parties to the agreement could not afterwards examine the debtors generally upon all matters relating to their insolvency, but that the debtors could be examined only as to whether the required proportion of creditors had signed the agreement, and whether the agreed percentage had been paid or secured to the creditors. Messer v. Storer, 79 Me. 512.

All Legal and Pertinent Interrogatories. — Opposing creditors or their counsel may propound interrogatories to the debtor in respect of his giving an inventory to the officer who arrested him; and it is the duty of the court to allow all interrogatories that are legal and pertinent. Bond v. Cox, 30 N. J. L. 381.

1. Sawin v. Martin, 11 Allen (Mass.) 439.

Wife of Insolvent. — If the wife of an insolvent debtor is duly charged with having fraudulently concealed property which belonged to her husband previous to his insolvency, it is the duty of the judge of insolvency, under Mass. Gen. Stat., c. 118, § 107, to examine her on oath touching the same. Church v. Choate, 9 Allen (Mass.) 573.

2. Any Creditor May Oppose. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, any creditor of an insolvent debtor had a right to be made a party to the proceedings for the purpose of opposing a discharge or obtaining his proportion of the estate, whether he was named in the assignment or not. Lambert v. Slade, 4 Cal. 337.

Need Not Be Judgment Creditor. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, a creditor was not required to be a judgment creditor in order to oppose the discharge of the insolvent. Davenport v. His Creditors, 62 Cal. 29.

Assignee, as Schedule Creditor, May Oppose. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, on a petition for discharge by an insolvent debtor, the assignee, being a schedule creditor, might, like any other creditor, oppose the insolvent's discharge on the ground of fraud. Hinkel v. His Creditors, 63 Cal. 328.

In Illinois Any Person Interested may appear and object to the discharge of a debtor or to his right to schedule. Kitson v. Farwell, 132 Ill. 327.

that the opposing creditor must state, in his specification of the grounds of his opposition, facts which if denied will raise material issues, and if admitted or established will constitute valid grounds of opposition to the discharge.¹

Vacating Proceedings. — In Massachusetts the Supreme Judicial Court is given a supervisory jurisdiction over insolvency cases, and will, for sufficient cause, vacate proceedings for a discharge.²

California — Debtor's Answer Must Be Verified. — Where insolvency proceedings were commenced under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, which did not require the answer of a petitioner to the opposition of a creditor to be verified, but prior to the filing of the answer the legislature had passed the Insolvent Act of 1880, which requires verification of the pleadings, it was held that the Act of 1880 governed pleadings filed after its passage, and therefore the answer must be verified. Struven v. His Creditors, 62 Cal. 45.

Proceedings Not Removed under Suggestion. — Where a creditor opposes the discharge of a debtor in insolvency, the proceedings cannot be removed, under a suggestion, to an adjoining county. Michael v. Schroeder, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 227; Trayhern v. Hamill, 53 Md. 91.

Failure to File Specifications. — Where, upon the appearance of an insolvent at the County Court, a suggestion of fraud was made, but no specifications were filed in that court, it was held that the case was not in a state to be carried to the Superior Court by appeal, certiorari, or otherwise. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 2 Jones L. (N. Car.) 319.

1. Dyer v. Bradley, 89 Cal. 557; Dyer v. Martin, (Cal. 1891) 26 Pac. Rep. 1105.

Charge of Fraud. — If, in the opinion of the creditors, the schedule of the insolvent is defective, they should reach the defect by making a charge of fraud, and on the trial examine the insolvent on oath, and in that way, not by demurrer, elicit information as to his affairs. Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

Allegation Amounting to Charge of Fraud. — An allegation in an opposition to an insolvent's discharge that he has collected debts due him since he filed his petition, and has failed to account for the money and pay it over to his assignee, amounts to a charge of fraud. The allegation ought to state from whom the money was received; but if not objected to on that ground, the objection is waived. Grow v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 328.

No Assignee Appointed. — On opposition by creditors to the discharge of an insolvent on the ground that no assignee had been appointed, it was held that the appointment of an assignee rested with the court and creditors, and the creditors having failed to appear at the time fixed for the appointment of an assignee, the discharge of the insolvent could not be denied on that ground. In re Harris, 81 Cal. 350.

As to the jurisdiction of this court in insolvency cases, see supra, II. 2. b. Supervisory Jurisdiction in Supreme Court.

Decree Conclusive on Subsequent Application. — A decree of the Supreme Judicial Court in equity, affirming the validity of the proceedings in insolvency upon a petition of the debtor to set them aside, is conclusive against any subsequent application by a creditor to set aside the proceedings on the same and other grounds, even if this creditor had no notice of the first petition to the Supreme Court. Merriam v. Sewall, 8 Gray (Mass.) 316.

Lack of Jurisdiction. — Proceedings in insolvency commenced before a judge who has no jurisdiction will be set aside on a bill in equity filed under the Stat. of 1838, c. 163, § 18, more than a year after. Grafton Bank v. Bickford, 13 Gray (Mass.) 564.

Record Need Not Be Annexed. — To a bill in equity to set aside proceedings in insolvency there need not be annexed a copy of the record of the proceedings. Cheshire Iron Works v. Gay, 3 Gray (Mass.) 531.

A Judge of a Court of Insolvency Is Not a Proper Party defendant to a bill in equity in the Supreme Court to vacate

2. Time of Entering Opposition. — The time for entering opposition to a debtor's discharge is regulated by statutes in the various states.¹

3. Waiver of Opposition. — If creditors who have been notified of the proceedings fail to oppose the discharge at the proper time, they thereby waive their objections except as to matters which the statute declares shall avoid the discharge.²

proceedings in insolvency. Winchester v. Thayer, 129 Mass. 129.

1. An application for a discharge in insolvency is a special proceeding in the nature of an action. The petition, schedule, and affidavit are the pleadings on the part of the petitioner, who is the plaintiff; and if they are sufficient to entitle him to a discharge, any irregularity or defect in form must be taken advantage of before judgment, by his creditors, who are defendants in the proceeding. Kohlman v. Wright, 6 Cal. 230.

Under the Georgia Act of 1823, when an insolvent debtor filed his schedule at the first term of the court after his arrest, the creditor who desired to traverse the schedule so filed, and to suggest fraud or concealment of any property not embraced in said schedule, was required to do so at the first term of the court after his arrest, and was not allowed to do so at any subsequent term thereafter, unless for sufficient and good cause shown to the court. Coleman v. Dickerson, 10 Ga. 551.

Under the Maine Rev. Stat., c. 70, § 44, the appearance of the opposing creditor must be entered on the day appointed for the hearing, and where a creditor enters his appearance and files objections on a subsequent day, the objections should be dismissed as irregular. Dow v. Young, (Me. 1887) 9 Atl. Rep. 893.

Under Massachusetts Stat. 1844, c. 178, § 4, the dissent of a majority in value of the creditors of an insolvent debtor, who have proved their claims, must be filed within six months after the assignment in order to defeat his discharge. Crocker v. Stone, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 341.

Stay of Execution. — Where a judgment creditor appeared to oppose an insolvent's discharge, and after examining the defendant and hearing his explanations withdrew, without making any further opposition, but afterwards took out execution on his judgment, it was held that on motion of the insolvent the court would order a perpetual stay of execution against the plaintiff. Field v. Howland, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 85.

Joining All Creditors in One Issue. — Where a debtor is arrested under different ca. sa.'s, at the instance of several creditors, he has a right, under the North Carolina Act of 1836, Rev. Stat., c. 58, § 20, if he applies for his discharge as an insolvent debtor and fraud is suggested in answer to his application, to require that all the creditors he may notify shall join in the trial of one issue, and the court will so direct. But this is for the case of the debtor, and he may waive the privilege of joining issue with each creditor, and then a verdict in his favor in one case will not discharge him from responsibility in the case of another creditor. Williams v. Floyd, 5 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 649.

Fraudulent Transfer. — Where, to a schedule filed by an insolvent debtor, a creditor alleged in his specifications that two notes had been fraudulently transferred to secure a feigned debt, and the jury found these allegations to be true, whereupon the debtor filed a new schedule, admitting that the debt secured was feigned, but to acquit himself of the fraud alleged that the trustee had run away with the funds and he surrendered all his claim upon the trustee, it was held that the creditor was entitled to make suggestions of fraud, and to have an issue as to all the matters set out in the new schedule concerning the fraudulent transfer of these notes. *Farrar v. 1. Nixon v. Nunnery, 9 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 28; Freeman v. Lisk, 8 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 211.

2. The statement exhibited under oath by a petitioner for the benefit of the insolvent laws is taken to be prima facie correct; and the burden of proving it to be erroneous lies upon the opposing creditors, who can show it from the examination of the petitioner himself, by other evidence, or in both modes, they having the right to examine the petitioner in the first instance, and then to exhibit other testimony to contradict him. Hassinger's Case, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 287.

Showing Lack of Jurisdiction. — In a proceeding for a discharge in insolvency, although enough may be made out to show a prima facie case of jurisdiction in the first instance, yet if the party opposing the application, at the proper stage of the proceedings, shows that the supposed jurisdiction is founded upon a misstatement or misapprehension of the facts, the judge or officer should dismiss the application and proceed no further in the case. Matter of Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134.

3. Wilson v. His Creditors, 32 Cal. 406.

Objection Equivalent to Demurrer. — Where a creditor opposes the discharge of an insolvent upon the ground of fraud, an objection by the insolvent that the matters charged as fraud in the creditor's written opposition do not amount to fraud is equivalent to a demurrer, and will be overruled if any of the charges are sufficient. Grow v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 328.

Right to Call for Affidavits. — Before requiring a defendant who applies for his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act to join in an issue to try the fairness of his schedule, there ought to be some showing by affidavits; but if the plaintiff, without affidavit, makes the charge by suggestion, and the defendant pleads, he waives his right to call for affidavits; he admits by his plea that there is something to be tried by a jury. Baker v. Bushnell, 1 McMull. L. (S. Car.) 66.

4. Brangon v. His Creditors, 64 Cal. 394.

In Massachusetts, however, a dissent to the discharge of an insolvent debtor, filed by one of his creditors within six months after the assignment, pursuant to Stat. 1844, c. 178, § 4, cannot be withdrawn by the creditor without the judicial consent of the master in chancery, obtained upon the creditor's written application, after notice to other creditors interested. Beverly Bank v. Wilkinson, 2 Gray (Mass.) 519.

5. New York — Delivery of Property to Assignee. — Before an order can be made discharging an insolvent debtor from arrest, evidence must be given that he has actually delivered to the assignee the property directed to be assigned. Borthwick v. Howe, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 505; Kennedy v. Boggs, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 403.

Massachusetts — Taking Oath at Second Meeting of Creditors. — A discharge of an insolvent debtor under Stat. 1838, c. 163, is invalid if the debtor does not, at the second meeting of his creditors,

Mandamus to Compel Discharge. — It has been held that where justices refused to grant an insolvent's application for a discharge, mandamus would lie to compel them.¹

2. Effect of Discharge — a. IN GENERAL. — A final discharge in insolvency releases the debtor from all such debts as are contemplated by the statute,² and if further proceedings are brought against him on such debts, he may plead his discharge as a defense thereto.³ On motion, the court will grant a perpetual stay of execution on a judgment barred by the discharge.⁴

b. AS EVIDENCE. — It is held that the recitals of a discharge are conclusive evidence of all the facts recited therein except the jurisdictional facts.⁵ Of the latter facts they are only prima facie evidence.⁶

take and subscribe the oath required by section 7 of that statute. Cox v. Austin, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 32.

Third Meeting Within Six Months of Assignment. — No discharge in insolvency is valid, even as against a creditor who proves his claim and is himself the assignee, unless the third meeting of the creditors is held within six months from the time of the assignee's appointment. Crocker v. Stone, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 341.

Under Mass. Stat. 1848, c. 304, § 9, it was held that a discharge might be granted within less than six months from the date of the assignment. Williams v. Coggeshall, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 443.

California. — Discharge by Judgment of Court. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, an insolvent's discharge must be by the judgment of the court, and in the same county in which the proceeding was instituted. Turner v. McIlhany, 6 Cal. 287.

1. Harrison v. Emmerson 2 Leigh (Va.) 764. But see State v. Passaic C. P., 38 N. J. L. 182, wherein it is held that mandamus will not be allowed to require the Court of Common Pleas to discharge an insolvent debtor because a dissatisfied creditor fails to pay the weekly sum for his support. The proper remedy to review an order refusing the discharge is a writ of certiorari. See also Blanchard's Case, 15 N. J. L. 478.

Notice to Owner of Judgment. — After a discharge in insolvency, the insolvent cannot have a judgment against him canceled and discharged without notice to the owner of said judgment, and an order canceling the judgment on such motion will be vacated on motion of the owner of the judgment. Wheeler v. Emmeluth, 121 N. Y. 241.

Discharge from Arrest. — Where a discharged insolvent is arrested on ca. sa. on a judgment barred by the discharge, his remedy is to apply to the court from which the process issues to be discharged from arrest. Dorr v. McClintock, 2 Miles (Pa.) 190; State v. Walsh, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 406.

New York — Failure to File Petition. — The New York Laws of 1866, p. 235, c. 116, provide that within three months after the granting of a discharge in insolvency the petitions on which the discharge is granted must be filed and recorded, or the discharge shall be inoperative until they are duly filed and recorded. Under this Act a failure to file the papers within three months leaves the discharge inoperative until they are filed, and a levy made meanwhile is valid and is not affected by the subsequent filing of the petition; but if subsequently filed, the discharge is made operative from the time of filing upon debts which were due at or before the granting of a discharge. Barnes v. Gill, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 169.

Need Not Produce Record. — Where the

XI. IMPEACHING DISCHARGE — 1. In General. — It is a general rule, that after a debtor has been discharged in insolvency, a creditor may, for sufficient reason, attack and set aside the discharge.¹ The attacking creditor should use reasonable diligence in impeaching the discharge.²

discharge recites all the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction, it is not necessary to produce the record in evidence. O'Connell v. Sutherland, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 460, note; Barber v. Winslow, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 102; Jenks v. Stebbins, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 224.

Not Evidence of Oath. — The recital in the certificate of discharge that the debtor has "in all things conformed himself to the directions" of the insolvent law is not prima facie evidence that he made and subscribed the oath required of him by that law. Cox v. Austin, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 32.

Fiduciary Debts. — A certificate of a discharge under the insolvent laws of this commonwealth need not contain a statement of an exemption of the fiduciary debts of the debtor under Mass. Stat. 1844, c. 178, § 3, if no such debts existed. Williams v. Coggeshall, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 442.

Proof of Notice. — Where an insolvent's discharge stated that "the said insolvent has conformed in all things to those matters required of him by the said statute," it was held sufficient in form without setting forth that due proof was furnished of the notice having been given personally or by mail, twenty or forty days before the day of showing cause, etc. Pratt v. Chase, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 150.

1. One Who Is Not a Creditor of the insolvent and has no interest which has been or can be affected by his discharge cannot sue out a certiorari for the purpose of having the discharge vacated. People v. Stryker, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 650.

Without Joining Other Creditors. — One creditor may prosecute a certiorari to review and set aside an insolvent's discharge, without naming the other creditors in the writ as plaintiffs in certiorari. Browning v. Cooper, 18 N. J. L. 196.

After Opposing Discharge. — Although a creditor appears in insolvency proceedings and opposes the discharge of the debtor, this fact will not preclude him from afterwards objecting to the validity of the discharge on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the officer to grant it. Small v. Wheaton, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 306.

Cannot Claim Share in Funds. — Creditors of an insolvent will not be permitted to come into court and claim a share in the funds arising from the sale of the insolvent's property, and, at the same time, impeach the adjudication by which he was adjudged insolvent. Gottschalk v. Smith, 74 Md. 560.

Defect Cured by Discharge. — The fact that the petitioning creditors do not represent two-thirds of the aggregate of the insolvent's debts is sufficient to prevent his being discharged; but after a discharge has been granted it cannot be avoided for that mere fact, if there was no actual fraudulent act or intent of the insolvent originating that defect in the proceedings. Emberson's Case, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 457.

In Wheeler v. Emmeluth, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 369, the court said: "Not every omission or error will make insolvent proceedings void. If honestly prosecuted, the inclination and duty of the court will be to disregard errors that have not caused injury."

A Court of Equity Has No Jurisdiction to set aside an adjudication in insolvency or dismiss such a proceeding upon allegations of fraud therein. If the debtor has no right to apply for a discharge from the claims of his creditors, they will have an opportunity of showing them and preventing his discharge in the insolvency proceedings. Pehrson v. Hewitt, 79 Cal. 594.

Compliance with Statute Question for Court. — Whether one claiming a discharge under an insolvent act has strictly complied with its provisions, is a question of law for the court, and not one of fact for the jury. Schloss v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 201.

2. Delaying Too Long. — Where creditors have manifested no interest in the insolvency proceedings, and have expressed themselves as expecting an adjustment of matters outside of court, an erroneous decree in insolvency will not be corrected at their instance when they have delayed some months, during which the decree has been acted upon, money disbursed, and other interests,

2. How Impeached — a. DIRECT PROCEEDINGS — (1) Petition to Annul. — In Maryland it is provided that a creditor may, within two years after the insolvent's discharge, file allegations of fraud and have issues made thereon and tried by a jury; and such issues being found against the insolvent, his discharge shall be rescinded.¹

(2) Certiorari. — Objections to a discharge in insolvency which are formal in their nature, and not relating to the jurisdiction, should be taken advantage of by certiorari to the discharging court.² Such objections cannot be raised in collateral proceedings.³

b. COLLATERAL ATTACK — (1) In Action — Jurisdictional Defects — The recitals of a discharge in insolvency are not conclusive proof of the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction on the court, and, where a defendant pleads his discharge in bar of an action, including those of attached creditors, have intervened. Clafin v. Lowe, 157 Mass. 252.

Delay Caused by Debtor. — Where, after an application by an insolvent for discharge, a stipulation was entered into to take the matter off of the calendar, to be reinstated upon stipulation or by notice by the attorney for the petitioner, and afterwards, without giving such notice, the plaintiff procured his discharge, it was held that the creditors could attack the discharge although the time for filing had expired, for, at the time of entering into the stipulation, such time had not expired. In re Wolfe, 81 Cal. 652.

1. Maryland Code, art. 47, § 21.

Allegations of Fraud. — A petition under this statute to annul an order of discharge should allege especially the fraudulent acts relied on, and that such fraudulent acts were unknown to the petitioner prior to the final order of discharge. Goodwin v. Selby, 77 Md. 444.

The Jurisdiction of the court to dispose of a case in insolvency, upon a petition by creditors to rescind and annul a discharge, attaches immediately upon the filing of the petition within the time prescribed. Jaeger v. Requardt, 25 Md. 231.

Jury Trial. — The filing of a petition to rescind and annul a discharge in insolvency is a preliminary proceeding, and secures to the party alleging himself to be a creditor the right to have issues made upon the material facts set out in his petition, to be tried by jury. Jaeger v. Requardt, 25 Md. 231; Goodwin v. Selby, 77 Md. 444.

The Duty of the Court, when a petition to annul and rescind a discharge is filed, is to direct the framing of issues, and to determine whether the facts presented therein, if found by the jury, would convict the insolvent of having acted in derogation of the provisions of art. 47, Md. Code, and if the issues be found against the insolvent, to annul and rescind his discharge. Jaeger v. Requardt, 25 Md. 231.

2. Rusher v. Sherman, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 416; Pratt v. Chase, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 150.

3. Friedlander v. Loucks, 34 Cal. 18; Luhrs v. Kelly, 67 Cal. 289; State v. Culler, 18 Md. 419; Pratt v. Chase, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 150; Rusher v. Sherman, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 416. And see People v. Stryker, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 649; Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92.

Immaterial Defect. — The omission in the affidavit of service of the notice to creditors to insert the deponent's name in the commencement of the caption is not a defect for which a discharge can be avoided collaterally. O'Connell v. Sutherland, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 460, note.

Discharge Reciting Necessary Facts. — Where a final judgment of discharge in an insolvency proceeding recites that "the requirements of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors and protection of creditors, and all orders of the court herein, have, in every respect, been fully complied with and performed by said petitioner," this sufficiently shows the existence of all the facts necessary to uphold the judgment when collaterally attacked. Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92.

the plaintiff may avoid it by showing that the court in reality had no jurisdiction.¹

Formal Objections to the discharge, not relating to the jurisdiction, cannot be raised in collateral proceedings; the proper remedy is by certiorari.²

(2) On Motion. — Formerly, in New York, it was held that on a motion by a discharged insolvent for a stay of execution, or a discharge from custody, the validity of his discharge would not be tried on affidavits.³ But it is now expressly provided in the Code of Civil Procedure that the validity of the discharge may be attacked on such motion.⁴

XII. DISCHARGE AS A DEFENSE — 1. How Set Up — a. GENERALLY. — It is the general rule, that where an action is brought against a debtor on a cause of action which he claims to be barred by a discharge in insolvency, he must, if he has an opportunity to do so, plead his discharge,⁵ and if he fails to plead it the Insufficient Disproof of Recitals. — Where a discharge recites all the requisite jurisdictional facts and proceedings, the county clerk's certificate that certain papers, technically insufficient to show jurisdiction, are all that have been filed with him in the proceedings is not of itself sufficient to disprove the recitals. Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

In Order to Test the Validity of the discharge the creditor was required to bring an action where, upon the defendant's pleading his discharge in bar, the plaintiff might impeach it. Noble v. Johnson, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 259; Smith v. Paul, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97; Rich v. Salinger, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 344.

Retaining Levy. — Although the court would not try the validity of the discharge on a motion for stay of execution, yet it was proper to retain the lien of the levy and order issues to be framed, that the question might be tried by a jury. Cramer v. —, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 700; Stuart v. Salhinger, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 291. But see Dresser v. Shufeldt, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 85.

Discharge Pendente Lite. — In an action brought against an insolvent debtor the court may grant a continuance in order to allow the defendant to obtain his discharge in insolvency,³ and, having obtained it, the defendant may plead it nunc pro tunc.⁴ But if he neglects to plead it and allows judgment to be perfected against him, the discharge will not avail him as a defense.⁵

In Spencer v. Beebe, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 557, it was held that an insolvent discharge under the New York Act of 1813 could not be given in evidence in bar of an action commenced since the Revised Statutes went into operation, unless it was pleaded specially, or notice thereof was given with the general issue.

Bail May Plead Debtor's Discharge. — The bail of a judgment debtor may, in an action upon the recognizance, plead the discharge of his principal under a state insolvent law. Beers v. Haughton, 1 McLean (U. S.) 226.

1. Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65; Cable v. Cooper, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 152.

2. No Relief on Motion. — Where a defendant has an opportunity to plead his discharge and fails to do so, the court will not give effect to it on motion. Lee v. Phillips, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 246; Post v. Riley, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 54; Price v. Peters, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 197.

Failure to Plead through Mistake of Law. — If a defendant neglects to plead his discharge under the Insolvent Act, in an action for a debt contracted previous to his discharge, and suffers the regular time for pleading the same to elapse, under a mistaken idea of the law, the court will not permit him afterwards to withdraw a relicta given by him at the circuit, in order to plead his discharge. Ackerman v. Van Houten, 10 N. J. L. 332.

Appellate Court Will Not Relieve on Summary Application. — Where a defendant omits to plead his discharge in insolvency at the trial the appellate court will not afford him relief on his summary application. Cross v. Hobson, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 102.

A Court of Equity Will Not Interfere to Restrain Execution of a judgment at law upon the ground that the defendant had been discharged under an insolvent act, prior to its rendition, and that it was not entered subject to such discharge, where the insolvent failed to plead his discharge at the trial. Katz v. Moore, 13 Md. 566.

3. Continuance in Discretion of Court. — It is within the discretion of the court in which an action is pending to grant a continuance of an action, so as to allow the defendant to obtain and plead a discharge in insolvency. Sullings v. Ginn, 131 Mass. 479.

Vermont — Motion for Continuance. — Under the Vermont Revised Laws, § 1797, providing that a suit instituted against an insolvent debtor after the filing of his petition shall, on application of the debtor, be stayed to wait the determination of the Court of Insolvency upon the question of the discharge, a formal application in the nature of a motion for continuance must be made to the court; and a plea in bar merely setting up the insolvency proceedings will not be treated as such a motion. Rusbits v. Hilliard, 57 Vt. 60.

4. Morgan v. Dyer, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 255; Desobry v. Morange, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 336. And see Mechanics' Bank v. Hazard, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 392.

On Scire Facias to Revive Judgment. — Where a debtor obtained a discharge in insolvency on the same day that a judgment by default was rendered against him, it was held that, on scire facias to revive the judgment, he could plead his discharge specially, as he had no opportunity to plead it in the original action puis darrein continuance. Lloyd v. Ford, 12 N. J. L. 151.

5. Mechanics' Bank v. Hazard, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 392; Valkenburgh v. Dederick, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 133.

In Desobry v. Morange, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 336, it was held that where a defendant obtained his discharge under an insolvent act after a declaration in a suit against him had been filed, he ought to plead his discharge at or before the next term, or where no default for want of a plea had been entered until after the next term, at least before entry of a default; and if he neglected to

b. WHEN NO OPPORTUNITY FOR PLEADING. — Where the defendant is unable to obtain his discharge in season to plead it, the court will allow him the benefit of it, by motion or otherwise, according to the nature of the measure taken against him, or the proceeding from which he seeks relief.¹

c. PROOF OF DISCHARGE. — Where a defendant sets up a discharge in insolvency as a defense, he may prove it by the production of the discharge without producing the whole record, if the discharge recites the jurisdictional facts.²

2. Form of Plea. — It is the general rule of the common law, that in pleading an adjudication of a court or officer of special jurisdiction, the facts conferring jurisdiction must be stated. Therefore when a defendant pleads a discharge in insolvency he should, in the absence of any statute to the contrary,³ distinctly state all the facts necessary to give the discharging officer do so he would not be allowed, after judgment had been perfected, to plead his discharge nunc pro tunc.

1. Lloyd v. Ford, 12 N. J. L. 151; Palmer v. Hutchins, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 42. And see Cornell v. Dakin, 38 N. Y. 253; World Co. v. Brooks, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 212.

Discharge After Judgment Rendered. — Where, after judgment in an action, the defendant procures a discharge in insolvency, as he has in such case no opportunity to plead the discharge he will be relieved on motion, and a perpetual stay of proceedings of the judgment given him will be granted. Parkinson v. Scoville, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 150; Baker v. Taylor, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 165.

Discharge on Same Day Judgment Rendered. — Where the defendant obtains his discharge under an insolvent act, on the same day that judgment is rendered against him, the court will discharge him on motion. Baker v. Ulster C. P., 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 191.

2. O'Connell v. Sutherland, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 460, note.

Discharge Not Conclusive of Jurisdictional Facts. — A discharge in insolvency is conclusive evidence of the statutory proceedings and facts therein recited, except those necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the officer granting it. The discharge is not conclusive evidence of the latter facts. Stanton v. Ellis, 12 N. Y. 575. Compare Jenks v. Stebbins, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 224.

The Burden of Proving that all the proceedings in insolvency under which a defendant claims a discharge were regular and conformable to the statute is upon the defendant throughout the case, but the certificate of his discharge is prima facie evidence of such regularity. Blanchard v. Young, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 341.

Failure to Recite Jurisdictional Facts. — Where the order of discharge fails to recite, as required by the New York Code Civ. Pro., § 2203, that the petition was "in writing," "signed by the party," with a "schedule annexed," proof of those facts on the trial in which the discharge is pleaded is sufficient to show that the court had jurisdiction. Schaffer v. Riseley, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 6.

3. Present New York Doctrine. — Under the New York Code Civ. Pro., § 532, it is not necessary in pleading a discharge in insolvency to state the facts conferring jurisdiction on the officer who granted it. It is sufficient to state that such discharge was duly granted. Livingston v. Oaksmith, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 183.

California. — Under the California Code Civ. Pro., § 456, it is sufficient, in pleading a discharge in insolvency, to allege that the judgment was duly given or made. Hanscom v. Tower, 17 Cal. 518.

In Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530, it is held that where the defendant pleads a discharge obtained in the County Court in bar of an action it will be presumed that the County Court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, upon production of the retord of the proceedings alleging such jurisdiction, without other proof of the essential jurisdictional facts; this is because County Courts are courts of record.

jurisdiction of the proceedings.¹ The want of proper averments in the plea to give jurisdiction cannot be supplied by recitals in the discharge.² In order to serve as a bar to the (N. Y.) 491; Roosevelt v. Kellogg, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; Sackett v. Andross, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 327; Spencer v. Beebe, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 557.

Sufficient Plea.—In a plea of a discharge under the Insolvent Act it is sufficient, after stating enough to give jurisdiction to the judge or officer granting the discharge, to say that such proceedings were thereupon had, etc., that the judge or officer granted the discharge, and to set forth the same verbatim. Roosevelt v. Kellogg, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 208. And see Service v. Heermance, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 91.

Should Set Out Discharge.—Where a discharge in insolvency is pleaded in bar of an action, the plea should set forth a copy of the discharge. Jordan v. Pulsifer, 84 Me. 137; Cruger v. Cropsey, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 242; White v. McCaughey, (R. I. 1897) 36 Atl. Rep. 840.

Waiver of Objection.—Where a plea failed to set forth such copy, but it was introduced in evidence without objection from the plaintiff, it was held that the objection was waived. Jordan v. Pulsifer, 84 Me. 137.

Should Show Conformity with Statute.—If an insolvent who has obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Act undertakes to plead specially, and to state all the proceedings in relation to his discharge, he must state a conformity, in every respect, to the directions of the act; and if he does not state the facts correctly, and especially if he omits to state that at least three-fourths of his creditors in amount subscribed to his petition, etc., so as to give the judge jurisdiction, the plea is bad. Frary v. Dakin, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 75.

Where the statute provides that the debtor shall be indebted to the petitioning creditor in not less than a specified sum, a plea of discharge which does not expressly aver that the insolvent was indebted to the creditor on whose application the proceedings were had, in a sum not less than the specified sum, is bad on general demurrer. Wheeler

v. Townsend, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 247.

Should Show Residence.—Where, by statute, residence for a certain period in the county wherein the discharge is obtained is essential and confers jurisdiction on the court or officer, a plea of a discharge in insolvency must allege such residence. Morgan v. Dyer, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 161; Otis v. Hitchcock, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 433; Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 316. And see Smith v. Bennett, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 479.

Sufficient Showing of Residence.—If the plea states that the insolvent was a resident of the county in which the application was made by him, it is tantamount to saying that he was an inhabitant of that place. Roosevelt v. Kellogg, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 208.

An averment in a plea of a discharge in insolvency that the defendant was "of the county" to a judge of which he presented his petition for a discharge is sufficient to give the judge jurisdiction. Porter v. Miller, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 329.

In California, however, it is held that when the judgment discharging an insolvent is presented in a collateral proceeding, it will be presumed that the court was informed of the fact of residence in some proper mode, before taking jurisdiction, although it is not stated in the petition. Barrett v. Carney, 33 Cal. 530.

Notice to Plea of General Issue.—A notice subjoined to a plea of the general issue that the defendant will give in evidence a discharge in insolvency need not state the proceedings previous to the discharge, that the defendant was imprisoned or impleaded, and a resident, etc., but those facts, although not stated in the notice, may be proved by the proceedings on file. Hines v. Ballard, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 491.

A notice subjoined to a plea of the general issue that the defendant will give in evidence a discharge in insolvency is sufficient if it states that the defendant has been discharged, the commissioner's name, and the date of discharge. Hines v. Ballard, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 491.

2. Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 316; Wheeler v. Townsend, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 247.

action, the plea must answer the declaration.¹

Verification by Record. — Where a discharge in insolvency is a matter of record, if pleaded in bar of an action, the plea should conclude with a prout patet per recordum.²

3. Reply. — To the defendant's plea of a discharge in insolvency the plaintiff may reply facts showing that the discharge is void for want of jurisdiction in the discharging court.³ The plaintiff should specify the particular grounds upon which he seeks to avoid the discharge.⁴

4. Discontinuance by Plaintiff Without Costs. — Where, after the

1. Where an action was brought against a discharged insolvent on a judgment rendered against him before his discharge in insolvency, he pleaded his discharge, alleging that "claims on which this suit was brought were all of them claims founded on contract, and existing at the time of the assignment." It was held that the plea was not an answer to the declaration, inasmuch as the costs of the suit, equally with the original debt, entered into the judgment. Waterman v. Curtis, 30 Conn. 135.

2. Murphy v. Richards, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 279.

3. Jurisdictional Defects in the discharge may be taken advantage of in collateral actions. See supra, XI. 2. b. (1) In Action.

Formal Defects not relating to the jurisdiction are not open to collateral attack; advantage can be taken of them only in direct proceedings. See supra, XI. 2. a. (2) Certiorari.

Noncompliance with Statute. — If a discharge in insolvency is pleaded in defense to an action upon a promissory note, the plaintiff may reply that the defendant's estate paid less than fifty cents on the dollar upon the debts proved, and that a majority in number of his creditors who had proved their claims did not assent to the granting of the certificate of discharge. Kelman v. Sheen, 11 Allen (Mass.) 566.

Omission of Property from Schedule. — Where a defendant pleaded, in an action on a promissory note, a discharge in insolvency, it was held that the court should allow the plaintiff to show in answer to the plea that the defendant had intentionally omitted from the schedule annexed to his petition certain property owned by him. Dean v. Baker, 64 Cal. 232.

Duplicity in Replication. — To a plea of a discharge under the Insolvent Act the plaintiff replied that the defendant had procured a creditor to sign his petition and make affidavit for a larger sum than was due to him; and that he had concealed a debt due to him which he did not insert in his inventory, and also that he had been guilty of perjury. On a demurrer the replication was held bad as containing three distinct and independent grounds for avoiding the discharge, which would require several distinct points to be put in issue. Cooper v. Heermance, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 315.

Admission of Jurisdiction. — A replication that a discharge in insolvency pleaded in bar to a recovery was obtained per fraudem admits the jurisdiction of the officer who granted the discharge, and estops the plaintiff from showing that two-thirds of the creditors did not unite in the petition for the discharge. Ayres v. Scribner, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 407.

Objection Cured by Verdict. — Under Massachusetts General Statutes, c. 118, § 79, a fiduciary debt is not barred by a discharge in insolvency. Where a defendant pleaded a discharge in bar of an action, and the record did not show that the cause of action was not a fiduciary debt, it was held that after a verdict for the defendant it was too late for the plaintiff to show that the debt was fiduciary, and so not barred by the discharge. Halpine v. May, 100 Mass. 498.

4. Service v. Heermance, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 96.

Objections Not Specified or No Avail. — Where a discharge under the insolvent laws is pleaded, and the plaintiff files a specification of the grounds on which he shall seek to avoid the discharge, he cannot be permitted at the trial to take objections to the validity of the discharge not mentioned in his specification. Williams v. Coggeshall, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 377.

commencement of an action, the defendant obtains a discharge in insolvency, the plaintiff may be allowed to discontinue without costs,¹ although the defendant stipulates not to avail himself of his discharge as a defense to the action.²

XIII. DECLARING ON NEW PROMISE. — In declaring in an action brought upon a new promise to pay a debt barred by a discharge in insolvency, the plaintiff may set forth the original cause of action, and in his replication aver the new promise.³

XIV. SUITS BY ASSIGNEE, TRUSTEE, OR RECEIVER — Authority to Sue. — In a suit by an assignee, trustee, or receiver of an insolvent, claiming in his fiduciary character, the plaintiff must show that he is clothed with such character and is authorized to bring the suit.⁴

1. Merritt v. Arden, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 91; Ashworth v. Wrigley, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 145; Case v. Belknap, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 422; Honeywell v. Burns, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 121; Merchants' Bank v. Moore, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 294; Ludlow v. Hackett, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 252; Hellman v. Licher, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 288.

Action Sounding in Tort. — A plaintiff may discontinue without costs if the defendant obtains an insolvent discharge after suit commenced, though the action be trespass. Merritt v. Arden, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 91.

Defendant Must Have Obtained Discharge. — Though the defendant be insolvent, the plaintiff will not be allowed to discontinue his suit without costs unless the defendant has obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Act. Collins v. Evans, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 333.

If the Plaintiff Proceeds in the Cause, although aware of the defendant's discharge in insolvency, he must, if he afterwards discontinues, pay the costs accruing since the discharge. Ludlow v. Hackett, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 252.

When the Plaintiff Takes Issue upon a plea of an insolvent's discharge, and the issue is found for the defendant, the plaintiff is subject to the costs of the trial. Conklin v. Lupton, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 30.

2. Honeywell v. Burns, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 121; Ashworth v. Wrigley, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 145.

3. Depuy v. Swart, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 135; Fitzgerald v. Alexander, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 402.

In Shippey v. Henderson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 178, where the defendant pleaded his discharge in insolvency to a declaration in assumpsit, and the plaintiff replied that subsequently to the defendant's discharge, and before the commencement of the suit, the defendant assented to, ratified, renewed, and confirmed the promise mentioned in the declaration, it was held that the new promise was sufficiently laid and the replication was not a departure from the declaration.

Conditional Promise. — If the promise to pay a debt barred by a discharge in insolvency be conditional, it must be alleged as a conditional and not as an absolute promise in the replication, or the plaintiff cannot recover. Wait v. Morris, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 394.

Proving New Promise Without Alleging It. — Where a discharge in insolvency is pleaded to an action on a promissory note, if no replication is ordered by the court the plaintiff may prove a new promise without having alleged it. Cook v. Shearman, 103 Mass. 21.

4. For a full discussion of such suits, see the articles ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS, vol. 2, p. 865; also the articles RECEIVERS; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

Showing Authority of Trustee. — To establish the right of a trustee in insolvency to sue, the plaintiff, under the general issue, must prove everything essential to the showing himself clothed with the character and authority of a trustee, which cannot be done by the production of the certificate of the commissioners of insolvent debtors and the final discharge of the insolvent, only, but all the proceedings must be exhibited. Winchester v. Union Bank, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 73.

Assignment Conclusive Evidence. — In a suit prosecuted by an assignee of an insolvent debtor, under Mass. Stat. 1838, c. 163, for any debt, right, etc., due or belonging to such debtor, the assignment is conclusive evidence of the plaintiff's authority to sue, although

A plea of the general issue in such suit does not admit the character in which the plaintiff sues.¹

Leave of Court. — Where an assignee is required to obtain leave of the court before bringing suit, a complaint which does not show that he has obtained such leave is defective.²

Foreign Assignee. — It has been held that an assignee in insolvency has no absolute right to bring suit in his own name in another state, although it may be allowed as an act of courtesy if there be no adverse interests to be affected.³

XV. APPEALS — 1. Who May Appeal. — The question as to what there may have been irregularities and errors in the preliminary proceedings. Wheelock v. Hastings, 4 Met. (Mass.) 504.

Sufficient Showing of Character. — In a complaint by the assignee of an insolvent, the averment that the plaintiff was appointed by an order "duly given and made" is a sufficient showing of his appointment; no averment that notice was given to the creditors before the appointment of the assignee, or that they failed to act, or that the plaintiff was competent to be appointed, need be made. Bull v. Houghton, 65 Cal. 422.

It was objected to a petition to the Insolvency Court for an order requiring a person to appear for examination that it purported to be brought by two assignees, but was signed and sworn to by only one person, and by him without official addition, so that it did not appear that he was a "person interested in the estate," as required by Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 70. The court held that the person signing the petition, by doing so, impliedly affirmed that he was the person of the same name alleged in the body of the petition to bring it as assignee; and that the words "the above named," used before his name in the affidavit to the petition, identified the person sworn as the person named in the petition. Clement v. Bullens, 159 Mass. 193.

Bond. — In a suit in chancery by the permanent trustee of an insolvent debtor it is necessary to show that the complainant gave bond with surety, in that character, before filing his bill. Stewart v. Stone, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 510.

Coming In on Death of Insolvent. — The assignee of an insolvent debtor may be admitted after the death of the debtor to prosecute an action brought by the debtor and still pending in court, although he does not move for leave to come in at the term next after his appointment or next after the debtor's death. Bacon v. Williams, 11 Gray (Mass.) 222.

Alleging Debtor's Insolvency. — In an action by an assignee of an insolvent to recover goods sold by the insolvent within thirty days next preceding his adjudication in insolvency, it is a sufficient showing of the vendor's insolvency at the time of the sale if the complaint alleges that "at the time of the attempted sale of his said stock of goods, wares, merchandise, and fixtures above described, as hereinafter stated, and for a long time prior thereto, the said J. G. was, and ever since then he has been, indebted to various persons in large sums of money, and during all said times was and still is unable to pay his debts from his own means as said debts became due, and then was and still is an insolvent debtor." Fitzgerald v. Neustadt, 91 Cal. 600.

Suit in Name of Assignee. — A negotiable promissory note, passed lawfully by force of the statute into the hands of the assignee of the promisee, who was an insolvent debtor, was by the assignee sold to the original promisee and sued by the latter in the name of the former. It was held that the action could be maintained in this form. Pitts v. Holmes, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 92.

1. Winchester v. Union Bank, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 73.

2. Jewett v. Perrette, 127 Ind. 97.

The receiver of an insolvent debtor, under the statute, may maintain an action, without first obtaining leave from the court, to avoid a disposition of property whereby a creditor is preferred. Moore v. Hayes, 35 Minn. 205.

persons are entitled to appeal from an adjudication in insolvency proceedings is controlled entirely by statute. It may be stated in general that the right to appeal is usually confined to persons aggrieved or injured by such order or judgment.¹

2. When Appeal Lies—a. IN GENERAL.—Since proceedings in insolvency are wholly statutory, it follows that no appeal will lie from any order therein unless provided by statute.² There is so little uniformity regarding this subject in the statutes of the different states, that it is impossible to lay down any general rules as to when an appeal will lie. The practitioner can, for the most part, only be referred to the statutes, and the cases cited in the notes.³

1. For a general discussion of appeals by persons aggrieved or injured, see article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 167 et seq.

Attaching Creditor.—Conn. Gen. Stat., § 507, provides for proceedings by creditors to have a debtor adjudged insolvent. Section 523 provides that proceedings in insolvency shall dissolve all attachments of the property of the debtor made within sixty days next preceding. Where, on a petition by a creditor, the Probate Court adjudged a debtor insolvent, it was held that an attaching creditor whose attachment was made within sixty days next preceding the institution of the insolvency proceedings could not appeal from the decree adjudicating the debtor an insolvent, as that was wholly a matter between the petitioner and the debtor. Commercial Nat. Bank's Appeal, 59 Conn. 25.

Creditor Not Notified.—Where the statute provides for the appointment of a trustee in insolvency upon notice to the creditors, a creditor who was not notified has a right to appeal from a decree appointing the trustee. Commercial Nat. Bank's Appeal, 59 Conn. 25.

Rejection of Claim.—An insolvent's trustee has no right to apply to a court of equity to distribute the funds in his hands. If he does, and the usual notice is given to creditors to exhibit their claims, a person who has a claim may exhibit it, and if it be rejected, he may appeal from the order and have the same reversed, on the ground that the court of equity had no jurisdiction. Pierson v. Trail, 1 Md. 142.

When Trustee May Appeal.—A trustee in insolvency may appeal where the decision complained of affects the interests of all the creditors by diminishing the estate out of which they are to be paid, or where he is defeated in attempts to augment that fund by the recovery of property or money which he thinks belongs to the creditors. Salmon v. Pierson, 8 Md. 297.

If a trustee in insolvency has an interest as trustee in reference to his allowance for commissions and expenses, or as a creditor of the insolvent, he has an equal right with others to object to the distribution and to appeal. Salmon v. Pierson, 8 Md. 297.

The trustee of an insolvent debtor may appeal from an order erroneously rescinding his appointment, for in such a case he is a "party interested" within the meaning of § 20, c. 193, Maryland Act of 1854. Teackle v. Crosby, 14 Md. 14.

2. White v. Haskins, 59 Vt. 555.

3. California.—The Insolvent Act of 1895, § 71, provides for appeals to the Supreme Court in certain cases. Under this statute that court may review on appeal judgments in insolvent cases. People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 115; People v. Rosborough, 29 Cal. 415.

The Proper Mode of Obtaining Relief from an erroneous order of the Insolvency Court is by appeal, and not by application to a court of equity. Julien v. Riley, 61 Cal. 242.

Appeal, and Not Certiorari, is the proper method of bringing insolvency proceedings before the Supreme Court. People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 115.

After Making Claim.—A creditor may appeal from an order adjudging a petitioning debtor insolvent, notwithstanding he has made claim and proof of his debt in the Superior Court. In re Choje, 112 Cal. 630.

On Questions of Fraud.—Under the California Insolvent Act of 1852, on questions of fraud raised by opposing

b. FINALITY OF ORDER OR JUDGMENT. — It may be laid down as a general rule, that unless there is some statutory pro-creditors on a petition by an insolvent for a discharge from his debts, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the judgment of a County Court. Fisk v. His Creditors, 12 Cal. 281.

Order Exempting Property. — On a petition by a debtor to be declared insolvent, an order of the Superior Court, in pursuance of the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 60, setting aside certain property of the debtor as exempt from execution and ordering the sheriff to release and discharge the personal property from the operation and effect of the execution, is an appealable order and cannot be brought before the Supreme Court by certiorari. Noble v. Superior Ct., 109 Cal. 523.

Maryland. — The Maryland Code, art. 47, § 31, gives the right of appeal from any order of the court in insolvency proceedings within the specified period of thirty days. Paul v. Locust Point Co., 70 Md. 288.

Must Appeal Within Thirty Days. — For any defects or irregularities in the proceedings, a creditor may appeal from the order discharging an insolvent, and if he fails to seek his redress in this method within the specified period of thirty days, he cannot have the order avoided by a petition. Waters v. Momeny, 68 Md. 171; Sparks' Appeal, 18 Md. 417.

Massachusetts — Allowance of Claim. — The Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 157, § 36, provides for an appeal in certain cases from the Insolvent Court to the Superior Court. Under this statute a debtor, if dissatisfied with the allowance of a claim against his estate, has no right to appeal. Thomson v. Poor, 163 Mass. 26.

Election of New Assignee. — No appeal lies to the Superior Court from the decision of a judge of insolvency ordering the election of a new assignee of an insolvent estate. Bassett v. Hutchinson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 199.

The Supreme Judicial Court has no jurisdiction over an appeal from an order of the Insolvency Court granting an allowance to the debtor. Kaffenburg v. Assner, 163 Mass. 295.

As to the supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Judicial Court over insolvency proceedings, see supra, II. 2. b.

Supervisory Jurisdiction in Supreme Court.

Minnesota — Order Dismissing Petition. — In insolvency proceedings, an order dismissing a petition by a creditor, under section 10 of the Minnesota Insolvent Law, as amended by the Laws of 1889, c. 30, § 7, if made for informality or irregularity is not appealable; but if made on the merits it is appealable, though it gives the creditor leave to file another petition. Matter of Harrison, 46 Minn. 331.

Permitting Creditors to Share. — An order permitting creditors of an insolvent to share in his estate without filing releases of their debts, is appealable under the Minn. Gen. Stat. of 1894, § 4247. Ekberg v. Schloss, 62 Minn. 427.

Denying Petition to File Claim. — An order denying the petition of a creditor in insolvency proceedings to file his claim for allowance with the assignee after the expiration of the time limited is appealable; but an order granting such petition is not appealable, as it can be reviewed on appeal from the judgment establishing the creditor's claim. In re Nicolin, (Minn. 1896) 67 N. W. Rep. 995.

Appointing Receiver. — Under the Minnesota Gen. Stat., c. 86, § 8, an execution creditor may appeal from an order appointing a receiver in insolvency, and directing the sheriff to deliver to him the property levied upon. In re Jones, 33 Minn. 405.

Tennessee. — No appeal or writ of error lay from the decision of the court discharging an insolvent debtor under the Tennessee Act of 1811, c. 24, § 4, and the Act of 1824, c. 17. M'Kenzie v. Hackney, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 417; Donnelly v. Whitney, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 475.

Taxing Plaintiff with Costs. — It is erroneous for the court, upon discharging an insolvent, to tax the plaintiff with the costs of the proceedings; for this a writ of error will lie. Donnelly v. Whitney, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 475.

Vermont — Appeal to County Court. — Under the Vermont Stat., § 2156, providing for an appeal from the decision of the Court of Insolvency to the County Court upon the question of the insolvency of a debtor, the judgment of vision to the contrary, appeals will lie only to final orders or judgments in insolvency proceedings.¹

3. Time of Entering Appeal. — The time for entering appeals in such cases is regulated by statute. If the appeal is not taken within the prescribed time it will generally be dismissed.²

the County Court is conclusive, and no appeal lies to the Supreme Court. In re Montgomery Spool, etc., Co., 68 Vt. 29.

Refusal to Proceed. — A refusal of the Insolvency Court to proceed with an insolvency case which had been dismissed is not a decision of the Insolvency Court upon the question of the debtor's insolvency, and no appeal lies therefrom under Vermont Stat., § 2156. Baker v. Jones, 61 Vt. 549.

Priority of Liens. — Under the Vermont Stat., §§ 2143-2145, no appeal lies from the decision of a judge of the Court of Insolvency as to the priority of liens on the insolvent's estate. White v. Haskins, 59 Vt. 555.

1. Cravens v. Chambers, 55 Ind. 5; In re Studdart, 30 Minn. 553. And see article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 57.

An Interlocutory Order of a purely administrative nature, made by a District Court in the course of proceedings in insolvency pending before it, does not involve the merits of an action nor does it affect a substantial right. Such an order is not appealable. Brown v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co., 44 Minn. 322.

Supplemental Order. — Under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 67, no appeal lies to a supplemental order requiring an insolvent to verify his schedule and inventory. In re Abbott, 74 Cal. 381.

Exercise of Discretion. — Whether a defendant who, during the pendency of a suit against him, institutes proceedings in insolvency, shall have a delay of the trial of the action on that ground, and for how long a time, are matters resting entirely in the discretion of the judge before whom the action is pending; and to the exercise of such discretion no exception lies. Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 218.

The making of an order granting or refusing a petition of a creditor to be permitted to file his claim for allowance with the assignee after the expiration of the time limited is a matter of discretion with the trial court, and the order will not be set aside on appeal unless there was a clear abuse of such discretion. In re Nicolin, (Minn. 1896) 67 N. W. Rep. 995.

Remanding Debtor — Final Order. — Where a debtor was arrested on a ca. sa., and on being brought before a judge of the County Court, demanded to have the question whether he was guilty of fraud or had refused to surrender his estate tried before a jury, and on the trial he was found guilty and remanded to custody, it was held that the order remanding the debtor was not a ministerial but a judicial act, and was for all purposes a final order or judgment from which an appeal lay to the Circuit Court. Bowden v. Bowden, 75 Ill. 143.

Reversing Judgment of County Court. — Where an insolvent debtor appealed from the finding of the County Court, it was held that a judgment of the Circuit Court reversing such finding and judgment of the County Court, and remanding the cause with directions to allow the debtor to schedule, etc., was final within the meaning of the statute granting appeals to the Court of Appeals. Mahler v. Sinsheimer, 20 Ill. App. 401.

2. An appeal from an order or decision in a case in insolvency, not taken within thirty days as required by the Maryland Code, art. 47, § 31, must be dismissed. Sparks's Appeal, 18 Md. 417; Waters v. Momeny, 68 Md. 171. And see Paul v. Locust Point Co., 70 Md. 288.

Forgetfulness or Mistake. — The appeal authorized by the Massachusetts Stat. of 1838, c. 163, § 4, from the decree of the commissioner of insolvency, rejecting or allowing the claims of a supposed creditor, must be entered "in the proper court which shall be first held within and for the county in which the proceedings are had, next after the expiration of fourteen days from the time of claiming the appeal;" and if omitted to be so entered, through forgetfulness or mistake, cannot be entered at a succeeding term. Palmer v. Dayton, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 270.

Delay by Consent of Parties. — The consent of parties that an appeal from a decree of the commissioner of insolv-

4. Proceedings on Appeal — a. IN GENERAL — Notice. — On appeal by a creditor from an order adjudging a debtor insolvent, notice need not be given to creditors who have not appeared in the proceedings.¹

Presumptions. — If the evidence upon which the lower court found questions of fact is not brought up on appeal, the appellate court will presume the finding correct.²

b. WHAT CONSIDERED. — On appeal from an adjudication in insolvency proceedings, the appellate court will, in general, consider only such questions as were raised in the lower court.³

ency disallowing a claim against the estate of an insolvent debtor may be entered at a term of the court different from that fixed by law for such entry is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the appeal. Eddy's Case, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 28.

Delay through Neglect of Clerk. — The Maryland Act of 1842, c. 288, providing that appeals "then pending, or thereafter to be depending," shall not be dismissed by reason of the record not being transmitted in time, if it appear to the court that the delay was occasioned by the neglect of the clerk "and without default of the party," applies to appeals in insolvency cases granted under the Act of 1849, c. 88. Glenn v. Chesapeake Bank, 3 Md. 475.

Delay Caused by Fraud — Bill in Equity. — If an insolvent debtor has obtained the requisite assent of his creditors, and done all other acts to entitle him to a discharge, and has thereupon temporarily left the commonwealth, and a groundless claim is thereafter fraudulently presented against his estate at the third meeting and is allowed, which, if genuine, would deprive him of his right to a discharge, and his discharge is therefore not granted, and the time for an appeal has passed before his return or knowledge of the fraud, he may maintain a bill in equity, under Mass. Gen. Stat., c. 118, § 16, to procure the expunction of the claim, so that the discharge may be granted. Foster v. Lamb, 6 Allen (Mass.) 560.

1. In re Chope, 112 Cal. 630.

No Notice to Temporary Receiver. — On appeal by a creditor from an order adjudging a debtor petitioner an insolvent, notice need not be given to a temporary receiver who is not an "adverse party" under the California Insolvent Act of 1880, § 67. In re Chope, 112 Cal. 630.

2. Presumption of Sufficient Evidence. — On appeal and certiorari from an order dismissing a debtor's petition for a discharge, the question whether the petitioner was a fraudulent debtor, and for this reason not entitled to his discharge, is a question of fact; and if the evidence is not brought up by the writ, the finding of the court below will be presumed to have been upon sufficient evidence. Owen's Petition, 140 Pa. St. 565.

Omission without Fraudulent Intent. — Where, on application for discharge, the court finds that omissions from "the schedule and inventory occurred by mistake and not with intent to defraud creditors," on appeal by the opposing creditors, if it is not claimed that the findings of fact were not justified by the evidence, the appellate court will conclusively presume that the omissions complained of were mere mistakes made without any fraudulent intent. Demartin v. Demartin, 85 Cal. 76.

3. Failure of Creditor to Prove Claim. — The objection that an opposing creditor had not proved his claim before filing his opposition comes too late when taken for the first time in the appellate court. Strueven v. His Creditors, 62 Cal. 45.

Failure to Aver Service of Notice. — On an appeal by an insolvent, on the ground that it did not appear that the court ever acquired jurisdiction of the insolvent in the insolvency proceedings, for the reason that the complaint contained no averment showing that a copy of the petition filed by the creditors was served upon him, with a copy of the order to show cause, as required by section 10 of the California Insolvent Act of 1880, it was held that, the record being silent on the subject, the point could not be raised for the first time in the appellate court. Stewart v. Dunlap, (Cal. 1894) 36 Pac. Rep. 2.

Certiorari. — Where the proceedings are brought up on certiorari, the appellate court may not only inquire into the jurisdiction and regularity of the proceedings, but may review decisions upon questions of law.¹

Oath Taken at Wrong Time. — Where the oath required to be taken and subscribed by an insolvent before obtaining a discharge was made eleven months prior to the discharge, it was held that an objection on that account by opposing creditors came too late on appeal, no objection having been made when the oath was offered in evidence. In re McEachran, 82 Cal. 219.

Issues Not Submitted to Jury. — In proceedings of involuntary insolvency a verdict was rendered for the petitioners, and the defendant moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that no issues were made up and submitted to the jury. It was held that as it did not appear from the record that no demand was made by either party for issues before the jury was sworn, or any exception taken because they were refused, the above act could not be considered on appeal. Bowland v. Wilson, 71 Md. 307.

Certificate from Lower Court. — In Maryland, on appeal in insolvency proceedings, the appellate court can review only such questions as appear by a certificate from the lower court to have been raised there. Waters v. Momeny, 68 Md. 171.

Sufficient Certificate. — Under the Maryland Code, art. 5, § 13, providing that, on appeal from proceedings of involuntary insolvency, no question is open for review in the appellate court, except such as may be certified in the manner prescribed by law, a bill of exceptions regularly signed by the judge, taken to any particular ruling made in the course of the trial, is a certificate within the object and purview of the statute. Castleberg v. Wheeler, 68 Md. 266.

Appeal from Assignee's Disallowance of Claim. — In an appeal under Minn. Laws of 1881, c. 148, § 8, by a creditor in insolvency proceedings, from the assignee's disallowance of his claim, the matter is to be tried by the court without reference to what proofs may have been offered to the assignee. Crane v. Wheeler, 48 Minn. 207.

1. Morewood v. Hollister, 6 N. Y. 309.

Will Not Review Merits upon Evidence. — In a certiorari reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas upon the verdict of a jury upon the issue of insolvency, this court will not review the merits of the verdict upon the evidence. Race v. Dehart, 24 N. J. L. 38.

I. DEFINITION. — An instruction is an exposition of the principles of law applicable to a case, or to some branch or phase of a case, which the jury are bound to apply in order to render the verdict, establishing the rights of the parties in accordance with the facts proved.¹ The essential idea of a charge is that it is authoritative as an exposition of the law which the jury are bound by their oath and by moral obligations to obey.²

II. OFFICE OF INSTRUCTIONS. — The office of an instruction to the jury is, first, to explain the issues;³ second, to notice the positions taken by the parties and suggest, so far as the case may require, the principles of evidence and their application;⁴ third, to declare what rules of law will apply to any state of facts which

2. 1 Bouv. L. Dict. 302; Dodd v. Moore, 91 Ind. 523.

Instructions proper are instructions in reference to the law of the case. Lawler v. McPheeters, 73 Ind. 577; Stanley v. Sutherland, 54 Ind. 339.

Instruction Not a Decision. — An instruction is not a decision in any sense; much less in the sense in which it is used in section 302 of the Kansas Code, declaring how exceptions shall be saved to decisions. McArthur v. Mitchell, 7 Kan. 176.

What Is Not an Instruction. — A direction to a jury to sign their general verdict, or to answer interrogatories, is not an instruction. McCallister v. Mount, 73 Ind. 559. Nor is a casual remark made by the judge in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence. McCormick v. Ketchum, 48 Wis. 643.

3. Souvais v. Leavitt, 50 Mich. 108; Newell v. St. Louis Bolt, etc., Co., 5 Mo. App. 253; Forbes v. Jason, 6 Ill. App. 395.

4. Souvais v. Leavitt, 50 Mich. 108; Lanark First Nat. Bank v. Eitemiller, 14 Ill. App. 22; Keeler v. Stuppe, 86 Ill. 309; Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. 368; Hamilton v. Hunt, 14 Ill. 472; Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 466; Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 625; Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 21 Wis. 219; State v. Levigne, 17 Nev. 435.

The object of a charge is not to teach law to the jurors, but to direct their conduct in the controversy they are called upon to decide. Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Min. Co., 75 Mich. 84.

Instructions to the jury are not limited to the mere laying down of abstract principles of law; it is proper to direct the minds of the jury to the legal bearings of the facts, and to caution them against giving undue importance to unimportant things. Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77.

may be found on the evidence;¹ fourth, to exclude from the jury questions foreign to the case.²

III. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY — 1. Questions of Law for Court. — It is a well-settled principle that, on trials by jury, it is the exclusive province of the court to determine all questions of law arising in the case.³ It is, therefore, proper to refuse an instruction submitting a question of law to the jury,⁴

1. Souvais v. Leavitt, 50 Mich. 108.

The purpose of an instruction is to assist the jury in correctly applying the law to the facts, and sometimes a general statement of the rights and obligations of the parties assists to a clearer understanding of the particular obligation claimed to have been violated. Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 466.

2. Newell v. St. Louis Bolt, etc., Co., 5 Mo. App. 253.

The sole function of an instruction is to give the law applicable to the case in clear and intelligible language, without unnecessary repetition and without argument. Keeler v. Stuppe, 86 Ill. 309.

Instruction Concedes Correctness of Pleading. — Where the court is called upon to instruct the jury as to the law arising upon the facts, this impliedly assumes the correctness of the pleading. Guy v. Tams, 6 Gill (Md.) 82.

Instructions Necessary to Raise Question of Law. — In actions at law, questions of law can be raised at the trial only by instructions. Spurgeon v. West, 23 Mo. App. 42. When a question of law is sought to be raised on the trial, instructions should always be asked so as to enable the Supreme Court to see on what authority the court below decided. Harrison v. Bartlett, 51 Mo. 170; Ford v. Cameron, 19 Mo. App. 467.

Separating Questions of Law and Fact. — In instructing the jury as to the law of the case the judge should distinctly separate questions of law from questions of fact, and a charge which determines both without separating them and without submitting the question of fact to the jury is erroneous. *Rogers v. Power or Right of Juries to Judge the Law — a. IN CIVIL CASES. — With the exception of possibly one decision,² of doubtful authority,³ it has never been seriously contended that juries are in any sense judges of the law in civil cases; on the contrary, the instructions to the jury are the law of the case for them to obey and follow,⁴ and it makes no difference whether they con-

In this case the court, in charging, explicitly recognized the rule that on questions of fact it is the province of the jury, and on questions of law the province of the court, to decide; but afterwards in its charge overturned this statement by directing the jury that they had nevertheless the right to take upon themselves to judge of both, and to determine the law as well as the fact in controversy. Indeed, the whole case is an anomaly. It purports to be a trial by jury, in the Supreme Court of the United States, of certain issues out of chancery. And the chief justice begins by telling the jury that the facts are all agreed, and the only question is a matter of law, and upon that the whole court were agreed. If it be correctly reported, I can only say, it is not in accordance with the views of any other court, so far as I know, in this country or in England, and is certainly not in accordance with the course of the Supreme Court for many years."

Disregard of Instructions. — Accordingly, if it appears that the jury have disregarded the instructions of the court, the judgment will be reversed;³ and it has been held that the cause will be reversed although the instructions given are incorrect,⁴ but there are decisions which, with strong reason, maintain the contrary view.⁵

Charging Jury to Regard Instructions. — So it is proper to charge the jury that they are bound to regard the law as stated by the judge to be the law of the case,⁶ and not to attempt to decide the law for themselves;⁷ and, by parity of reasoning, it is error to charge the

"Jurors are not at liberty to disregard the law in such cases upon an idea that they can thus do justice between the parties. If courts or juries are at liberty to disregard the law in some cases, what is to prevent them from doing so in all cases when they do not approve of the law? It is evident that such practice would undermine the foundation of remedial justice, and would be substituting the arbitrary will of those who are called upon to administer justice for the settled rules of law upon which every citizen has a right to rely for the protection, not only of his property, but his liberty and his life. It is better that we should sometimes suffer great hardship, whether caused by our own neglect or otherwise, than that we should exchange known rules of law for the arbitrary will of those who undertake to administer the law." Davis v. Mason, 3 Oregon 156.

The following instruction has been approved: "Gentlemen of the jury, you have taken a solemn oath to try this cause according to the law and evidence given you in open court, and you have no authority to consider or be controlled by anything else than given you as law by the court, and jury that they are judges of the law and the fact,¹ or that the jury are the judges of the law applicable to the case.²

b. IN CRIMINAL CASES — (1) In England — (a) Views of Text-writers. — The next question which presents itself is of greater difficulty. While it may be admitted that juries are the judges of the law in the limited sense that they may return a general verdict of not guilty in a criminal case, which verdict cannot be revised or set aside, this is hardly a right which they possess, but merely a power, and in exercising this power against the instructions of the court they are guilty of a violation of duty. The works of early text-writers are often cited as sustaining the position that at common law the jury were judges of the law in the sense that they might disregard the instructions of the court and determine the law for themselves. What has been said by these eminent authors is set out in the notes, in order that the reader may draw his own conclusions.³ The writer of this article is convinced that these statements not only do not sustain this position, but are directly opposed to it.

unless your verdict accords with the law as given you by the court, you are guilty of wilful perjury. It makes no difference what you think the law ought to be, you have no authority to consider or be controlled by anything else as law than given you by the court." State v. Miller, 53 Iowa 154.

Charge that Jury Are "Sole Judges of the Facts and the Law as Given in Charge by the Court." — The charge that "You are the sole judges of the facts and the law as given in charge by the court," does not convey the impression to the jury that they are the judges of the law as well as the facts. On the contrary, it fairly implies that the jury are to take the law as given them by the court in charge. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Fain, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 41.

3. The statute West. 2, c. 30 (13 Edw. I., A. D. 1285), seems to be the groundwork of the arguments of those who assert the right of juries to determine questions of law. Rex v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note. See also Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 543; State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 24. This statute provided that "the justices assigned to take assizes shall not compel the jurors to say precisely whether it be disseizin or not, so that they do show the truth of the fact, and require aid of the justices; but if they, of their own accord, are willing to say that it is dis-

In Littleton's treatise, which was written between the years 1461 and 1483, it is said, after speaking of the giving of a special verdict in an assize: "In such case, where the inquest may give their verdict at large, if they will take upon themselves the knowledge of the law they may give their verdict generally as is put in their charge; as in the case aforesaid, they may well say the lessor did not disseize the lessee." Littleton's Tenures, § 368.

In commenting on Littleton's statement, Lord Coke, who wrote a century and a half later, says: "Although the jurie, if they will take upon them, (as Littleton here saith), the knowledge of the law, may give a generall verdict, yet it is dangerous for them so to doe, for if they doe mistake the law, they runne into the danger of an attainr." Coke's Littleton, 228a.

In Blackstone's Commentaries it is said: "Such * * * verdict may be either general * * * or special, setting forth all the circumstances of the case and praying the judgment of the court. * * * This is where they [the jury] doubt the matter of law, and therefore choose to leave it to the determination of the court; though they have an unquestionable right of determining upon all the circumstances, and finding a general verdict, if they think proper so to hazard a breach of their oaths; and, if their

(b) Decisions on the Question. — So much for the authority of text-writers. The question will now be considered from the standpoint of adjudicated cases. In spite of dicta to the contrary, it is submitted that there is not an English case (except in prosecutions for libel under Fox's Libel Act of 1792) where it has been held that the jury are judges of the law in such sense that they may disregard the instructions of the court and determine the law for themselves. An exhaustive research of the authorities shows an unbroken line of decisions to the contrary (mostly prosecutions for criminal libel), beginning with the year 1554 and ending in 1789, a few years prior to the passage of the Libel Act. The substance of these decisions is set out in the notes, and the decisions are arranged in chronological order.¹ As was said in a verdict be notoriously wrong, they may be punished, and the verdict set aside by attain at the suit of the king, but not at the suit of the prisoner." 4 Blackstone's Com., p. 361.

In commenting upon Blackstone's statements, Chief Justice Lewis, in his dissenting opinion in People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 405, says: "What? Men to be punished for a breach of their oaths in exercising a right? This would be preposterous. The right here spoken of is nothing more than the right of insisting upon their verdict being received and recorded, though it be general where it ought not to be so. But is this a species of right which shall impose it upon a judge to inform them that they may exercise it though they violate their oaths? Surely not."

What is here said comprises, it is believed, the only statute on the subject prior to the passage of Fox's Libel Bill in 1792, and the only statements of text-writers which might be supposed to give support to the doctrine that juries are the judges of the law; and it is submitted that there is nothing in any of them which in the least tends to show this right. The language of this statute and the statements of text-writers all go to show that if the jurors take upon themselves the decision of questions of law and decide erroneously they will be subject to punishment. It can hardly be believed that a jury is punishable for doing that which it has a legal and moral right to do. If the jury should incur a penalty, the act for doing which the penalty is imposed must be illegal, for a penalty attaching to the performance of an act makes the act itself unlawful. "But what peril could they incur if, by deciding the law, they simply exercised a right given them by the statute? This phraseology is most singular, if the statute was intended to submit the law to them. The reasonable construction of it is that if the jury will undertake to decide the law, they shall be subject to such penalty as may be imposed upon them for exceeding their jurisdiction." Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 543.

1. 1554. — On a trial for high treason before the chief justice, the jury found the defendant not guilty, against the instructions of the court. For this they were imprisoned, and were released only upon payment of enormous fines. Throckmorton's Case, 1 St. Tr. 901, cited in State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 30.

1602. — In Wharton's Case, Yelv. 23, the jury in a murder case having found a verdict contrary to the instructions of the court were fined for this breach of duty.

1619. — In Needler's Case, Hob. 227, Chief Justice Hobart recognized that the jury are liable to an attain for error in deciding the law involved in their general verdict.

1649. — On the trial of Lieut.-Col. Lilburne for treason (2 Harg. St. Tr. 79, 80), the court refused to permit him to read to the jury from a law book; he became enraged at this and told them that if the jury pleased "they were no more but ciphers to pronounce their verdict." One of the judges sitting declared that this was a "damnable, blasphemous heresy," and the jury were instructed that they were not the judges of the law but only of the facts.

1670. — In 1670 William Penn was recent decision, "There is not a single respectable English tried under an indictment for seditious preaching. The court charged that the jury had nothing to do except to find whether the defendant had preached or not; the jurors, however, acquitted the prisoner and were fined for contempt in so doing. One of the jurors sued out a writ of habeas corpus before Chief Justice Vaughan and was discharged. Bushell's Case, Vaughan 135.

1678. — In Hood's Case, Kelyng 50, which was a trial for murder, Chief Justice Kelyng charged the jury that this was murder, the law implying malice, and that this was matter of law, and that the jury were to observe the direction of the court and that they were only judges of facts.

1683. — On the trial of Algernon Sidney, 3 Harg. St. Tr. 818, the question was not involved, but Judge Jeffreys, in his charge to the jury, told them that it was the duty of the court to declare the law to the jury, and the jury were bound to receive its declaration of law.

1702. — In Fuller's Case, 5 Harg. St. Tr. 443, Chief Justice Holt charged the jury as follows: "You hear the witness say he [Fuller] brought these two scandalous books to the press, and that he corrected them; and he owns that he was the publisher of them; and if you believe he did so you are to find him guilty."

1704. — In Tutchin's Case, 5 Harg. St. Tr. 542, Chief Justice Holt charged as follows: "You are to consider whether you are satisfied that Mr. Tutchin is guilty of writing, composing, and publishing these libels," and "if you are satisfied that he composed and published these papers, you are to find him guilty."

1727. — In Rex v. Oneby, 2 Ld. Raym. 1485, 2 Stra. 766, which was a trial for murder, the jury found a special verdict upon which the case was tried before the twelve judges, and Lord Chief Justice Raymond said: "In cases of this nature the judges are to determine what is malice or what is a reasonable time to cool; and they must do it upon the circumstances of the case; the jury are judges only of the fact, and we must determine whether it be deliberate or not."

1729. — In King v. Clark, 1 Barn. 304, it was claimed that the charge of a malicious, traitorous design was not made out by the evidence. Chief Justice Raymond instructed that the fact of printing and publishing only was to be decided by the jury.

1731. — In Franklin's Case, 9 Harg. St. Tr. 275, which was a prosecution for libel, Lord Raymond charged that there are only two things for the consideration of the jury: first, whether the defendant was guilty of publishing it; second, whether the innuendoes were justly stated and applied; and that the third question, whether the publication was libelous, belonged exclusively to the court as a matter of law.

1734. — In King v. Pool, Hardw. 28, Lord Raymond said: "The thing that governs greatly in this determination is, that the point of law is not to be determined by juries; juries have a power by law to determine matters of fact only, and it is of the greatest consequence to the law of England and to the subject that these powers of the judge and jury be kept distinct; that the judge determines the law and the jury the fact; and if they ever come to be confounded it will prove the confusion and destruction of the law of England."

1752. — In King v. Owen, 10 Harg. St. Tr. 196, Lord Chief Justice Lee instructed the jury, on a prosecution for libel, that if they thought the fact of publication fully proved (there being no question as to the meaning of it), they ought to find the defendant guilty.

1756. — In Nutt's Case, 1 Barn. 306, tried before Chief Justice Rider, the jury were charged that they could pass only upon the facts and the judges only upon the law.

1756. — In Shebbeare's Case, cited in Rex v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note, Lord Mansfield directed the jury that if they were satisfied with the publication, and that the meaning and innuendoes were as stated, they ought to find the defendant guilty, leaving the question of law upon the record for the judgment of the court.

1764-70. — In Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527, the jury found a verdict of guilty for publishing the "North Briton," No. 45, which was recorded generally guilty.

1770. — In Rex v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2661, and Miller's Case, 20 St. Tr.

authority for the doctrine in question." ¹

(2) In America — (a) At Common Law — aa. VIEW THAT JURY MUST FOLLOW INSTRUCTIONS. — In America, in jurisdictions where the question remains unaffected by statutory or organic provisions declaring the jury judges of the law in prosecutions for libel, or in criminal cases generally, the overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that the jury are not judges of the law in the sense that they may disregard the instructions of the court, but, on the contrary, they are bound to follow such instructions or they will be guilty of a breach of duty; ² and that while the jury have the 1870, 1891), the jury were directed in substance that if they were satisfied with the publication and that the meaning and innuendoes were as stated, they ought to find the defendant guilty, leaving the question of law upon the record for the judgment of the court.

1784. — In Rex v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note, the rule laid down in Rex v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2661, is followed.

1789. — In Rex v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428, it was held, on the trial of an indictment for libel, that the only questions for the consideration of the jury are the fact of publishing and the truth of the innuendoes; whether the subject is or is not a libel, is a question of law for the court. (Per Lord Kenyon.) In Stockdale's Case, cited in the dissenting opinion of Lewis, C. J., in People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 408, Lord Kenyon instructed the jury that there were two points for them to attend to — whether the defendant had published the libel, and then whether the sense which the attorney-general, by his innuendoes in the information, had affixed to the different passages was fairly affixed to them.

I do not assert that I am infallible. It is human to err, but it is not for you to declare my error. If I err, I am glad to know that I can be corrected, and the defendant protected, in a higher tribunal." The judgment was reversed for a refusal to give the charge as requested, and the reasoning of Chief Justice Sharswood was to the effect that the jury, having the power, have a right to give a verdict contrary to the instructions of the law. No court should give a binding instruction to a jury which it is powerless to enforce by granting a new trial if it should be disregarded. It may present to them the obvious considerations which should induce them to receive and follow their instruction, but beyond this it has no right to go. This decision has been construed (see Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. St. 64) as not meaning that the jury have the right to disregard instructions of the court, but it is not believed that any such meaning can be deduced from it.

(Tenn.) 195, is reaffirmed as correct, and that "such of our subsequent opinions and dicta as seem to countenance the opposite theory" are overruled. Compare Butler v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 36, where it is said: "It is objected that in telling the jury that they are 'judges of the proof' the judge may have made the impression on them that they are not also judges of the law, from the fact of his omitting to remind them of their right to judge of the law as well as the facts. If the defendant's counsel had requested the court to charge the jury as to their right to judge of the law, and he had refused or neglected to do so, it might have misled the jury as to their rights, and, therefore, been erroneous. But we must presume that all jurors are apprised of their constitutional rights in this regard, and if they did not exercise it, we are to presume it was because they were content with the law as expounded by the court." *Hannah v. ing out of the right to return a general verdict of not guilty,¹ which necessarily covers both the law and the fact and embodies a decision based upon and growing out of both.²

Charging Jury to Regard or Disregard Instructions. — It follows, then, that a charge which assumes that the jury may disregard the instructions of the court may properly be refused,³ and on the other hand the court may properly instruct that the jury must receive the law from the court.⁴

1. Pierson v. State, 12 Ala. 153.

"It has been a familiar saying among the profession in this country, and an opinion entertained by highly respectable judges, that the jury are judges of the law as well as of the facts.

* * * In some sense I believe it to be true, for they are the sole judges of the application of the law to the particular case. In this sense, theirs is the duty to pass on the law — a most important and often difficult duty, which, when discharged, makes the difference between a general and a special verdict." U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 61.

2. U. S. v. Taylor, 11 Fed. Rep. 472.

"In a certain limited sense, therefore, it may be said that the jury have a power and a legal right to pass upon both the law and the fact. And this is sufficient to account for many and most of the dicta in which the proposition is stated. But it would be more accurate to state that it is the right of the jury to return a general verdict; this draws after it, as a necessary consequence, that they incidentally pass upon the law. But here again is the question, what is intended by 'passing upon the law'? I think it is by embracing it in their verdict and thus bringing it upon the record, with their finding of the facts. But does it follow that they may rightfully, and by authority of the common law, by which all are conscientiously bound to govern their conduct, proceed upon the same grounds and principles in the one case as the other? What the jury have a right to do, and what are the grounds and principles upon which they are in duty and conscience bound to act and govern themselves in the exercise of that right, are two very distinct questions." Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 208.

The Jury Take the Instructions of the Court as evidence of the law, and they turn to the witnesses for evidence of the facts, and judging in this sense of the law and the facts a general verdict is rendered. State v. Drawdy, 14 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 90.

Their right to judge of the law is a right to be exercised only under the direction of the court, and if they go aside from that direction and determine the law incorrectly they depart from their duty. Montgomery v. State, 11 Ohio 427.

A Speculative Question. — One of our courts has well said: "The question, as one of speculation and of declamation, is not new in our courts; it is as old as the courts are; but as a legal principle it has been repudiated and turned out of court as often as it has been presented." State v. Jeandell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 484.

3. Batre v. State, 18 Ala. 119, in which case the court refused to charge that the jury had the right to judge of the law as well as of the facts of the case, and that whether, in the exercise of this right, they would distrust the court, or whether they would receive the law from the court, must be left to their own discretion under the sanction of their oath. To the same effect see U. S. v. Riley, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 205.

4. Sweeney v. State, 35 Ark. 586. To the same effect see Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 167, where the following charge was approved: "It is the duty of the jury to receive the law as it is given to them by the court; it is the exclusive province of the court to determine what the law is; and the jury have no right to hold the law to be otherwise in any particular than as given to them by the court;" State v. Miller, 53 Iowa 156, where the reviewing court approved this instruction: "You have taken a solemn oath to try this cause according to the law and evidence given you in open court, and you have no authority to consider or be controlled by anything else than given you as law by the court, and unless your verdict accords with the law as given you by the court, you are guilty of wilful perjury."

bb. VIEW THAT JURY MAY DISREGARD INSTRUCTIONS. — In Vermont alone, of all states in the Union, is it held (in the absence of express constitutional or statutory provisions authorizing it) that it is the right of the jury to determine the law as well as the facts, independently of the court's instructions.¹ "There is no qualification of the right of the jury in a criminal cause to disregard the law as given them by the court, and adopt their own theory."²

(b) Under Organic and Statutory Provisions Declaring Juries Judges of the Law in Criminal Cases — aa. SUBSTANCE OF THE PROVISIONS. — In a number of jurisdictions an attempt has been made to settle this question by organic or statutory provisions.³ But the courts give a widely

McDonnell*, 32 Vt. 523, in which the doctrine that the jury are the judges of the law was pronounced by the trial judge "most nonsensical and absurd." The reviewing court said: "We see no objection, where the interference of a jury is directly invoked in a criminal case, to the judge stating to the jury, in his own way, that this rule is not intended for ordinary criminal cases; that it is a matter of favor to the defendant, and should not be acted upon by the jury except after the most thorough conviction of its necessity and propriety; that any departure by the jury from the law laid down by the court must be taken solely upon their own responsibility; and that the safer, and better, and fairer way, in ordinary criminal cases, is to take the law from the court, and that they are always justified in doing so. This is substantially what was done by the court below, and we see no just ground of exception to the mode in which it was done."

2. State v. Meyer, 58 Vt. 457, in which it was held that an instruction that the jury could adopt their own theory of the law, except that they could not adopt a rule of law more prejudicial to the defendant than that laid down by the court, was more favorable to the prisoner than the law warranted, and that he had no just ground of complaint.

"In charging the jury he [the judge] must state to them all matters of law which are necessary for their information in giving their verdict. If he present the facts of the case, he must inform the jury that they are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact, and that they have a right also to determine the law." Rev. Stat. Ind. 1896, § 1823.

Louisiana. — "The jury in all criminal cases shall be judges of the law and of the facts on the question of guilt or innocence, having been charged as to the law applicable to the case by the presiding judge." La. Const., art. 168.

"The jury is always at liberty to give a general verdict by pronouncing on the law and on the fact in the case submitted to them. Therefore, the law permitting either party to submit specially the facts in the case to the jury, and so depriving them of the right of giving a general verdict in the suit, is abrogated." Garland's Rev. Code Prac. 1894, § 520.

Maryland. — "In the trial of all criminal cases the jury shall be the judges of law, as well as of fact." Md. Const., art. 15, § 5.

Massachusetts. — "The jury shall try, according to established forms and principles of law, all criminal causes committed to them, and, after having received the instructions of the court, shall decide, in their discretion, by a varying construction of these provisions, although some of them are very similar.

bb. RULE IN INDIANA, MARYLAND, ILLINOIS, AND CONNECTICUT — View that Jury May Disregard Instructions. — In Illinois, Indiana, and Maryland the provisions, with a slight difference in wording, are to the effect that in all criminal cases the jury shall be the judges of the law and the facts.¹ In construing these provisions, the courts of these states are all agreed that the instructions given are merely advisory, and that the jury has the right to disregard them;² that the instruction when given goes to the jury simply as a means of enlightenment, and not as a positive and binding rule for their government;³ and that they are bound to give only such weight to the instructions as in their judgment they see proper.⁴ On the other hand, it is considered that the instructions of the court are at least entitled to a respectful consideration,⁵ and that the jury should not disregard such instructions, except for some sufficient reason addressing itself to their judgment.⁶

How Jury Instructed Where This View Prevails. — In accordance with the views stated in the preceding section, it is, of course, proper to instruct the jury that they are the judges of the law and the facts, and that they are not bound by the instructions;⁷ and error to refuse an instruction to that effect.⁸ So it is erroneous to instruct that if the court instructs the jury truly and fully as to the law, the jurors must be governed by the instructions,⁹ or that it is the jury's duty to believe the law as charged by the court.¹⁰ On the other hand, it is proper to charge that the jury should give a respectful consideration to the instructions of the court,¹¹

general verdict, both the fact and the law involved in the issue, or may at their election find a special verdict. The court shall superintend the course of the trials, decide upon the admission and rejection of evidence upon all questions of law raised during the trials, and upon all collateral and incidental proceedings, and shall also charge the jury." or weigh them as they weigh the evidence, and disregard neither without proper reason;¹ and in a number of decisions it has been held proper, after instructing that the jury are the sole judges of the law and the facts, further to charge that the jury should accept and act upon the law as laid down by the court unless they can say on oath that they are better judges of the law than the court, in which case they are at liberty so to act.²

Necessity for Charging Where This View Prevails. — In Maryland it is held that the constitutional provision does not prohibit the court from instructing the jury on the law when they unanimously request it,³ but it seems to be settled that the court need not instruct whether requested or not — that this is a matter entirely within its discretion, and that a refusal to do so is not reviewable.⁴ In Indiana a different view prevails. It is there held that the accused has a right to insist that the court shall instruct the jury on the law applicable to the case, and that it is the duty of the court to do so.⁵

this case the court charged as follows: "If, however, you have no well-defined opinion or convictions as to what the law is relating to any particular matter or matters at issue in the case, then, in determining what it is, you should give the instructions of the court respectful consideration."

2. Mullinix v. People, 76 Ill. 211; Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 221. See also Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 252, in which it was held proper to instruct that if the jury disregard the instructions of the court, they must be prepared to say upon their oaths that they know the law better than the court, but that before doing so "it is their duty to reflect whether from their study and experience they are better qualified" than the court to judge of the law.

3. Beard v. State, 71 Md. 275.

4. Broll v. State, 45 Md. 356. See also dicta to the same effect in Forwood v. State, 49 Md. 531; Swann v. State, 64 Md. 423; Franklin v. State, 12 Md. 246.

"No court in this state can be required by the counsel or jury to give instructions either upon the law or the legal effect of the evidence given at the trial. This seems to have been the opinion of this court, held in the case of Franklin v. State, 12 Md. 249. The court may in its discretion advise the jury as to the law and legal effect of the evidence, but it is not bound to do so, and being a matter entirely within its discretion, its refusal to do so cannot be reviewed by this court, even if this case is now properly before us upon this appeal. It seems to have been supposed that the Act of 1872, c. 316, which authorizes exceptions to be taken in criminal cases, also authorizes exceptions such as the one presented in this record. That act can only apply to such rulings as the court may be called upon to make with regard to the admissibility of evidence during the trial. It is impossible that the legislature contemplated giving the right to parties in criminal cases to have instructions upon the law and the legal effect of the evidence, and exceptions to such rulings, in the face of the constitutional provision under which juries are at liberty to treat such instructions with utter disregard, and to find their verdict in direct opposition to them." Broll v. State, 45 Md. 356.

5. Parker v. State, 136 Ind. 284.

"It is true that in this state the jury is the judge of both the law and the evidence, but it is nevertheless the duty of the court to instruct it as to the law. If the jury, in the exercise of its right to judge the law, should erroneously acquit the accused, there is no remedy for such error, for he cannot be twice placed upon trial for the same offense; but if the jury, in the exercise of its right to judge the law, erroneously convicts one charged with crime, in open disregard of the instructions of the court, the error is at once corrected. Such is the every-day practice. To the end that the jury may be correctly informed as to the law applicable to his case, and

Effect of Erroneous Instructions. — Notwithstanding the power of the jury to judge the law, and the fact that they are not bound to follow the instructions, the giving of an erroneous instruction will nevertheless be a ground of reversal if it appears that the jury have followed the instruction to the injury of the accused,¹ or that the jury might have rendered a different verdict.²

Limitation of Jury's Right to Judge the Law. — Under these provisions it has been held in Maryland that the jury have no right to judge of the constitutionality of a statute,³ but the Indiana court has taken the opposite view.⁴ It would seem that the jury have no right to determine that an indictment is not sufficient in form, or that it was not properly found and returned.⁵ But the jury have the right to determine the sufficiency of an indictment to this extent, that they may judge whether the facts therein stated are or are not sufficient to constitute an offense;⁶ and it has been held that the decisions of the Supreme Court are not binding upon the jury, and that they may disregard them and determine for themselves what the law is.⁷

that he may not be erroneously convicted, a defendant on trial, charged with crime, has the right to insist that the court shall instruct the jury on all legal questions necessary to enable them to reach a true verdict." Parker v. State, 136 Ind. 284.

6. Hudelson v. State, 94 Ind. 426. In this case the court said: "If this be not so, then the jury will be compelled to convict in all cases where the facts stated in the indictment are proved, although they may think that the facts so proved do not constitute a public offense. This would be, practically, to take from the jury the right to pass upon the law in all cases. If the proof should not sustain the averments in the indictment, they might acquit for want of sufficient evidence; but in every case where the proof should establish the truth of the facts stated in the indictment, the jury would be compelled to convict, because they would have no right to settle the law for themselves, and say that the facts so proven do not constitute a public offense."

7. Fowler v. State, 85 Ind. 541; Keiser v. State, 83 Ind. 234.

8. In State v. Buckley, 40 Conn. 247, the court charged that the jury are the judges of the law under the same obligations that attach to the judge on the bench; that they are not authorized to say that that is not law which is the law of the state. It further charged that the statute on which the prosecution was based had been decided constitutional by the Supreme Court, and that in the trial judge's opinion it was constitutional; that if the jury decided it to be unconstitutional they would disturb the foundations of the law. But in conclusion the court said: "But, after all, you are the judges of the law; and if on your consciences you can say this section is unconstitutional, then you ought to acquit the accused." The reviewing court refused to advise a new trial.

In State v. Thomas, 47 Conn. 546, the court charged that the jury are the judges of the law as well as of the facts, and that if they believed the section on which the prosecution was decided to be unconstitutional, they had a right so to decide; but that they were as much bound by the law as the judge on the bench, and that it was not to be presumed that they would be guilty of such an absurdity as to decide

cc. RULE IN GEORGIA, LOUISIANA, AND MASSACHUSETTS. — In Georgia the constitution and statutes contain provisions identical with those of Illinois, Maryland, and Indiana. The Louisiana constitutional provision is also in the same language as those mentioned, except that it contains this clause in addition: "Having been charged as to the law applicable to the case by the presiding judge." All the earlier Georgia decisions uphold the right of the jury to determine the law to be contrary to what was stated in the instructions,¹ and this was the uniform ruling until after the civil war.² Subsequent to that period, without expressly overruling those decisions, the rulings of the court have been to the contrary.³ In 1877 the statute on that subject became a part of the organic law,⁴ and it has been uniformly held since then that the jury are bound to take the instructions of the court as the law of the case,⁵ the view being taken that the jury are judges of the law only in the sense that they are to apply the law given them in charge by the court to the facts, and give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty.⁶

In Louisiana the earlier decisions hold that the jury are not that the statute was not valid when the Supreme Court had held otherwise. The objection to the charge was its reference to a supposed opinion of the Supreme Court deciding that the statute was constitutional. The reviewing court held that there was no error, and said: "It can really have made little difference whether the court had actually made such a decision, so long as the judge was right in his view of the law and this court was prepared to sustain him in that view. The most that can be said is that the jury were misled into taking the only view of the law that they could correctly have taken. The defendant lost a possible chance of the jury's erroneously deciding the law in his favor. This ground for a new trial does not commend itself to our sense of justice. But we need not decide whether, if that were the precise state of the case, it would be a sufficient ground for granting a new trial. This court had in fact decided the question as to the validity of the statute."

In McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497, it was held that the jury are judges of the law in criminal cases in this: that they have the legal right to acquit the prisoner, though the judge may charge them that if certain facts be proven, he is guilty according to law; and although they may find those facts to be proven.

In McDaniel v. State, 30 Ga. 853, it was held that if the jury cannot conscientiously adopt the law as given them in charge by the court, it is not only their right, but their duty, to render a verdict according to the opinion of the law which they entertain; that if they render a verdict otherwise they are guilty of perjury, and that they should be so instructed by the court when requested to do so.

What Instructions Proper Under This View. — The court may properly instruct that although the jury are judges of the law as well as of the facts, under the constitution of the state they should take the law from the court, which is responsible for its correct exposition. Danforth v. State, 75 Ga. 614.

bound by the instructions of the court, but may disregard them if they see fit.¹ But after some wavering this court has finally reached the conclusion that the jury are bound to accept and apply the law as laid down by the judge, and that while they have the power to disregard it, yet in so doing they would violate their oaths and their duty.² Notwithstanding this, it is held reversible error to refuse to instruct the jury that they are judges of the law and the fact.³ But, on the other hand, a declaration to the jury that they are the judges of the law must be followed by an explanation of the sense in which they are judges of the law,⁴ or,

Johnson*, 30 La. Ann. 904, in which it was held that it is not a just ground of complaint that the trial judge, in charging the jury that they were judges of the law and the evidence, said that if they thought they knew more of the law than the judge, it was their privilege so to believe.

Vinson*, 37 La. Ann. 792. Compare the recent case of State v. Hannibal, 37 La. Ann. 619, in which the trial court gave the following charge: "Gentlemen, you are the judges of the facts, also of the law as expounded by me, and which you are to apply to the facts proven. You are not compelled to follow my instructions, because you are at liberty to interpret the law yourselves. But you must not arbitrarily disregard my instructions. However, if you are convinced they are wrong, and that you know the law better than I do, it is your right to follow your own conscientious convictions. It is safe for you to regard my explanation of the law, for if I am mistaken the accused will have his remedy by bills of exception and appeal." The accused objected, to that clause of the instruction beginning, "It is safe," etc. In commenting on this charge the reviewing court said: "The charge as a whole is not amenable to objection by even the most critical, but in truth the sentence that is obnoxious to the defendant is of itself and by itself not ground of complaint. It is not error to tell the jury that it was safe for them to regard the judge's explanation of the law and the reason of it. He might have gone further and instead have told them that it was their duty to accept the law as expounded by him and to apply it to the facts of the case."

The statute and the organic law intend that "the jury shall heed the law as it is given to them by the court. By that is meant the charge shall have its moral weight with the jury, just as the juror's oath is presumed to exert its influence when he goes into the box. The exposition so often given substantially, that the jury should apply the law as given by the court, and while the jury have the physical power to disregard it, they are morally bound to apply the law as announced by the court, we think is the correct application of the provision of the organic law." State v. Desforges, 47 La. Ann. 1167. "If it were otherwise, if the jury were the absolute judges of the law, where would be the necessity of a charge by the presiding judge, as required by the constitution and by the rule of law which defines their powers? If they are legally authorized to disregard the law as expounded by the judge, why should the appellate tribunal be called to reverse the judgment and set aside the verdict on the ground of an erroneous charge by the judge?" State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 465.

3. State v. Vinson, 37 La. Ann. 792.

4. State v. Tisdale, 41 La. Ann. 338.

"The relation which the jury bears to enunciations of law delivered to them by the judge is very similar to that which the judge bears to valid and unambiguous statutes. The judge is bound, under his oath, to accept and apply the statutes, but that does not prevent him from being the judge of the law. So the jury is bound to accept and apply the law as declared by the court, but that does not prevent their

in other words, they should be told that they must follow the law as given to them by the court.¹

The Massachusetts statute is held not to authorize the jury to determine questions of law contrary to the instructions,² and the jury may properly be instructed to follow the charge in matters of law.³

c. REASONS WHY JURIES SHOULD NOT HAVE POWER TO JUDGE THE LAW — (1) Resulting Uncertainty in the Law. — Probably the strongest argument against the doctrine that juries are the judges of the law is the confusion and uncertainty in the law which its application would entail.⁴ Law, being the rule by being 'judges of the law.' " State v. Vinson, 37 La. Ann. 792.

What Instructions Proper. — Under this head the following instructions have been approved: "The constitution of this state makes jurors the judges of the law as well as of the facts in criminal cases; but while this is so, I charge you that it is your sworn duty to follow the law given to you by the court, and you are not its judges to the extent claimed by counsel. The very moment you feel that the law expounded in this charge is the law of this case, your oaths compel you to apply it to the facts, and though you have the physical power to disregard it you cannot do so without violating your oaths. In taking the law from the court you incur no responsibility; in disregarding it, your error is without remedy. But on the other hand, misstatements of the law by the court to the prejudice of these accused may be excepted to by their counsel, and its correctness passed upon by a higher tribunal. Your oath binds you to rest your verdict on the law and the evidence." State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 465. That under the state constitution they are judges of the law and fact; that they must ascertain the facts from the testimony, apply the law as given by the court, and that they cannot rightfully disregard the instructions of the court on the law. State v. Desforges, 47 La. Ann. 1167. On the other hand, it is proper to refuse an instruction that "if the jury cannot conscientiously believe that the court has charged the law correctly, they do not violate their oath in disregarding it." State v. Matthews, 38 La. Ann. 795.

In the first case decided since the enactment of the statute mentioned, Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 185, it was held that if the statute purports to allow the jury in criminal trials the rightful power to determine, against the instructions of the court, questions of law involved in the issue — and on this point the court was equally divided — it is unconstitutional, and that neither before nor since the statute had the jury any rightful power to determine questions of law involved against the instructions of the court.

"Upon the reason of the thing, and the eternal principles of justice, the jury ought not to assume the jurisdiction of law; they do not know, and are not presumed to know, anything of the matter; they do not understand the language in which it is conceived, or the meaning of the terms; they have no rule to go by but their passions and wishes. * * * Miserable is the condition of individuals, dangerous is the condition of the state, if there is no certain law, or (which is the same thing) no certain administration of law, to protect individuals, or to guard the state. Jealousy of leaving the law to the court, as in other cases, is now, in the present state of things, puerile rant and declamation. * * * Under such an administration of law no man could tell, no counsel could advise, whether a paper were or were not punishable. I am glad that I am not bound to subscribe to such an absurdity." Per Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note.

"No person could know what the criminal law was, for one jury might lawfully convict even the same individual upon a similar state of the fact, and under the same statute, upon which another had acquitted him." Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 570. "If the court is to have no voice [or, we add, only a subordinate one] in laying down these rules, it is obvious that there can be no security whatever, either that the innocent may not be condemned, or that society will have any defense against the guilty. A jury may disregard a statute just as freely as any other rule. A fair trial in time of excitement would be almost impossible. * * * Parties charged with crime need the protection of the law against unjust convictions quite as often as the public needs it against groundless acquittals. Neither can be safe without having the rules of law defined and preserved, and beyond the mere discretion of any one." Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

If the court had no right to decide on the law, error, confusion, uncertainty, and licentiousness would characterize the criminal trials; and the safety of the accused might be as much endangered as the stability of public justice would certainly be. Montee v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 151.

1. State v. Wright, 53 Me. 328.

2. Broom's Legal Maxims (8th Am. ed.) 150.

It is Necessary to the Security of Public and Private Rights that there be an authoritative exposition of all laws, as far as possible, declared and known. Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 197. And the interpretation of the law can have no permanency and uniformity, nor can it become generally known, except through the action of the courts. Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

"All the mischief of ex post facto laws would be done by tribunals and authorities wholly irresponsible, and there would be no method of enforcing with effect many of our most important constitutional and legal safeguards against injustice. Parties charged with crime need the protection of the law against unjust convictions quite as often as the public needs it against groundless acquittals. Neither can be safe without having the rules of law defined and preserved, and beyond the mere discretion of any one. We must construe the jury system, like all other parts of our legal fabric, in the light of history and usage. It came into this country as a part of our common law, and it has been fixed by our constitutions as a known and regular common-law institution. Like many of our best heritages from that source, we know what it is better than how it was devised, or (which is more probable) came into use without devising. We must look to the use as evidence of the law. And looking to that, we find that the judge has always assumed to give the jury instructions upon the law. We find, further, that while there have been severe complaints and stern measures to secure them from his control on the facts, there has never been any attempt to abolish the practice of charging on the law. All the improvements in mitigation of the old system have gone upon the ground that the jury were expected to follow the instructions of the court. The introduction of reserved cases and criminal exceptions, would be little short of an absurdity on any other theory. If there were any grounds of complaint it

determine the law, its stability would be subverted, and every case would be governed, not by any known or established rule, but by a rule made for the occasion,¹ and the result would be that the law itself would be most uncertain in the different views which juries might take of it.² Such decisions would furnish no rules for future guidance; similar cases arising subsequently might be decided in exactly the opposite way;³ and when the determination of the law of the case is left to whims and caprices of jurymen, there is no way of knowing with certainty what they have held it to be.⁴

would not be for wrong instructions, but for giving any charge at all. There is much difficulty in dealing with arguments which assume to qualify a system, and yet are not consistent with its uniform history. A jury system without a presiding judge who is something more than a puppet is not the jury system which we have inherited. It would not be profitable to collate or discuss the authorities at length. They differ in terms more than in substantial results. If the charge is proper it can only be so because it is to be respected. If juries disregard it they may be free from personal risk, and in cases of acquittal their verdict is conclusive. But the power to do wrong with impunity does not make wrong right. The same thing cannot be lawful and unlawful when done by different persons." Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 191.

Unfitness of Juries to Exercise the Function. — "Juries are generally composed of upright men, willing and anxious to discharge their duty to the best of their ability. But they are drawn from non-professional life, and lack the advantage of a legal education. When a cause is finally committed to them they are put under duress of an officer, and are not allowed to separate till their consideration of the case is closed. They are not allowed the use of books, not even the statutes which they may be required to construe. Twelve men thus situated may be admirably qualified to weigh evidence and determine facts, and may be justly entitled to all the encomiums passed upon them in that respect; but it is impossible to believe they constitute a suitable tribunal for the determination of important and intricate questions of law." State v. Wright, 53 Me. 339.

"It will hardly be supposed that men drawn each term from other occupations, who make no pretensions to legal knowledge, are to return in a few days to their former pursuits, and who are not responsible, even to impeachment, for their acts, will be more learned, sound, and safe expositors of those principles than judges." Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 570.

Giving the doctrine its broadest application, the jury might determine the meaning of statutes and pass upon their constitutionality. Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 553; Lynch v. State, 9 Ind.

Jurors neither have nor are supposed to have a competent knowledge to decide according to any settled principles of law, and it cannot be believed that there is any such inspiration in the jury-box as would enable twelve men to decide, per saltum, grave questions which elsewhere require care and thought and patient study, and time for undisturbed reflection.¹

(3) Absence of Remedy for Erroneous Decision. — It is also urged as a reason, that if the judge err in misstating a legal principle, the mistake may be remedied by appeal or error; but on the other hand, if the jury act on a misconception of law, there is practically no remedy.²

541; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 188; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 227; U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 23.

Can it be contended that the jury, who must necessarily apply to this test such knowledge of the law as they have acquired during the course of the trial, are a proper body to exercise this function? It has been said with obvious truth that law "is a science, requiring a long course of preparatory training, of profound study and active practice," which is to be expected of no one who has not dedicated his life to this pursuit. Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 236.

The most accurate and complete knowledge both of the written and the unwritten law is required, and, in America, an equally thorough and practical knowledge of constitutional law, as such knowledge is to be derived from records in adjudged cases, ancient and modern, and books of acknowledged authority in which they are embodied, from statutes, and from constitutions of the United States and the state in which the case arises, and adjudications thereon. "Here, then, may arise questions of law of the utmost difficulty and delicacy, and turning upon that abstruse but most necessary duty of judges, the exposition of statutes, involving inquiries respecting the ordinary and technical meaning of the language used, the preamble and other provisions of the same statute, all other statutes and parts of statutes on the same subject, the previous state of the common law, and the mischief intended to be suppressed, in order to ascertain the true intent and meaning of the legislature in the specific enactment in question." Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 190.

1. Townsend v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 151; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 553.

2. State v. Drawdy, 14 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 90; State v. Jeandell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 484; Stettinius v. U. S., 5 Cranch (C. C.) 592; Pierson v. State, 12 Ala. 154; Townsend v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 151; Duffy v. People, 26 N. Y. 591.

"If the judge err in misstating a legal principle the remedy is easy; by motion for a new trial or other proceeding to review his principles; if the jury act on a misconception of law there is no remedy, unless on our principle, that legal questions in criminal as in civil cases belong to the court, which has the power to correct such mistakes of the jury by granting new trials. This is the greatest protection to the accused; his highest and best security against oppression. For a jury may, under excitement or popular prejudice, convict as well as acquit against law; to whom, then, shall the accused look for protection, if the jury are the judges of the law?" State v. Jeandell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 484. "If the jury may decide the law, the court, it is true, may set aside the verdict; but as only two new trials can be granted to the same party, if three successive juries concur in an erroneous verdict the evil is without remedy. The most important controversies might thus be determined, contrary to the plainest principles of law, without a possibility of redress." Townsend v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 151. "If the jury is to decide all the law * * * their decisions of the law can never be reversed, for there are no means of ascertaining their decision upon a question of law so as to bring it into review before this court; but when the judge decides the law a bill of exceptions may be taken, and his judgment, if against the defendant, may be either affirmed or reversed upon a writ of error." Stettinius v. U. S., 5 Cranch (C. C.) 593.

(4) Contravention of Constitutional Provisions. — So it has been urged with much force that to invest juries with the power of judging the law is in violation of the constitutional provisions of the United States and of the several states.¹

(5) Contravention of Fundamental Common-law Maxims. — In conclusion, it may be stated that this practice is in contravention of the common-law maxim that it is the office of the judge to instruct the jury in points of law, of the jury to decide on matters of fact.²

Reason Why Juries Should Not Be Permitted to Judge the Law. — "If the jury, and not the court, are the proper expounders of the law, there could properly be no revision of a verdict on this ground, either by the judge trying the cause, by awarding a new trial, or by an appellate court upon the ground of misdirection. If they are the judges of what is and what is not law, why call on us, as a court of errors, to revise the action of the Circuit Court upon a point of law?" Pierson v. State, 12 Ala. 153.

1. State v. Wright, 53 Me. 338, in which it is said: "The Constitution of the United States confers upon the judges of the Supreme Court the power to adjudicate and finally determine all questions of law properly brought before them. To allow juries to revise, and, if they think proper, overrule these adjudications, would deprive them of their final and authoritative character, and thus destroy the constitutional functions of the court. The Supreme Court of the United States and of this state have decided that prohibitory liquor laws, like the one now in force in this state, are constitutional. Is it within the legitimate power of each successive jury impaneled to try a liquor case to reconsider that question, and, if they think proper, overrule those decisions? Is each successive jury impaneled to try a person charged with counterfeiting our national currency to be told that they may rightfully disregard the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the rulings of the presiding judge if they, in the exercise of their own judgment, think them wrong, and acquit the defendant upon the ground that the Act of Congress authorizing our national banks is unconstitutional? Every intelligent mind must perceive that it is impossible to maintain such a doctrine." Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 236, in which it is said, per Shaw, C. J., a majority of the court concurring, that "the judiciary department was intended to be permanent and coextensive with the other departments of government, and, as far as practicable, independent of them; and therefore it is not competent for the legislature to take the power of deciding the law from this judiciary department, and vest it in other bodies of men, juries, occasionally and temporarily called to attend courts, for the performance of very important duties indeed, but duties very different from those of judges, and requiring different qualifications. If, therefore, the statute of 1855, c. 152, in providing that it shall be the duty of the jury to decide, at their discretion, by a general verdict, both the law and the fact involved in the issue, can be so interpreted as to prescribe that the jury, consistently with their duty, may decide the law, upon their judgment, contrary to the decision and instruction of the court before whom the trial is had, as received and understood by them, such enactment is, in my opinion, beyond the scope of legitimate legislative power, repugnant to the constitution, and, of course, inoperative and void. In all those cases, therefore, in which a different direction has been given by any judge to a jury as the true interpretation of the statute, or affirming its constitutionality, exceptions to such rulings must, in my opinion, be sustained. If the statute will not bear that construction, but was declaratory only, it did not change the pre-existing law; then, for that reason, such instructions as above stated were given without warrant of law, and exceptions to them must, in like manner, be sustained." See also U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 53, as sustaining the view that to permit the jury to judge the law would be in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

4. Construction of Writings—a. WRITINGS WHICH REQUIRE NO EXPLANATION—(1) Statement of Rule.—Subject to a few exceptions, which will be noticed hereafter, it is the exclusive province and duty of the court to construe written instruments and to instruct the jury as to their meaning and effect.¹ The which it is said: "It was very early provided that the jury should not entangle themselves with questions of law, but confine themselves simply and exclusively to facts."

As has been well said by one of our greatest jurists: "The true glory and excellence of the trial by jury is this: that the power of deciding fact and law is wisely divided; that the authority to decide questions of law is placed in a body well qualified, by a suitable course of training, to decide all questions of law; and another body, well qualified for the duty, is charged with deciding all questions of fact, definitively; and whilst each within its own sphere performs the duty intrusted to it, such a trial affords the best possible security for a safe administration of justice and the security of public and private rights." It is a well-established rule of law that the true construction of written contracts is to be declared by the court, and not submitted to the finding of the jury. Emery v. Owings, 6 Gill (Md.) 199.

When the terms and language of a contract are ascertained it is the duty of the court, and not of the jury, to determine and declare what its meaning and intent is. Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co., 103 N. Y. 341.

Instrument Written in Foreign Language. — The court may instruct the jury as to the legal effect of a written instrument, though in a foreign language, and without the aid of a translation. Cowan v. Williams, 49 Tex. 380.

construe a writing and instruct the jury as to its legal import is erroneous, for a party is entitled to have a writing determining his rights properly construed and its terms and meaning explained to the jury, and he may easily be prejudiced by the court's refusal to do so.¹

Charging on Facts. — An instruction as to the legal effect of a writing is not objectionable as being a charge upon the facts of a case.²

(2) Reason for Rule. — Were the jury permitted to construe written instruments, there would be no certain legal significance assignable to any paper, for it would depend upon the peculiar notions of each particular jury under whose supervision it might be brought.³

(3) Exceptions to Rule. — Where a writing is not a dispositive instrument, but is put in evidence merely to show an extrinsic fact, it will be for the jury to say what inference of fact is to be drawn therefrom.⁴ When documents are offered in evidence as the foundation of an inference of fact, whether such inference

Execution of Instrument. — Where the evidence is undisputed it is for the court to determine whether a written instrument has been duly executed or not, so as to effect the purposes for which it was intended. Snyder v. Kurtz, 61 Iowa 593.

Meaning of Abbreviation. — The meaning of the abbreviation "etc.," in a contract of sale, is a question for the court, and not for the jury. Gray v. Central R. Co., 11 Hun (N. Y.) 70.

It would be a dangerous principle to establish, where parties have reduced their contracts to writing and defined their meaning by plain and unequivocal language, to subject their interpretation to the arbitrary and capricious judgment of persons unfamiliar with legal principles and settled rules of construction. Brady v. Cassidy, 104 N. Y. 155.

It is for the court to interpret the written contracts of parties; for when they have assented to definite terms and stipulations, and incorporated them in formal documents, the meaning of these, it is supposed, can always be discovered on inspection; nothing which is within the purview of the contract is left in doubt, and there is, of course, nothing to submit to the jury. McKenzie v. Sykes, 47 Mich. 295.

There Would Be No Certainty in the Law, for a misconstruction by the court is the proper subject, by means of a bill of exceptions, of redress in a court of error; but a misconstruction by the jury cannot be set right at all effectually. Neilson v. Harford, 8 M. & W. 822.

"It frequently happens that a writing is introduced merely as a fact or circumstance tending to prove some other fact. In such case it is generally but a link in a chain of evidence, the accompanying evidence being mostly or altogether oral. When that occurs the jury have to pass upon the whole transaction, of which the writing is but a part. The question then is not so much what the document means, but what inference shall be drawn from its meaning, and what effect it shall have towards proving the point at issue. The writing and all the concomitant evidence go to the jury together. Here the duty of the court is comparatively unimportant. It may pronounce what meaning the writing is or is not capable of, and whether it is or is not relevant to the issue; still the value and effect of such evidence is a ques-

can be drawn from them is a question for the jury.¹ The most authentic documents, when offered for such a purpose, become no more than mere letters or a written correspondence, which, when offered in evidence to prove a fact, are always to be interpreted by the jury.²

(4) To What Writings Rule Applies. — The duty of the court to construe and explain the effect of written instruments embraces every species of writings.

Contracts are always to be construed by the court.³

Deeds. — The rule has been held by a long line of decisions to apply to deeds.⁴ Where the facts touching the delivery of a deed are undisputed, their legal effect is nothing more than a question of law, upon which the court may be required to pass.⁵

Where the question is not on the interpretation of the writing, but on its effect as evidence of a collateral fact, it is to be submitted to the jury. Reynolds v. Richards, 14 Pa. St. 205.

Illustration of This Principle. — Where a written agreement was made for the sale of land, part of which was to be paid in cash and part in work, and a note was given for the latter amount on the payment of which the title was to be made, an order by the vendor to execute the deed is not so conclusive as to the payment of the note as to raise a legal presumption of its payment; it is presumptive evidence of payment which is to be submitted to the jury. *Reynolds v. Whether Instrument Constitutes Will. — Whether a paper offered in evidence is testamentary in its character, Magee v. McNeil, 41 Miss. 17; *Watford v. It is not within the province of a jury "to find" what appears on a record, or what a record discloses. When a record is offered in evidence and laid before the jury, it is the duty of the court to state to the jury what such record proves, and what their duty is in respect to the facts so proved. Gallup v. Fox, 64 Conn. 491.

Whether Entry Amounts to Judgment of Nonsuit. — The effect of an entry in the record of a suit in Virginia, that "by consent of the parties it is ordered by the court that this cause be dismissed, and that the defendant pay to the plaintiff his costs by him in this behalf expended," is for the court to determine. Carter v. Wilson, 1 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 362.

Oath on Entry of Judgment. — A jury cannot decide whether a judgment was entered of one term or of another, or whether an interlineation on the face of the record was made at the time of the original entry or not. This is a question of law for the court. Adams v. Betz, 1 Watts (Pa.) 426.

8. Order of Allowance to Attorneys. — In State v. Corbin, 16 S. Car. 539, it was held that the circuit judge might construe an order of court in a former cause allowing attorneys a certain per cent. of the fund collected, and submit it to the jury to say what was the amount of the fund then collected.

Order of Sale. — The construction of an order of sale made by the Orphans' Court is a question for the court and not for the jury, and must be determined from an inspection of the record alone, without the aid of evidence aliunde to show its meaning. Wyatt v. Steele, 26 Ala. 639.

Order Granting Letters of Administration. — It is the duty of the court to construe an order granting letters of administration, and to instruct the jury Decree Relied on as Release. — When the defendant relies on a decree of the Chancery Court to show a release of the plaintiff's cause of action, the court must construe the decree, and determine from its face whether it was intended to operate as a release, and a charge which submits this question to the jury is erroneous. *Shook v. — The court should pass upon the legal effect of a provision in an assignment for the benefit of creditors alleged to be illegal. Sheldon v. Dodge, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 217.

Assignment of Bonds. — The legal effect of a written assignment of bonds, where its terms are unambiguous, is a question for the court, and it should not be left for the jury to determine what was intended by the parties to pass by the assignment. *DeGraff v. Contracts are frequently made by correspondence between the parties, and “the construction of written documents is for the judge, whether many or few in number.” Goddard v. Foster, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 142.

Where a question in issue depends upon written correspondence put in evidence, the authenticity and bearing of which are undisputed, it is for the court to expound it and instruct the jury directly and distinctly as to its effect upon the issue, and not to leave it to the jury to interpret and construe this evidence. Battershall v. Stephens, 34 Mich. 68.

Whether a Written Correspondence Amounts to a Contract is a question of law for the court to decide. Falls Wire Mfg. Co. v. Broderick, 12 Mo. App. 378.

But where the contract rests partly in correspondence and partly in oral communications, the question whether there is or is not a contract is for the of corporations,¹ judicial opinions,² indorsements on negotiable paper,³ summons,⁴ memoranda of contracts,⁵ receipts,⁶ and specifications contained in patents.⁷ So, also, it is the duty of the court to charge the jury upon the legal effect of a record⁸ or other written evidence, and to state its effect.⁹

(5) Effect of Misconstruction. — If the court in its charge misconstrues a written agreement, this will, in general, be ground for reversal.¹⁰

(6) Effect of Submitting Construction to Jury. — If the construction of a written agreement is submitted to a jury and they construe it wrongly, this will also be ground for reversal,¹¹ but it is otherwise if they put a proper construction on the writing.¹²

Effect of Doubtful Language Used. — The effect of a written correspondence constituting agreement is for the court; the fact that the language of the letters containing the offer of acceptance is doubtful does not relieve the court of its duty, nor make the question one of fact for the jury. *Goddard v. When Error Will Not Operate to Reverse. — It is a legal duty pertaining exclusively to the court to put its own construction upon contracts in evidence before it, and if in so doing a word is misinterpreted, though it would be error, yet it might not of itself be sufficient ground to set aside the verdict, unless the jury are misled thereby. *Streeter v. contains technical terms of art or science which expert testimony is necessary to explain,¹ or where it contains ambiguous or doubtful words or terms which can only be rendered intelligible by extrinsic, concomitant facts or circumstances.²

Where Parol Testimony Is Admitted to explain the meaning of these words or terms, the determination of their meaning must, of course, be submitted to the jury.³ But does this submission carry with it the construction of the entire writing in question? In other words, are the jury merely to pass upon the meaning of the doubtful words or terms, or shall they determine the meaning and legal effect of the entire writing? The weight of authority as well as of reason answers this question in the negative. Although there are expressions in some opinions from which it might be inferred that the jury were to pass upon the meaning and effect of the instrument in question, it is confidently submitted that none of these decisions actually hold that the jury are invested with this power,⁴ and the true rule may be stated as

The court is the proper tribunal to construe and determine the legal effect and construction of instruments in writing; but where deductions are to be drawn from the conduct of the parties in the execution of such instruments, at the time, in the manner, and under the circumstances existing in the case, the jury are the proper forum to make such deductions. Keefer v. Mattingly, 1 Gill (Md.) 182.

3. See cases in the preceding note.

4. In Sidwell v. Evans, 1 P. & W. (Pa.) 386, the court makes this statement: "An admixture of parol with written evidence draws the whole to the jury." This is a dictum. So, in Denison v. Wertz, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 376, it was said: "There may be cases in which extrinsic circumstances are so connected with a writing as to render it necessary to leave the whole to the jury." The court goes on further and says: "But this was not such a case." In Watson v. Blaine, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 131, it was said that the court is to give the construction of a written instrument except where it cannot be understood without reference to facts dehors the writing, and in that case the jury are to judge of the whole together. The judgment, however, was reversed because the court submitted the construction of the writing to the jury. In Foster v. Berg, 104 Pa. St. 324, it was said: "The construction of a follows: "The construction of all written instruments belongs to the court alone, whose duty it is to construe all such instruments, as soon as the true meaning of the words in which they are couched, and the surrounding circumstances, if any, have been ascertained as facts by the jury."¹ written instrument is exclusively for the court, except when it cannot be understood without reference to facts not within the writing, and then the jury are to judge of the whole together." In this case it appeared that the pledgee of oil as collateral sold it to pay the note for which it was pledged, and turned over the surplus proceeds to the maker of the note. A third party, claiming that he owned the oil subject to the pledge and was entitled to the surplus proceeds, brought suit against the holder of the note therefor. The evidence of the transaction consisted mainly of telegrams, which the plaintiff claimed affected the defendant with notice of his ownership, and requested the court so to instruct the jury. This the court refused to do, but submitted the writings, together with all the evidence in the case, to the jury, to find whether the defendant has such notice. The reviewing court held that the court should have construed the writings, and have affirmed the plaintiff's point, with instructions as to the effect of extrinsic evidence which might, if believed, vary the written contract. The decision of Evans v. Negley, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 220, also goes to show that it is not the law in Pennsylvania that when extrinsic evidence is admitted to explain the meaning of a doubtful contract, the jury are not to construe the legal effect of the contract. In this case it is said: "The court must, in all cases, decide what the construction of the written contract is on its face, and how far that construction is affected by the facts which the jury shall suppose to be established." In Jennings v. Sherwood, 8 Conn. 122, it was said that though the construction of a written document is a matter of pure law where the meaning is to be collected from the document itself, yet where the meaning is to be judged of by extrinsic circumstances, the construction is usually a question of fact for the jury. It was held that where the defendants, in a case involving their right to fill up a certain creek, introduced parol evidence of an agreement in writing made many years before and since lost, which contained no direct recognition of the right in question, but from which, in connection with a variety of extrinsic circumstances, they sought to make out a recognition of such right, it might properly be left to the jury to determine whether that agreement in any manner recognized such right.

2. Humes v. Bernstein, 72 Ala. 557.

The jury "must judge of and determine the concomitant facts which are aids in interpreting the instrument, but the court must construe the instrument." Humes v. Bernstein, 72 Ala. 557.

"There is * * * a large class of writings where the meaning of particular words or phrases or characters or abbreviations must be shown by evidence outside the writing, and there may be extrinsic circumstances of one kind or another affecting its interpretation, which may be shown by oral testimony. Here the same rule, virtually applies as before. It is often but inaccurately said, in cases of the kind named, that the writing itself is to be passed upon and construed by the jury. Strictly that is not so. They find what the oral testimony shows, and the court declares what the writing means in the light of the facts found by the jury." State v. Patterson, 68 Me. 474.

"This in no wise militates against the rule that the meaning of the parties is to be ascertained from the language used in the writing, and that the interpretation of the instrument is a duty resting upon the court. The court may, however, in a proper case, direct the jury that the instrument may mean one thing or the other, depending upon extraneous circum-

The Jury Should Be Instructed Hypothetically what the construction of the writing shall be according to the facts which may be found by them.¹

Special Verdict. — In jurisdictions where special verdicts are permissible the facts may be found by special verdict, and then the court shall interpret the writing in view of such finding.² To leave the question of construction wholly to the jury as depending upon parol evidence admitted for the purpose of explaining the writing, is such error as will operate to reverse.³

stances to be found by them from the evidence." H. G. Olds Wagon Works v. Coombs, 124 Ind. 65.

Mercantile Terms. — In assumpsit for nondelivery of barley, it was proved at the trial that the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs offering them a certain quantity of "good" barley, upon certain terms; to which the plaintiff answered, after quoting the defendants' letter, as follows: "Of such offer we accept, expecting you will give us fine barley and full weight." The defendants, in reply, stated that their letter contained no such expression as "fine" barley, and declined to ship the same. Evidence was given at the trial that the terms "good" and "fine" were terms well known in the trade; and the jury found that there was a distinction in the trade between "good" and "fine" barley. It was held that although it was a question for the jury what was the meaning of those terms in a mercantile sense, yet that, they having found what that meaning was, it was for the court to determine the meaning of the contract; and the court held that there was not a sufficient acceptance. Hutchison v. Bowker, 5 M. & W. 535.

Alteration of Terms of Contract. — Where there is some question as to whether an instrument has been altered, this should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions, but it is error to leave the construction and effect of the instrument to the jury. *Zenor v. "If extrinsic circumstances or other testimony have been adduced in order to explain the instrument for the purpose of making certain the subject matter to which its terms apply, the determination of the issues so presented should be left to the jury. But the court should construe the writing, and apply such construction to each phase of the case developed by the testimony upon the special issue so raised." Long v. McCauley, (Tex. 1887) 3 S. W. Rep. 692.

Construction of Deed Depending on Parol Evidence as to Limits and Boundaries. — When the construction and operation of a deed as to the limits and boundaries of the lands conveyed depend upon extrinsic parol evidence, its construction and effect should be stated to the jury hypothetically, so that they may pass upon the facts. Humes v. Bernstein, 72 Ala. 546.

Contract as Affected by Usage. — When a word is used in a technical or peculiar sense as applicable to any branch of business, or to any particular class of people, evidence of usage is admissible to explain and illustrate it, and that evidence is to be considered by the jury; and the province of the court then is to instruct the jury what will be the legal effect of the contract, as they shall find the meaning of the word modified or explained by the usage. *Eaton v. The jury have the right to determine the existence of a parol contract, its extent, and limitations. They are to find not only what language was used, but its purport and meaning. In cases of written contracts, it is the duty of the court to define the meaning of the language used in them, but in verbal contracts this duty is confined to the jury; they are not barely to ascertain the words and forms of expression, but to determine their sense and meaning. Copeland v. Hall, 29 Me. 93; Herbert v. Ford, 33 Me. 93; Folsom v. Plumer, 43 N. H. 469.

Where the terms of a negotiation are left to oral proof, the question of what the parties said and did, and what they intended should be understood thereby, is single and cannot be separated so as to refer one part to the jury and another part to the judge; but in its entirety the question is one of fact. McKenzie v. Sykes, 47 Mich. 294.

Instances. — The terms of a contract for the adjustment of differences between copartners in the settlement of their firm business should be ascertained by the jury to whom an issue involving the same is submitted. Carl v. Knott, 16 Iowa 379.

In an action for contract of hire the question was whether the period of employment was by the year or by the month. The contract itself stated that the one party agreed to pay the other a specified sum "per year, payable in monthly payments." Payments were in fact made monthly, but in the course of the third year of employment the employee was discharged. Towards the close of the second year he had asked his employer if he was satisfied, and the latter had said that he was. It was held that these facts were for the jury, who were to determine what the understanding of the parties was as to the period of hire. Tallon v. Grand Portage Copper Min. Co., 55 Mich. 147.

It is the province of the jury, under proper directions from the court, to determine what was intended by conversations between parties, introduced in evidence, and the tendency and effect of it as in the nature of admissions. Murphy v. Bedford, 18 Mo. App. 279.

Question Not Determinable from Understanding of One Party. — The question as to whether the contract alleged to have been made was made, is a question for the jury, to be determined from the evidence of what the parties said and did, and not from the understanding of one of the parties of what he said or did. Farley v. Pettes, 5 Mo. App. 262.

2. Massey v. Belisle, 2 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 170, it which it is said that where the terms of a parol contract are precise and explicit, the meaning of those terms is a question of law. "But if the contract be by parol, and the parties dispute about the terms of the agreement, and these are obscure or destitute of precision or to be inferred from the conduct of the parties, the ascertainment of those terms is in the province and duty of the court to determine its legal effect,¹ and it is error to leave this question to the determination of the jury.²

Meaning of Terms. — Where the contract is by parol its terms are, of course, a matter of fact, and if those terms be obscure or equivocal, or are susceptible of explanation from extrinsic evidence, it is for the jury to find also the meaning of the terms employed.³ But the effect of a parol agreement, when its terms are given and their meaning fixed, is as much a question of law as the construction of a written instrument.⁴

Mining Laws. — Mining laws, when introduced in evidence, are to be construed by the court, and the question whether by virtue of such laws a forfeiture had accrued is a question of law, and cannot be submitted to a jury. Fairbanks v. Woodhouse, 6 Cal. 433.

Applicability of Ordinance to Circumstances. — A valid ordinance of a city stands on the same footing as a statute. An instruction which leaves it to the jury to determine the applicability of an ordinance to the circumstances, and its legal effect, is erroneous. Pennsylvania Co. v. Frana, 13 Ill. App. 91.

The Existence of Ordinance. — The instruction given by the court which submitted it to the jury to determine whether there was, at the time of the accident, a valid ordinance in the city of Chicago, requiring, etc., was erroneous in that it not only submitted it to the jury to determine matters of law as well as of fact, but to do so regardless of the evidence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 13 Ill. App. 634; Roulo v. Valcour, 58 N. H. 347.

Meaning of Ordinance. — It is the duty of the court, and not of the jury, to construe an ordinance the meaning of which is involved in a pending suit. Barnes v. Mobile, 19 Ala. 707; Platt v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 74 Iowa 127.

tions,¹ rules of a board of trade,² and instruct the jury as to their effect and meaning.

Foreign Law. — The existence of a foreign law, unwritten or statute, is to be proved as any other fact, and is a question for the jury,³ unless there are statutes allowing courts to take judicial notice of foreign laws and providing that foreign law-books may be received as evidence thereof.⁴ While this rule, as may be seen, is supported by the weight of authority, there are nevertheless some decisions to the effect that evidence of the existence of a foreign law is to be addressed to the court and not to the jury,⁵ and this doctrine finds support in the views of two of America's most able text-writers.⁶ It has also been held that where evidence is admitted to prove what construction has been given to a foreign statute, it is for the jury to determine what that construction is.⁷

In such a case, the statute being authenticated in the meaning pointed out by the Constitution of the United States and the Act of Congress, both the fact of its existence and its proper construction are matters for the court."

7. Holman v. King, 7 Met. (Mass.) 384. Compare Alexander v. Pennsylvania Co., 48 Ohio St. 623, in which it was held that where, on the trial of an issue respecting the law of another state, the decisions of the courts of that state are given in evidence to the jury, it is the province of the jury to determine whether or not such decisions have been made, but it is the duty of the court to construe and deduce from them the rules of law which they establish. The court says: "The first branch of the inquiry concerns the method by which the law of Pennsylvania is to be determined. * * * That it is a fact to be determined by the jury, is, we think, a well-established principle of law. * * * It does not follow from this, however, that where, as in the case at bar, numerous decisions of the several courts of a state are introduced in evidence to a jury as proof of the law of such state, the jury should be required to search through them, elucidate and announce the doctrine they establish; this is often a most difficult and delicate duty for courts and judges of the greatest skill, learning, and experience, to undertake. * * * In such case it becomes the duty of the court, as in the case of any other documentary evidence requiring construction, to construe the decisions." In this case the law to be determined was

Legal Effect of Law. — The existence of the foreign law having been ascertained, it is for the court to determine its legal effect and meaning, and properly instruct the jury thereon.¹

IV. INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY — 1. Charging on the Weight of the Evidence — a. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. — In most jurisdictions, as will be shown in subsequent sections of this chapter, it is considered an invasion of the province of the jury for the court to express any opinion as to the weight or sufficiency of the evidence in a cause being tried before it. This, however, is due almost entirely to organic and statutory provisions, expressly or impliedly prohibiting this practice.

b. RULE THAT COURT MAY EXPRESS OPINION AS TO THE WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE — (1) Statement of Rule. — In England, and in the United States courts, and in such of those states as have no constitutional or statutory provision against charging as to matters of fact, it is competent for the judge to give his opinion of the weight of any part or the whole of the evidence, provided the ultimate decision of the facts is left to the jury.² But when the judge gives his own views as to the an unwritten one. In the Massachusetts case the law to be construed was statutory; in both cases judicial decisions were admitted in the evidence; in one to show what the unwritten law was, in the other to show what a statute meant. It is submitted that on principle the jury had no more right in one case than in the other to determine the meaning of these decisions.

To invest the jury with the function of determining the effect of the law would be hazardous in the extreme; for the court trying the cause would be ignorant whether the verdict was given because the facts were mistaken, or the law misconstrued, and there would be no means of correcting an error if the jury put an improper construction on the law. *Inge v. "It is a solecism to say that a court may set aside the verdict of a jury if, in the opinion of the court, it be contrary to evidence, and yet that it is an invasion of the right of the jury over the facts if the court should present their views of the evidence in order to prevent the error instead of correcting it." U. S. v. Fourteen Packages of Pins, Gilp. (U. S.) 255.

1. Tracy v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 80.

The Line Which Separates the Respective Provinces of Court and Jury must not be overlooked. Care must be taken that the jury are not misled into the belief that they are alike bound by the views expressed upon the evidence and the instructions given as to the law. They must understand that what is said as to the facts is only advisory, and is in no wise intended to fetter the exercise finally of their own independent judgment. Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 439.

Whenever the judge delivers his opinion to the jury on a matter of fact, it should be delivered as mere opinion, them from the necessity of pronouncing an intelligent judgment.¹ They should be made to feel that upon them alone devolves the responsibility of their verdict. They ought not to be permitted to feel that they can take shelter under the opinion of the court.²

(2) Necessity of Informing Jury that Opinion is Advisory Only.—In order that the jury may not be misled into believing that they are bound to accept the opinion of the court, it would probably be better for the court so to state clearly and unequivocally, and a failure to do so may be reversible error.³ But if the language of the charge is such that the jury could have no doubt that it was the court's intention to leave the question on which the opinion was expressed to their determination, there can be no ground of complaint.⁴

and not as direction, and it should be impressed upon the jury that they are to decide the fact upon their own views of the evidence, and that the judge interposes his opinion only to aid them in cases of difficulty, or to inspire them with confidence in cases of doubt. New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Walden, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 519.

"In order to preserve a just balance between the distinct powers of the court and the jury, and that the parties may enjoy, in unimpaired vigor, their constitutional right of having the law decided by the court and of having the fact decided by the jury, every charge should distinguish clearly between the law and the fact, so that the jury cannot misunderstand their rights or their duty, nor mistake the opinion of the judge upon matter of fact for his direction in point of law. The distinction is all-important to the jury. The direction of the judge, in the one case, is obligatory upon their consciences, and so they will, and so they ought to, regard it; but his opinion in the other case is mere advice, and the jury are bound to decide for themselves, notwithstanding the opinion of the judge, and to follow that opinion no farther than it corresponds with the conclusions of their own judgment. Unless this distinction be kept steadily in view, and be defined with all possible precision, the trial by jury may, in time, be broken down, and rendered nominal and useless." New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Walden, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 518.

1. Ditmars v. Com., 47 Pa. St. 335.

2. Holder v. State, 5 Ga. 444.

The judge commented at large upon the evidence, and submitted it to the jury without any controlling direction. It is well settled that an exception cannot be taken to a mere commentary on the evidence. The jury listen to the remarks of the court upon the testimony with the deference due to learning and experience, but with a perfect understanding that they must decide upon matters of fact according to their own convictions. It is only when the judge has plainly misled the jury as to the tendency and effect of the evidence, or has given them some erroneous rule for their guidance in matters of law, that the court is required to interfere and award a new trial. Lansing v. Russell, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 521.

3. Where the court tells the jury that the evidence seems to prove certain facts, and there is evidence to the contrary, such a charge is erroneous if it fails to state that the jury are not bound by the opinion of the court. Anderson v. Avis, 62 Fed. Rep. 227.

It is not error for a trial court, in its charge to the jury, to express its opinion on a question of fact. If a party fears that the court's opinion will have undue influence on the jury, he may request a charge that the jury are the exclusive judges of that fact. *Ames v. Cannon River Mfg. "The language of the judge is such that they could have no doubt that it was his intention to leave the question of secession and abandonment, as claimed by the plaintiffs, to them, to find as a matter of fact, from the circumstances admitted between the parties. He, indeed, accompanied the charge with a clear expression of his own opinion as to the weight of the evidence on that point; but the very manner in which he introduced into the charge the expression of such opinion, it being immediately after he had submitted the decision of the question to the jury, showed that he did not intend to direct or control them on that point. It is competent in all cases, and in many expedient, for the court not only to discuss but to express its opinion upon the weight of the evidence, without, however, directing the jury how to find the facts; and this is a right necessarily limited only by its own discretion." First Baptist Church v. Rouse, 21 Conn. 167.

(3) Strong Expressions of Opinion Not Equivalent to Binding Instructions Proper. — In charging on the facts the court is vested with large discretion, and strong expressions of opinion will be upheld unless they amount to a binding instruction or a positive direction to find one way or the other.¹

Erroneous Opinion. — It has been held that even an erroneous opinion on the facts is not a ground for reversal if the final decision thereon is left to the jury.²

On Trial of a Libel Suit, the jury were told that if the necessary effect of the publication was to diminish the plaintiff's respectability and abridge his comforts by exposing him to disgrace and ridicule, or if its tendency was to impair his condition, or alter his condition in society for the worse, it was libelous; that there could be little doubt but that the publication in question was libelous; that the whole scope and tendency of it was libelous. It was held that this was no ground for a new trial. It was an expression of opinion as to whether or not the publication in question was libelous; but as it was coupled with a definition sufficient to enable the jury to know what in law constituted libel, it was submitting it to them to pass on, accompanied with an opinion of the judge that it was libelous, which they might follow or not as they thought proper. Hunt v. Bennett, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 647, affirmed in 19 N. Y. 173.

Pa. St. 103; Supplee v. Timothy, 23 W. N. C. (Pa.) 386.

The judge has no right to tell the jury that if he were in the jury-box he would find against the plaintiff, even if he qualifies by saying that they are not bound by his view of the evidence. Burke v. Maxwell, 81 Pa. St. 139, overruling Rutland Mfg. Co. v. Quinlan, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 456.

In Johnston v. Com., 85 Pa. St. 60, on a trial for burglary, the court in its charge said: "The commonwealth claims that evidence can establish nothing if this evidence will not establish the facts alleged in the third count, and I cannot, for my part, see how the jury can hesitate for a moment to convict the prisoner at the bar on the third count." This was held not to be error under the facts of the case, although it was a strong expression of opinion.

Considerable Latitude and Discretion must be left with the court in commenting on the evidence, and, unless it be unfair and misleading, the reviewing court will not interfere. Com. v. Doughty, 139 Pa. St. 383.

2. Taylor v. Ashton, 11 M. & W. 401; Hamet v. Dundass, 4 Pa. St. 178; Oyster v. Longnecker, 16 Pa. St. 269.

Slight inaccuracies in reviewing the facts, with expressions of opinion as to the merits, are not ground for reversal when accompanied by instructions that the facts are for the jury, and that they should be remembered, where the errors are not called to the attention of the court before the jury retire. Knapp v. Griffin, 140 Pa. St. 604.

3. Hoffman v. New York Cent. etc., R. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 526, 87 N. Y. 25; Burr v. Sim, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 150; Dimmick v. Sexton, 125 Pa. St. 334.

Instances. — It is not error in a judge to tell a jury that a witness was "a very willing witness;" and that her

tive weight of testimony given by several witnesses,¹ or to comment on the absence of testimony,² or to express an opinion that there is nothing in the case to reduce an offense charged to one of lesser grade,³ or to direct the attention of the jury to any matter in the case affecting the credibility of a witness.⁴ The decisions set out in the notes will further serve to show the application of these principles.⁵

(5) Court Not Bound to Express Opinion on the Evidence. — It must not be understood from anything heretofore stated that the court can be required to give its opinion on the weight of the evidence. This is a matter resting entirely in its discretion, and it is under no circumstances bound to do so.⁶

(6) How Federal Practice Affected by State — Constitutional or Statutory Provisions Against Expressions of Opinion. — Of course, testimony "deserves but little confidence," or to suggest the presumptions arising from the relationship and conduct of one of the parties. Burr v. Sim, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 150.

So a remark that the testimony of a certain witness is strong evidence as to a matter of fact, because it comes from an independent source, does not constitute error. Rosevere v. Osceola Mills, 169 Pa. St. 555.

Nor is it error to state that the character of the testimony is affirmative on the part of the plaintiff and of a negative quality on the part of the defendant. Rosevere v. Osceola Mills, 169 Pa. St. 555.

5. It is not error, in an action for false imprisonment, for the court to express an opinion that more than nominal damages should be given, where the question as to what amount should be given is fully left to the jury. Oswald v. Kennedy, 48 Pa. St. 9.

In an action on a justice's bond, where the sole question was whether he had collected the money sued for in his official capacity, it was not error for the court, after recapitulating the testimony, to express an opinion that the justice had acted and received the money officially, at the same time referring the evidence to the jury with instructions that if they were satisfied with this fact the bail was liable, though no suit was brought on the note. Ditmars v. Com., 47 Pa. St. 335.

An instruction that a former verdict and judgment, though admitted in evidence, should have little or no weight on the decision of the case because it was overruled as being founded on erroneous instructions, was held correct. Richardson v. Boston, 24 How. (U. S.) 188.

An instruction in a criminal case that "the suppression or secretion of pertinent evidence by a defendant is always a prejudicial circumstance, and is sometimes entitled to great weight," is proper. State v. Keith, 47 Minn. 559.

In an action against a railroad company for personal injury the judge remarked that, personally, he did not believe that the defendant was guilty of negligence in not locking a certain switch and in not opening another switch, and that the company was not liable for the misconduct of a boy whose trespass caused the accident. This instruction was held not such an invasion of the province of the jury as authorized a reversal. Fredericks v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 157 Pa. St. 103.

In Maine and Indiana judges are no longer permitted to give an opinion as to the weight of the evidence.

in a state where the statutes do not forbid the presiding judge to express his opinion upon questions of fact to the jury, a judge of the United States courts may do so in a cause on trial in a federal court sitting in that state,¹ and the powers of the courts of the United States in this regard are not controlled by state statutes forbidding judges to express any opinion upon the facts.² So a state constitution cannot, any more than a state statute, prohibit the judges of the courts of the United States from charging juries with regard to matters of fact.³

c. RULE THAT COURT SHOULD NOT EXPRESS OPINION AS TO THE WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE — (1) Statement of Rule. — As stated in a preceding section, the practice in most states forbids any expression of opinion as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence; and the rule, as will be subsequently shown, is most stringently enforced.⁴ Not infrequently judges evinced partisan-

Act of Congress, June 1, 1872, Construed. — The Act of Congress of June 1, 1872 (17 Stat. 197, § 5), provides that "the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding, in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, in the circuit and district courts, shall conform as near as may be to the same things, existing at the time in the courts of record of the state within which such circuit and district courts are held." The purpose of the provision is apparent upon its face. No analysis is necessary to reach it. It was to bring about uniformity in the law of procedure in the federal and state courts of the same locality. It had its origin in the code enactments of many of the states. While in the federal tribunals the common-law pleadings, forms, and practice were adhered to, in the state courts of the same district the simpler forms of the local code prevailed. This involved the necessity on the part of the bar of studying two distinct systems of remedial law, and of practicing according to the wholly dissimilar requirements of both. The inconvenience of such a state of things is obvious. The evil was a serious one. It was the aim of the provision in question to remove it. This was done by bringing about the conformity in the courts of the United States which it prescribes. The remedy was complete. The personal administration by the judge of his duties while sitting upon the bench was not complained of. No one objected, or sought a remedy in that direction. We see nothing in the act to warrant the conclusion that it was intended to have such an application. If the proposition of the counsel for the plaintiff in error be correct, the powers of the judge, as defined by the common law, were largely trenching upon. A statute claimed to work this effect must be strictly construed. But no severity of construction is necessary to harmonize the language employed with the view we have expressed. The identity required is to be in 'the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding.' The personal conduct and administration of the judge in the discharge of his separate functions is, in our judgment, neither practice, pleading, nor a form nor mode of proceeding within the meaning of those terms as found in the context." Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 441.

powers of the jury, and to prevent the court from overstepping the line which separates law from fact. Trial judges "cannot legally indicate their opinion, either expressly or impliedly, intentionally or otherwise, as to the credibility of the witnesses, or as to the truth of any fact in issue, and the subject of the evidence. They may declare the law fully and freely, but whether a certain contested fact has been proved is entirely for the jury, which involves both the credibility of the witness and the existence of the fact, whether said fact depends upon direct and positive testimony or upon inferences to be drawn from other proved facts. In fine, the whole matter of finding the facts of the case must be left entirely to the jury, without suggestions or leadings by the court."¹

When Rule Is Violated. — The inhibition against charging on the weight of the evidence (or charging "in respect to matters of fact," the language generally used in the constitutional or statutory provision prohibiting it), is violated when the court expresses in its charge its opinion upon the force and effect of the testimony, or of any part of it, or intimates its views upon the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence in whole or in part.²

The Practice in New Hampshire. — In a number of New Hampshire decisions it is said that it is not the ordinary practice for the courts of that state to express opinions in regard to the weight of the evidence, Haven v. Richardson, 5 N. H. 126; Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 460; Patterson v. Colebrook, 29 N. H. 94; but that it is not irregular for them to make such suggestions in relation to the facts as they may suppose will be useful to the jury, the matter being left to them for decision, Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 460; Patterson v. Colebrook, 29 N. H. 94; Flanders v. Colby, 28 N. H. 34.

In a recent decision on this question there is a dictum to the effect that the practice of expressing opinions on the weight of the evidence is obsolete. State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 416. See also Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 632; Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 404; State v. Hodge, 50 N. H. 520; Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 470; Nutting v. Herbert, 37 N. H. 346.

Judge's Personal Knowledge. — The fact that the presiding judge may have a personal knowledge of a matter of fact in dispute does not create any exception to the rule prohibiting him from expressing an opinion to the jury upon the question.¹

(2) Applications of Rule — (a) What Are Charges on the Weight of the Evidence. — In applying these principles it has been held erroneous for the court, in charging, to assume facts in controversy, or as to which there is no evidence,² or to state in charging that the evidence preponderates in favor of one side of the case if there has been any evidence tending to establish an opposite conclusion,³ or that the evidence is sufficient to maintain the issue,⁴ or that evidence is entitled to great weight,⁵ or is weighty and jury is perfectly unexceptionable only when the judge confines himself to the duty of setting forth the law applicable to the case, without either expressing or intimating an opinion as to the weight of the evidence or the credibility of witnesses. Ross v. State, 29 Tex. 500.

It is not permissible for the court to express any opinion to the jury on questions of fact, even though in conformity to the previously expressed opinion of the Supreme Court upon reviewing a question of fact. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Moranda, 108 Ill. 576.

Instances. — Where, in charging the jury in a criminal case, the court used the expression, "the guilt of defendant rests upon what is known as circumstantial evidence," this was a direct assumption of the guilt of the defendant, and was therefore manifest error. State v. Duffy, 6 Nev. 138. Whether there was evidence of incompetency, or whether there were circumstances which might be considered in connection with such evidence sufficient to show incompetency, are questions exclusively for the jury to determine, and a charge which assumes the existence of such evidence and of such circumstances violates the rule which forbids a judge to charge upon the weight of the evidence. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Christman, 65 Tex. 369.

Burt*, 98 Mass. 161, in which the court said: "A judge may 'state the testimony,' and this can hardly be done without calling the attention of the jury to the degree of weight and importance to be attached to particular facts, if they are proved or admitted. To say that certain circumstances deserve to be seriously considered, or are entitled to great weight, is not expressing an opinion as to what facts have been proved, but only instructing the jury with regard to the relative materiality and importance of different portions of the evidence."

"Violent Presumption." — A charge that certain indicia of fraud raise a "violent presumption" is erroneous. Shealy v. Edwards, 75 Ala. 411.

Strong and Irresistible Circumstance. — It is also error to charge that a fact "is a strong and almost irresistible circumstance." Marr v. Marr, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 385. Or "if you believe, etc., that would be a strong circumstance to show, etc." Phillips v. Williams, 39 Ga. 602; Stephenson v. State, 40 Ga.

Characterizing Evidence as a Scintilla. — The judge presiding at a trial court said that while there was some evidence to go to the jury, it was a bare scintilla, leaving the matter not proved. This was held erroneous. The evidence was competent or it was not, and it should have been withdrawn from the jury or submitted without expression of opinion. Boing v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co., 87 N. Car. 360.

13. Black v. Thornton, 30 Ga. 361. Compare People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, in which it was held that the mere statement that there is a conflict in the evidence in certain respects is not an expression of opinion upon the weight of the evidence, or a charge with respect to matters of fact.

That Averment in Declaration Is Disproved. — It is erroneous to charge that an averment in a declaration is disproved by the evidence. James v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 150.

Charge Intimating that Fact Is Proved. — A charge which in effect may induce the jury to believe that in the opinion of the judge there is evidence sufficient to prove, or strongly tending to prove, a controverted fact, is objectionable. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Christman, 65 Tex. 369.

An instruction that "it is a rule of law that no person can accept, without objection, the service of another without being liable to pay its reasonable value; and I can see no good reason why such rule of law should not be applied to this case," is erroneous. Richardson v. Hoyt, 60 Iowa 68.

So it is erroneous to charge: "If you disbelieve all the evidence for the state, and believe every word of evidence for the defense, I charge you that the defendant is guilty. But of course you can look to all the evidence and make up your verdict on it." White v. State, 56 Ga. 385.

Instances. — It is error to instruct, as being on the weight of evidence, that the permitting a certain obstruction near a railroad track was a want of ordinary care. Swanson v. Melton, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 265. Or that "the using of a flying or running switch without any precautionary signals is negligence in itself." Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Maxwell, 59 Ill. App. 673. Or that the scattering of sparks and cinders by a locomotive in such a way as to cause unnecessary danger is negligence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Knippa, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 730.

Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Brooks, 81 Ill. 245, in which it was held that on a question of marriage, an instruction to the jury that the testimony of the plaintiff to the fact of her marriage was better evidence bearing on the question than the alleged fact that there was no record at the proper place of such alleged marriage, was erroneous.

Oral Evidence and Depositions. — An instruction that, all other things being equal, evidence of witnesses given in the presence of court and jury is entitled to greater weight than that of witnesses whose depositions have been taken and read in evidence, is erroneous. Works v. Stevens, 76 Ind. 181; Millner v. Eglin, 64 Ind. 197.

Oral and Written Evidence. — An in-kinds of evidence are of equal credit,¹ or to comment on a failure to produce evidence,² or to direct the jury that they must discard certain evidence which they regard untrue,³ or where there is conflict in the evidence to charge that the jury must find the facts not proven so far as there is conflict,⁴ or that they must find for one or the other of the parties if they believe the evidence,⁵ or to charge that the plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to authorize a recovery unless it is overbalanced by proof of the defendant,⁶ or to charge that if there were two theories, one tending to show guilt and the other innocence, and both are reasonable, the jury must acquit,⁷ or to characterize a sale as a "so-called" sale,⁸ or to state that a person was "a fair purchaser for a valuable consideration."⁹

Further to illustrate the principles stated, the other decisions are set out in the notes.¹⁰

struction that, in determining what consideration induced the defendant to sign the note, the jury are to give greater weight to a letter written by the plaintiff to the defendant just after the signing than to the memory of the defendant at that time, is erroneous. McHard v. Ives, 5 Ill. App. 400.

1. Lockhart v. Camfield, 48 Miss. 470, where it was held that an instruction that a certificate of acknowledgment by a justice was entitled to equal credit with a disinterested witness was upon the weight of the evidence. See also Canada v. Curry, 73 Ind. 246.

2. Leonard v. Territory, 2 Wash. Ter. 381, where it was held erroneous to instruct that the fact that a prisoner does not disprove circumstances, if the jury believe he has the means of disproving them if false, lends additional weight to such as are proved; Baines v. Ullmann, 71 Tex. 529, where it was held that a charge which intimates to the jury that the testimony of a party to the suit might not be sufficient to warrant a finding upon it, if it appeared that he could have brought other testimony to the fact, was upon the weight of the evidence.

3. Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 391, in which it was said that the improbability of a statement by a witness may diminish his credibility; there is no rule of law which requires a jury to discard it from their consideration. See also Davidson v. Wallingford, 88 Tex. 619, where it was held error to instruct the jury to disregard all evidence of a witness which was apparently based on what others had told him.

10. Instances — In General. — The following instructions have been held erroneous: "This is a case in which you have to rely upon just such evidence as can be obtained, on account of the death of persons who might know facts. You are left to a limited source for evidence." McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584. "This case has already consumed too much unnecessary time. I have allowed this prisoner great latitude in introducing evidence at unseasonable times, in order that he might show, if he could, his innocence." Davis v. State, 57 Ga. 66. (b) What Are Not Charges on the Weight of the Evidence. — On the other hand, a charge of court is not a charge upon the weight of the sary to say anything further on the subject." Moore v. Robinson, 62 Ala. 537. "If you find from the evidence that defendant in his evidence testified, etc., and you find from the evidence the acts and conduct of the defendant in the transaction speak louder than the words thus testified by him, etc." Wilkinson v. Searcy, 76 Ala. 176. "It is your duty to carefully scrutinize any claim or set-off presented by the defendant." Farrow v. Flatt, 61 Ill. App. 118. That no damages having been alleged or proved, the jury could not render a verdict for damages. Levi v. Legg, 23 S. Car. 284. Where the incriminating evidence against the accused consists almost entirely of a similarity of tracks discovered near the scene of the crime and other tracks shown to have been made by the defendant, that in case there is nothing more than mere tracks, the jury would not be authorized to find the defendant guilty, unless there was some peculiarity about the tracks. Ware v. State, 96 Ga. 349. "The failure or inability of the defendant to show his innocence does not lend any probative force to the incriminative facts, if any, shown by the state, or raise any presumption of guilt against the defendant." Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 163. That if a parent did certain acts in correcting a child, that correction would exceed the bounds of moderation, and "would be barbarous in the extreme." Johnson v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 283. "If the jury believe all the evidence offered on behalf of the defendant, and all the evidence offered for the plaintiff so far as the same does not conflict with the evidence on behalf of the defendant, they should find in favor of the plaintiff." Dickeschied v. Wheeling Exch. Bank, 28 W. Va. 349.

In charging that the jury might give exemplary damages if the trespass was accompanied with circumstances of aggravation, the judge remarked by way of illustration: "Such [damages] as would teach the old gentleman not to violate the Sabbath, nor injure his health by riding in the night, nor interfere with the rights of others." This was held reversible error, Hair v. Little, 28 Ala. 237; as was also an instruction that "in determining whether or not plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the jury should take into consideration the familiarity of the plaintiff with the sidewalk, and the time of day and condition of the weather at the time he was injured," Bonham v. Crider, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 419; and that "any settlement or compromise between the parties after the levy of attachment would be binding to the extent of such settlement and compromise; but the giving the note sued on, and the payment of the six hundred dollars by the defendants, would not release the damages claimed by them in this suit, unless they were expressly and unequivocally released by the defendants, and the burden of showing such release is on the plaintiff," Lee v. Wilkins, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 287. So in an action for damages by the overflow of water caused by the breaking of a dam, it was held that an instruction that unless the dam had gates sufficient for certain specified purposes it was negligently constructed, was upon the weight of the evidence; also an instruction that it was the duty of the defendant to "constantly" examine the dam during the season of freshets. Weiderkind v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 65 Cal. 431. So, also, an instruction which directed the jury that it would be a false representation, if the defendants gave a written guaranty as a true description of their land, even though they did not know said description to be false, was held to be erroneous; so it is error to instruct that the representation by means of a guaranty was false, or that such fact was one that should have been determined by the jury. Phelps v. James, 79 Iowa 262.

An enumeration to the jury of a variety of circumstances detailed in the evidence, with a declaration that the circumstances are badges of fraud, and accompanied with the remark that it is for the jury to inquire how it is possible for the circumstances to have existed without fraud, is erroneous. Reel v. Reel, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 63. See also Freiberg v. Freiberg, 74 Tex. 122.

So, on a trial for assault with intent to commit murder, it being proved that the party assaulted was struck, the jury should not be charged that "though evidence unless it is fairly susceptible of a construction which would indicate to the jury that in the opinion of the court some contested issue has been proved, or from which the opinion of the court on such issue might be inferred.¹ Thus it has been held not erroneous to assume, in charging, admitted or uncontroverted facts;² or to explain the purpose for which evidence is admitted;³ or to declare the law applicable to a given state of facts;⁴ or to direct attention to a feature of the case presented death did not ensue, malice aforethought was legally implied from the act as though such result had followed." State v. Munco, 12 La. Ann. 625. So in such an action where the defense was insanity, an instruction is erroneous which tells the jury that "it is not sufficient to warrant an acquittal for the defendant simply to show that at times he acted and talked strangely and singularly; but that the jury must believe from the testimony that he was insane at the very time that he committed the offense, and that he was so insane that he could not distinguish right from wrong." State v. Smith, 53 Mo. 267.

Instructions in Prosecutions for Homicide. — In prosecutions for murder the following instructions have been held objectionable: That "murder is of very frequent occurrence in the community, and when a case is clearly made out, there should be an unqualified verdict, to deter others from crime," State v. Shields, 11 La. Ann. 395; that "if I were on the jury I would bring in a verdict of murder in the second degree," Warren v. State, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 130; that when the proof to sustain an alibi "is not satisfactory, the failure to prove it satisfactorily is a circumstance unfavorable to the defendant; but it is no more so than an attempt to clear himself by any other false or fabricated testimony," Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511; that "while it is true that innocent persons have been convicted in the past, there is no proof in this case of any such fact," and that the jury "are not justified in considering such matters in determining the guilt or innocence of this defendant," which "must be determined from the evidence admitted in the case, and not from sympathy or prejudice," and that "if all criminals must go free because there is a possibility of jurors making mistakes, society might as well disband," People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 233; that the defendant is guilty as principal or not at all, where there was some evidence that he aided and abetted the murder, Lovejoy v. State, 82 Ga. 87.

Assuming Nonexistence of Evidence. — In assuming the nonexistence of evidence excluded, or not offered, the court does not interfere with the discretion of the jury. Territory v. Gay, 2 Dakota 144.

3. Davis v. Gerber, 69 Mich. 246; Howerton v. Holt, 23 Tex. 51; Clark v. State, 31 Tex. 574; Ross v. State, 29 Tex. 499.

Instance. — A charge reciting the facts as claimed to have been proved, and giving the law upon them if found by the jury to be true, is not an instruction upon the facts. Pritchett v. Overman, 3 Greene (Iowa) 531.

When the plaintiff's title, as alleged, consists of a number of facts establishing a continued possession and claim under a color of title; with defined on conflicting evidence, without assuming that it is established, but merely for the purpose of announcing the law applicable thereto;¹ or to state that evidence which was objected to during the progress of the trial was competent evidence, its sufficiency being left to the jury;² or that evidence is open to two constructions without directing which to take;³ or to state what the real issue is when the attention of the jury has been drawn therefrom by the line of argument;⁴ or to state that the plaintiff "brings evidence to show;"⁵ or that an instruction is refused because there is no evidence on which to base it;⁶ or, in jurisdictions where summing up is still allowed, to state or recapitulate the evidence;⁷ or to analyze, compare, and explain the evidence;⁸

boundaries, for ten years, it is not error for the court to enumerate in the charge the various facts thus alleged, and to instruct the jury to find for the plaintiffs if they had been proved. Such a charge is not liable to the objection of being a charge on the weight of evidence. Andrews v. Parker, 48 Tex. 94.

1. Owens v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 67 Tex. 679.

2. Carroll v. Roberts, 23 Ga. 492.

An instruction that "all the evidence produced and admitted in the case is legal evidence; whether it is credible, or worthy of credit, is a matter for the jury to determine from all the facts and circumstances in proof in the case," is not a comment on the evidence. State v. Munson, 76 Mo. 109.

3. Wiley v. Stanford, 22 Ga. 385.

4. State v. West, 43 La. Ann. 1006.

Where most of the testimony related to the question of payment and is conflicting upon that question, an instruction that the main question of fact is the question of payment is not a charge with respect to matters of fact. Low v. Warden, 77 Cal. 94.

In Com. v. Barry, 9 Allen (Mass.) 276, Chief Justice Bigelow says: "The prohibition must be regarded as a restraint only on the expression of an opinion by the court on the question whether a particular fact or series of facts involved in the issue of a case is or is not established by the evidence. In other words, it is to be construed so as to prevent courts from interfering with the province of juries by any statement of their own judgment or conclusion upon matters of fact. This construction effectually accomplishes the great object of guarding against any bias or undue influence which might be created in the minds of jurors, if the weight of the opinion of the court should be permitted to be thrown into the scale, in deciding upon issues of fact. But further than this the legislature did not intend to go. The statute was not designed to deprive the court of all power to deal with the facts proved. On the contrary, the last clause of the section very clearly contemplates that the duty of the court may not be fully discharged by a mere statement of the law. By providing that the court may also state the testimony, the manifest purpose of the legislature was to recognize and affirm the power and authority of the court, to be exercised according to its discretion, to sum up the evidence, to state its legal effect and bearing on the issues, and to indicate its proper application under the rules of law."

Stating Recollection of Evidence. — The judge may call the attention of the jury to the evidence and state his recollection of what has or has not been testified to, submitting the same to their consideration and judgment. Eddy v. Gray, 4 Allen (Mass.) 435. Thus, in summing up the evidence, the court said: "Whether her testimony be true or false, she testified most positively that the prisoner was the man who committed the rape upon her," and was about to proceed to consider other testimony, when the prisoner's counsel called attention to his failure to state or to read from the evidence, at the jury's request, the parties being present;¹ or to charge upon facts on which the jury are not called upon to pass;² or to direct the jury to find a stated verdict if they believe that certain facts have been proved;³ or to say that a fact is proved if the jury believe the witness who testified thereto;⁴ or to state that there was evidence of a circumstantial nature;⁵ or to direct the jury to look to the whole evidence, so far as they could give credit to it, and not to one particular circumstance alone which might tend to a different conclusion;⁶ or that if the evidence cannot be reconciled the jury should determine who of the witnesses are entitled to the greater credibility;⁷ or to state that there is no evidence in support of a particular fact or issue when such is the case;⁸ or to refer to acts or declarations in evidence to make clear the rules of law which limit their effect.⁹

The decisions set out in the notes will further serve to show the application of the rule.¹⁰

that the prosecutrix had said that she did not know the woman C. G., to which the judge said: "Yes, I believe that she did say that." This was held not an intimation of opinion. State v. Freeman, 100 N. Car. 429.

Misstatement of Fact.—If the judge inadvertently misstates a fact in evidence, the counsel should, at the time, call his attention to it, in order that it may be corrected, otherwise he waives exception thereto. Such a misstatement is not an "expression of an opinion upon an issue of fact arising in the case," within the meaning of Maine Stat. 1874, c. 212. Grows v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 69 Me. 412.

1. Green v. State, 43 Ga. 368.

Enumeration of Circumstances Leading to an Irresistible Conclusion of Fact.—Where a simple enumeration of circumstances leads to an irresistible conclusion of fact, the court cannot be considered as expressing an opinion on such fact contrary to the statute, in merely making such enumeration, where there is no peculiar significance of voice or manner in making it. State v. Noblett, 2 Jones L. (N. Car.) 418.

2. State v. Sims, 16 S. Car. 495. In this case the court said: "We do not see that the circuit judge violated the inhibition of art. 4, § 26 of the Constitution, by charging upon the facts of the case. What he said about there being a tumultuous assemblage at Griffin's store on that day, and the calm that came over the crowd when the police arrived, was not pertinent to the issue. The jury was not charged with the finding of these facts. Their inquiry was whether after the police arrived they had been riotously assaulted and beaten, and whether a prisoner subsequently arrested by them had been rescued from their grasp. The statement of the judge objected to had nothing to do with these questions, and could not have affected the verdict."

were held not to be on the weight of the evidence: a hypothetical statement which presupposes as its basis that the issues have already been determined, State v. Benner, 64 Me. 267; a charge as to the title to property sufficient to sustain an indictment for wilful burning, Jones v. State, 5 Tex. App. 130; "if you find a verdict for the plaintiff, you will answer," followed by the questions to be answered if the verdict is for the plaintiff, Smith v. Dawley, 92 Iowa 312; that the verdict of the jury should be one which would satisfy the jurors' consciences that they had done justice to the people, and that such a verdict would satisfy the people, People v. Harper, 83 Mich. 273; "You may consider this as a circumstance in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant," State v. O'Neil, 13 Oregon 183; a statement that rape is a charge easily made, but difficult to be disproved, Morrissey v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 73 Iowa 389; the issue by the trial judge of a bench warrant on the motion of the prosecuting attorney for the arrest and detention of a witness who had just testified before the jury on the charge of perjury, State v. Strado, 38 La. Ann. 562; that if the jury "find from the evidence that the defendant did wilfully set fire to the stack of fodder, as charged against him, * * * then he would be guilty of the offense charged, notwithstanding a portion only of the stack of fodder was consumed," Cesure v. State, 1 Tex. App. 20; that in an action for malicious prosecution the jury should take into consideration certain facts in determining whether there was malice and want of probable cause, such an instruction not intimating that the facts, if found true, constitute malice and probable cause; Keesling v. Doyle, 8 Ind. App. 43; an interrogatory as follows: "Would a prudent man have driven his mule across the bridge with two ladies in his buggy, with that sign staring him in the face? Would a man of ordinary prudence have driven or led, as Mr. B. did?" Acker v. Anderson County, 20 S. Car. 499 [in this case the court could not have more strongly expressed his opinion that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, unless he had told the jury so, in so many words]; an instruction which, after reciting all the testimony relating to a material inquiry of fact, asked the jury if they could lay their fingers on any part of it showing the fact, McRae v. Lilly, 1 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 118 [this also seems to be a pretty strong intimation of opinion]; an interrogatory as follows: "Has the state shown to your satisfaction that the accused is guilty of the crime with which he stands charged? Does this array of facts and circumstances in proof before you show beyond all reasonable doubt — do they convince you beyond all reasonable doubt — that he is guilty of the crime?" Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 269; that a witness appeared to have given a very fair and candid statement, and seemed to be a creditable man, State v. Davis, 4 Dev. L. (N. Dale*, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 1059; an instruction to "look to all the testimony, and the fact that some of the witnesses have been impeached, in order to decide whether or not they should believe those witnesses as to any facts that the defendants are required to establish, and, if they believe them, how far," Howard v. Colquhoun, 28 Tex. 134; the following language in a charge: "In so far in this case as circumstantial evidence is relied on to convict," this not being an intimation that the court thought there was direct evidence in the case, Roe v. State, 25 Tex. App. 33; an instruction that "the evidence is sufficient on which to convict of the charge," in response to a request by the defendant for an instruction "that the evidence does not sustain the charge;" such instruction applies only to the sufficiency in law of the evidence to sustain the indictment, provided the jury shall be satisfied with its weight, Com. v. Lawless, 103 Mass. 425; that certain evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find a certain fact, in response to a request by a party for a ruling that it was insufficient, Com. v. Brigham, 123 Mass. 248; that if the jury find the testimony of certain facts to be true, the plaintiff can recover where such facts, if established, would entitle the plaintiff to recover, Partridge v. Sterling, 79 Mich. 303; an inquiry by the judge, of defendant's counsel, as to whether it would be fair to permit a declaration of an absent person imputing criminality to the prosecutrix to be given in evidence, and refuse his subsequent denial of the truth of the charge, State v. Brown, 100 N. Car. 519; a statement that if the contract in the suit had been performed to its full extent and no conditions had exonerated the defendant, it would have been a very profitable matter to the plaintiff; that as it resulted, he might have lost the opportunity of putting a profit of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars in his pocket; and that it is a great disappointment to a man to lose such an amount as that, Oakman v. Boyce, 100 Mass. 477; an instruction: "Did the plaintiffs, in placing their cotton or having it placed on the platform of the compress association, act as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted, taking into consideration its surroundings, its proximity to passing engines, etc., the purposes for which it was placed there, etc.?" Martin v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 3 Tex. Civ. App. 133; an instruction in an action for keeping a gambling device, that the law does not tolerate any subterfuge in violation of its penal laws, and that if the defendant employed any person to watch such device, and if there was money lost and won upon it, a conviction could be had, Jeffries v. State, 61 Ark. 308; an instruction that direct and positive evidence is not required to establish fraud, but may be gathered or inferred from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, and that if the jury believe certain facts to be proved they must find fraud, Alberger v. White, 117 Mo. 347; that a witness might be discredited if it was shown that he had sworn falsely in the case, or had made contradictory statements under oath upon material points, as well as by introducing witnesses to swear that his reputation for truth and veracity was bad, and if it appeared to them from all the circumstances proved that a designated witness had sworn falsely upon one or more material points, or if he had contradicted himself, that they should consider the same in determining the weight to be given to his evidence; that tain testimony, and in effect impose on the jury a terse but powerful argument.¹

(4) Intimation of Opinion Otherwise than by Express Instruction.—An incidental expression of opinion during the course of the trial, if not expressed in the hearing of the jury, furnishes no ground of exception,² but the opinion of the court can be as effectively conveyed to the jury by expressing it in their hearing while ruling upon evidence as by embodying it in what purports to be a declaration of the law for their instruction.³ Accordingly, it has been held that in ruling on the evidence an expression of opinion on the evidence which is not necessary in order to explain the ruling is erroneous.⁴

the legal effect of such false swearing would be to impair the credibility of the witness, but that they must determine the weight to be given to his evidence, Bowles v. Glasgow, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 714; a charge in an action by the president of a railroad company to recover upon a quantum meruit that "the salaries of railroad presidents in the land are very high, much higher than the salaries of the officers of the state, * * * and are made so because of the great responsibility attached to the office," and the high order of ability required, Bowen v. Carolina, etc., R. Co., 34 S. Car. 217; an instruction that "the question for you to determine is, has the plaintiff's property been permanently damaged by" putting in the track and taking up a part of the street, in an action for injury to property in which there was evidence that in front of plaintiff's property a good deal of the street had been cut away by the unauthorized construction of the defendant's track, McFadden v. Schill, 84 Tex. 77.

Instances.—Thus, in a trial for murder, where the defendant testified in his own behalf, to ask the jury whether there was one in a thousand who, under such circumstances, could resist the temptation to sway from the truth, State v. Addy, 28 S. Car. 4; so, also, the following instruction in a murder trial, on the question as to whether the defendants believed that they were in peril, was condemned: "But in solving that question you will ask yourselves, how could it be that either of the prisoners could have had such a belief? The dead man was unarmed. He was sitting on a trunk, taking off his wet clothes, and putting on dry clothes. When he was approached, he rose in his place. He had on nothing at all but his shirt and drawers, and one leg of his breeches was on, and one leg was off. Was the deceased, then, in such a condition, or did he have such a weapon, as to raise a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the father and son that the son was in danger of great bodily harm, or of losing his life?" State v. Norton, 28 S. Car. 572.

2. Anderson v. State, 42 Ga. 10; Phillips v. Beene, 16 Ala. 720.

"It cannot be seriously contended that every expression of opinion by the court during the progress of the trial, if erroneous, shall furnish ground for reversal. Such opinion must, in some way, influence the result of the cause, or be supposed to do so, by being given in charge to the jury, or by a refusal to charge, or by being connected with the exclusion or admission of the evidence. A judge may decide right from a wrong reason, and if his decision be right, the revising court will not reverse, whatever erroneous propositions of law he may assume as the predicate for his conclusion." Phillips v. Beene, 16 Ala. 723.

3. State v. Harkin, 7 Nev. 383.

4. State v. Harkin, 7 Nev. 383. In this case, a murder trial, the prosecution contended that death resulted from a kick inflicted on the breast of the deceased, and introduced testimony tending to show that the defendant knocked the deceased down and kicked him on the face and also on the breast. The defendant contended that the deceased was not kicked on the breast, and that the wound or bruise on the breast re-

Determining Facts Preliminary to Certain Evidence. — It frequently happens, however, that the admissibility of evidence depends upon the establishment of some necessary preliminary facts, and the court must determine what facts have been shown to exist, in order to determine what further facts may properly be shown. Where this is the case it has been held that an expression of opinion is not erroneous; that the mere announcement of the ruling may in itself be equivalent to an expression of an opinion.¹

With This Exception it is probable that any expression of opinion not given by way of instruction, whether purporting to be addressed to counsel or to the jury, will operate to reverse.²

sulted from a fall which, it was testified, happened the day before the affray. The testimony tending to establish the fact of the kicking on the face was much stronger and more positive than that going to show the kicking on the breast. The prosecution was allowed, against objection of the defendant, to prove by physicians that they detected signs of bruises on the breast, and the objection was taken that the state had not shown that any wound or bruise had been inflicted upon the breast of the deceased by the defendant. In overruling this objection the judge remarked, in the presence of the jury, that there was "as much testimony that defendant had kicked deceased upon the chest, as upon the face."

State v. Dick, 2 Winst. L. (N. Car.) 46. In this case a question arose as to the withdrawal of certain confessions of the prisoner. The court declined withdrawing them, but remarked to the solicitor for the state that after the other evidence already given in the cause, he, the solicitor, might withdraw them if he chose to do so, which the solicitor declined.

1. Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 200, in which it was held that when the admissibility of certain evidence depends upon the question whether some preliminary fact has been proved, it is not error for the court to state to counsel, in passing upon the question, that as the case then stands, prima facie, such fact had been proven; Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 413, where on a motion to reject a marriage contract as evidence, on the ground that its execution had not been proven, the court, in passing on the motion, said that certain evidence raised "a strong presumption that the contract was executed." See also People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 483. In this case the defendant, at the close of the case for the prosecution, moved for a discharge on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to go to the jury. In ruling on the motion the court stated certain facts which in its opinion the evidence tended to prove, and the revising court held that this was not erroneous.

2. In an action to recover for a map, the defense set up that the view of the defendant's residence, which was printed thereon, was incorrect. After the evidence had been submitted, the defendant's attorney asked the court whether or not his honor would know the view to be the residence of defendant, were defendant's name taken from the view. The court replied: "I do not know that I would." This was held a ground of reversal. Andreas v. Ketcham, 77 Ill. 377.

A remark that this was "a civil suit, but if the jury considered the evidence they would find the case decidedly criminal," was held reversible error. Furhman v. Huntsville, 54 Ala. 263.

Remarks as to Character of Witness. — If the character of a witness is called in question on the trial, and the judge makes a remark from the bench indorsing his respectability, it is good cause for reversal if the testimony of the witness is material. McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300.

This Is Based on the Soundest Reasons. — From the high and authoritative position of the judge presiding at a trial before a jury, his influence over them is necessarily very great, and he has it in his power, by words, or actions, or both, materially to prejudice the rights and interest of one or the other of the parties. McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 320.

The right of a party to have the jury pass upon the facts, uninfluenced by any opinion of the court, "cannot be lawfully denied by the simple evasion of looking at the counsel instead of at the jury."¹

(5) Effect of Subsequent Charge Leaving Question to Jury. — Where the trial judge, in charging, intimates an opinion as to the weight of the evidence, or as to the credibility of the witnesses, the error is not cured by subsequently instructing that the jury are the sole judges of such matters,² or that no expression of opinion was intended,³ or that the court had no right to trench upon their province in that regard.⁴

2. What May Be Assumed in Instructions and Requests — a. ASSUMPTION OF MATTERS IN CONTROVERSY — (1) Statement of Rule. — An instruction which assumes the existence or non-existence of material facts in issue invades the province of the jury, and is erroneous if there be any evidence in conflict with such assumption.⁵ Courts, in their charges, should not directly or indirectly assume any controverted fact, nor use equivocal phrases which may leave such an impression. As has been well

3. State v. Harkin, 7 Nev. 377; State v. Dick, 2 Winst. L. (N. Car.) 45; State v. White, 15 S. Car. 393. In this last case the court said: "The admonition given to the jury at the close of the charge, though eminently proper, 'that the law makes them the sole judges of the evidence, and that the judge can express no opinion on the facts, or if he does they are not bound by it,' was not, in our opinion, sufficient to do away with the effect of the previous expression of opinion as to the character of the homicide in question. For the jury are not only not bound by any expression of opinion by the judge as to the facts, but the object of the constitutional provision is to preserve the jury from being in any way influenced by the judge's opinion as to the facts, and when, as in this case, a very decided opinion is expressed by the judge as to the real point in issue — the character of the homicide — we think it not unlikely that some or perhaps all of the jury may have been influenced by such an expression of opinion from so high a source, and that, therefore, a new trial should be granted."

1. People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142.

It is error for the court in its charge.

is conflicting the jury should be left to find the facts without the interference of the court.¹ Hence, if there is any evidence tending to prove a fact, no matter how slight, the court has no right to take such evidence from the consideration of the jury.²

Not Cured by Instructions Submitting Question. — So it has been held erroneous to assume the existence of a fact in an instruction, though other instructions submitted the question whether or not it did exist.³ But such an assumption will not be ground for reversal if the charge, taken as a whole, presents the case properly to the jury.⁴

Refusal Proper. — It follows, then, from what has been said, that a request for an instruction, subject to the vice mentioned, should be refused.⁵ But, on the other hand, if a request assumes that to refer to facts in controversy "as shown by the evidence." Commercial F. Ins. Co. v. Morris, 105 Ala. 498.

1. Bradley v. Coolbaugh, 91 Ill. 148. It Is the Province of the Jury, not of the court, to find from the evidence what is proved. The jury alone can determine the credibility of the evidence and what it proves, and a charge that assumes to do this is erroneous. Thompson v. State, 47 Ala. 37; David v. Malone, 48 Ala. 428.

Timberlake, (Ala. 1897) 22 So. Rep. 431.

However slight the effect of testimony, and however little the consideration to which it is entitled from the jury, still its weight is to be determined by them, and should not be determined beforehand by the court in an instruction. Miller v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 31 Iowa 216.

When, from the circumstances proved in a case, a reasonable suspicion or presumption of a fact may be inferred, although the court might think the jury well justified in not inferring such fact, yet it is not error for the judge in his charge to submit the matter to the jury to be passed upon by them. Where certain instructions given assumed that an alleged settlement was not made, which was the question at issue and upon which the evidence was conflicting, it was held that the fact that other instructions were given stating that if the settlement had been made, then, etc., did not cure the error. wards object that there was no evidence in the cause justifying the submission of the question.¹ A party who has requested an instruction, which is refused, cannot object to an instruction substantially the same, that it assumes facts of which there is no evidence.²

(2) What Is an Assumption — Illustrated. — The decisions set out in the notes hereto serve to enunciate the principles stated in the preceding subdivision, condemning instructions or requests which assume controverted facts.³

People's Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co., 173 Pa. St. 15; Draucker v. Arick, 161 Pa. St. 357; Means v. Gridley, 164 Pa. St. 387; Lynch v. Welsh, 3 Pa. St. 294; Groft v. Weakland, 34 Pa. St. 304; Arbuckle v. Thompson, 37 Pa. St. 170.

Texas. — Hatch v. De La Garza, 22 Tex. 176; Hicks v. Bailey, 16 Tex. 229; Duffel v. Noble, 14 Tex. 640; Gray v. Burk, 19 Tex. 228; McCown v. Schrimpf, 21 Tex. 22.

Wisconsin. — Morse v. Gilman, 18 Wis. 373; Ohlweiler v. Lohmann, 88 Wis. 75; Pickett v. Crook, 20 Wis. 358; Timm v. Bear, 29 Wis. 254.

United States. — White v. Van Horn, 159 U. S. 3; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Davidson, 76 Fed. Rep. 517.

1. Auburn Bolt, etc., Works v. Shultz, 143 Pa. St. 256.

2. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. (U. S.) 307.

3. Account — Action on. — On the trial of an action on account, a statement that the defendant substantially admits the account is objectionable if he does in fact dispute it. Clifton v. Litchfield, 106 Mass. 34.

Agency. — Where the evidence was conflicting as to whether K. was agent of the defendant company, it was erroneous for the charge to assume that he was agent, and to charge that the company was chargeable with knowledge communicated to him. East Texas F. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 82 Tex. 631.

In an action against a married woman, where it is a disputed question whether her husband acted as her agent or not in contracting a debt in suit, it is improper to assume the fact of his agency. Vaughn v. Miller, 76 Ga. 712.

Where there was conflicting evidence as to whether the defendant's agent had power to waive a certain stipulation in a contract, an instruction assuming that the company was bound by his act was erroneous. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. Rep. 918. And where the authority of an agent for the defendant is a mixed question of law and fact, it is error for the court in an instruction to assume such authority to the full measure necessary. Haines v. Inter Ocean Pub. Co., 20 Ill. App. 207.

In an action to recover for medical services rendered to a married woman, the evidence being conflicting as to whether or not the defendant acted as agent in getting the plaintiff's services, it was erroneous to charge that the defendant did so act. Ellison v. Sessions, (C. Pl.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 108.

Alteration of Written Instrument. — An instruction to the jury that in case they found that the draft sued on had been altered the plaintiff could not recover unless he explained the alteration is erroneous where the draft shows no alteration. Patten v. Newell, 30 Ga. 271. So in an action on a note, there being no dispute as to the defendant's signature, and the issue being whether the plaintiff had fraudulently altered the amount, it was erroneous so to charge the jury as to give them the idea that the defense denied the execution of the note altogether. Winters v. Mower, 163 Pa. St. 239.

Award. — A request for an instruction that an award was void because of the improper conduct of the arbitrators, without leaving it to the jury to find any facts constituting the misconduct, is erroneous. Roloson v. Carson, 8 Md. 208.

Contracts — Actions on. — On a trial of an action for breach of contract

(3) What Is Not an Assumption — Illustrated. — An instruction which states hypothetically facts which the evidence tends which both parties agree was terminated at a certain time, and where they differ only as to whether the termination was by mutual consent, the refusal of instructions framed on the assumption that the contract subsisted some months later, is not erroneous. Stone v. Sanborn, 104 Mass. 319.

Criminal Prosecutions. — In a criminal prosecution it is erroneous for an instruction to assume the guilt of the defendant, State v. Whitney, 7 Oregon 386; State v. Mackey, 12 Oregon 154; People v. Bishop, 81 Cal. 113; Brown v. State, 3 Tex. App. 295; White v. State, 21 Tex. App. 339; or to assume that the name of the party killed is correctly stated in the indictment, State v. Dillihunt, 18 Mo. 331; or to assume that a knife used was not a dangerous weapon, and that it was kept concealed, Berry v. Com., 10 Bush (Ky.) 19; or to assume that the defendant used a deadly weapon, Wharton v. People, 8 Ill. App. 232; or to assume that the defendant used the instrument, with which he was charged to have slain the deceased, in a manner calculated to produce death, Leiber v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 14; or to assume that the defendant made a confession, Covington v. State, 79 Ga. 687; Cunningham v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 149; Binns v. State, 66 Ind. 428; and to charge on that theory, Covington v. State, 79 Ga. 687; or to assume that the defendant made threats, Cline v. State, 43 Ohio St. 332; or to assume that a certain person was the owner of the property alleged to have been stolen, where the ownership was contested, Hix v. People, 157 Ill. 382; or to assume the existence of contemporaneous thefts and charge them as a criminative fact on a prosecution for receiving stolen property, there being no evidence of such thefts, Brewer v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 139; or to assume, on a prosecution for retailing liquor, that the defendant had knowledge of the intemperate habits of the person to whom he sold the liquor, Elam v. State, 25 Ala. 53; or to use the word "victim" on a trial for murder, as it seems to assume a wrongful killing, People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142; or, on a murder trial, to state that a crime had been committed, Jackman v. State, 71 Ind. 149; or to assume that the defendant voluntarily went to live with the deceased in a meretricious relation without any promise of marriage, where there was evidence that he had obtained possession of her person by fraudulent devices, and that she had subsequently lived with him on a promise of marriage, People v. Barberi, 149 N. Y. 256; or to charge as follows, in a murder trial: "Was S. * * * murdered? In determining that question, the court thinks you can have no hesitation whatever." People v. Dick, 34 Cal. 663.

Damages — Measure of. — An instruction is erroneous which assumes that the case is of such a nature that punitive damages may be given in assessing damages. Collins v. Waters, 54 Ill. 485.

Where, in an action for a balance due on a sale of goods, the defendant set up a breach of warranty of value, and that a portion only of the goods were delivered, which were invoiced by him at a certain amount, it was held that a charge that the measure of damages was the difference between the amount warranted and the invoice was improper, as assuming the existence of controverted facts. Smith v. Dukes, 5 Minn. 373.

Ejectment. — Where there were two defendants in ejectment, and but one had admitted the tenancy, a request which assumes that both were estopped from denying the plaintiff's title, without leaving to the jury to find that the other came into possession of part of the premises under the former, is erroneous. The court cannot properly assume this fact. Funk v. Kincaid, 5 Md. 404.

Forcible Entry and Detainer. — In a proceeding for forcible entry and detainer, an instruction to the jury that "the undisputed possession of the plaintiff for between two and three years is evidence of his title and right of possession in him, until a better title is shown," is erroneous as assuming that he had, and had proved that he had, undisputed possession of the premises between two and three years. Wall v. Goodenough, 16 Ill. 415.

Limitations — Statute of. — A request for an instruction that "on the evidence in this case the statute of limitations is a bar to this suit" is properly to prove is not erroneous under the rule just stated. Thus it is entirely competent for the judge to charge the jury that if they refused, where there is no evidence on which to base it. Krider v. Milner, 99 Mo. 145.

Mechanic's Lien — Foreclosure. — A request for instruction that if the claim for lien was filed more than six months after all the materials were furnished for any one of the houses designated, the verdict must be for the defendant in regard to such house, is error, because the lien continues until six months after the completion of the work, and such request assumes that the building had been completed more than six months before filing the claim; so a request which assumes that the several buildings constituting a manufacturing establishment were separate and distinct in contemplation of the mechanics' lien laws, without submitting that question to the jury, is erroneous. Okisko Co. v. Matthews, 3 Md. 168.

Notes — Actions on. — In an action on two notes the protests of both were offered in evidence to prove demand and refusal, and one of the protests was held inadmissible. It was held that a prayer that assumes the plaintiff's right to recover on both notes was erroneous. Nailor v. Bowie, 3 Md. 251. So an instruction which assumes a fact as proved, as that certain words under the signature to a note were written when it was executed and were a part of the signature, is erroneous. Burr v. Williams, 20 Ark. 171. And in instructing the jury as to the effect of the extension of time of payment in discharging the surety on a note, it is error to assume the knowledge of the payee when he extended the time that the surety signed as such, where the evidence on that point is conflicting. Howell v. Lawrenceville Mfg. Co., 31 Ga. 663.

Personal Injuries. — Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether plaintiff received certain injuries (Fullerton v. Fordyce, 121 Mo. 1), or whether injuries received were permanent (Houston City St. R. Co. v. Artusey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 319), it is erroneous for instructions to assume these facts.

Where the plaintiff, an employee of the defendant, had seen the machine by which he was injured, in operation, for six months previous to the injury, a charge assuming that he did not know that it was dangerous is erroneous. Avery v. Meek, 96 Ky. 192.

Where the evidence tends to show contributory negligence it is error for the instruction to assume that the deceased was in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care at the time of his death. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Moran, 13 Ill. App. 72.

Where there is no evidence to show a wilful or intentional injury the instruction should not assume that there was wilful negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 13 Ill. App. 634.

An instruction that if the jury believe the injury to the plaintiff occurred "by reason of the neglect of the employees of the defendant to obey the signal of the semaphore," etc., is improper as assuming as a fact the neglect of the defendant's employees to obey such signal. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Zang, 10 Ill. App. 594.

Where it appeared that the injured person was first seen at a point beyond the platform where it was claimed that he was injured, but it did not appear whether he had been struck by the platform or not, it was improper to refer to the platform as that "by which the deceased was injured." Perigo v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 55 Iowa 326.

In an action for injuries caused by an alleged wrongful ejection from a train, the court instructed as follows: "The jury are instructed that if they believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff had not paid or offered to pay his fare from Elkhart to South Bend, then the defendant would not be warranted in throwing the plaintiff from the train in a way to endanger his life or limb, or throw him off while the train was in motion." This instruction was held an erroneous assumption of the very matter in dispute. Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co. v. Shelton, 66 Ill. 424.

Replevin. — Where an action of replevin was brought against several parties, an instruction assuming the guilt of all the parties is erroneous. Dart v. Horn, 20 Ill. 212.

Res Judicata. — Where there is a question of fact for the jury as to the identity of the subject-matter of the two suits, an instruction that the judgment in the first suit is a bar is prop-believe the testimony adduced, they should find a verdict for one party or the other. Such a charge does not trench upon the erly refused. Bellis v. Phillips, 28 N. J. L. 125.

Sales.—An instruction that if the jury find that "after the sale" the sheriff placed the goods under the control of the defendant, etc., is erroneous as assuming the fact of the sale. Gaither v. Martin, 3 Md. 146. So is an instruction that if the jury find from all the evidence that the goods sold in this case were sold on the credit of the defendant, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover, Cropper v. Pittman, 13 Md. 190; and an instruction characterizing a sale as a "pretended sale," where the evidence tends to show a purchase for value and in good faith, is erroneous, Powell v. Yeazel, 46 Neb. 225. So is an instruction that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show the sale fraudulent where the sale was claimed to be fraudulent and the evidence is conflicting. Landman v. Glover, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 994.

An instruction assuming that in all cases of the sale of goods an actual delivery is necessary to render the sale valid when it is to depend upon delivery alone, is erroneous. Atwell v. Miller, 6 Md. 10.

In an action for breach of warranty, the warranty being denied, an instruction should not assume that the article in question was not as warranted. Goodkind v. Rogan, 8 Ill. App. 413.

Where the main issue is whether a sale was made in fraud of a vendor's creditors, a request to charge that the vendor was insolvent or in embarrassed circumstances at the time of the sale was properly refused. Smith v. Collins, 94 Ala. 394.

Trespass.—An instruction that "if the plaintiff has sustained no injury by reason of the alleged trespass, still he is entitled to a verdict for nominal damages," assumes the commission of a trespass. Steele v. Davis, 75 Ind. 191. So in trespass for damages upon the execution of a distress warrant, instructions to the jury that "the manner in which the warrant was executed and the plaintiff's property used is evidence for the consideration of the jury to show malice on the part of the defendants, and may be taken into consideration * * * in enhancement of the damages," are erroneous as assuming the facts as determined. Sherman v. Dutch, 16 Ill. 283. And an instruction that the plaintiff "is entitled to recover in this action all damages proved to have been sustained by him on account of the trespasses committed by defendant on plaintiff's premises, as alleged in the declaration," is erroneous, because it assumes that the defendant committed the trespasses. Small v. Brainard, 44 Ill. 355.

Trover.—An instruction assuming the conversion of personalty is properly refused where there is some evidence that the property was sold with the consent of the party seeking to recover its value. Prentiss v. Ross, 96 Mich. 83. And a charge assuming that a conversion is proved, when the evidence merely establishes an intention to convert, is also erroneous. Knight v. Vardeman, 25 Ala. 262.

Where the main point in issue in an action of trover for the conversion of a horse is whether the parties had traded horses or not, it was error to instruct that "the plaintiff is not entitled to rescind the trade and reclaim the horse unless defendant perpetrated a fraud upon him," because such instruction assumes the matter in dispute. Potts v. Jones, 140 Pa. St. 48.

Wills — Action to Set Aside.—On the trial of an issue to impeach the validity of a will, where there is proof of general rationality and also of delusion in a testator, the court cannot properly assume that the testator's delusion was habitual and thus throw the burden of proof on the caveatees to show that he was free from such delusion at the time the will was executed. Townshend v. Townshend, 7 Gill (Md.) 24.

Work and Service Performed.—An instruction that in ascertaining the sum to be allowed for services the jury "should be guided by the custom in such like cases," is erroneous for assuming the existence of a custom in like cases. Canby v. Frick, 8 Md. 163. So in an action for work done under a written contract afterwards modified by a verbal promise, the question whether such verbal promise was made was properly submitted to the jury, and an instruction ignoring such verbal promise was properly refused. Morse v. Gilman, 18 Wis. 373. A request that if the jury find that the plaintiffs per-appropriate office of a jury.¹ So a charge which is made to rest upon what the jury shall believe from the evidence,² or which states facts as having been "claimed" by one of the parties,³ or which states matters of common knowledge,⁴ is not obnoxious to the criticism that it assumes the existence of the facts.

In the notes hereto are set out other decisions in which certain instructions are held not to be vicious as improperly assuming facts in controversy.⁵

formed their work under the contract offered in evidence by the defendant, assumes the existence and execution of the contract, and is erroneous. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Resley, 7 Md. 297. In an action to recover for services performed by a real estate broker, an instruction that where two or more agents have the same property for sale, in the absence of collusion on the part of the vendor the agent through whose instrumentality the sale is carried to completion is entitled to a commission, is erroneous as assuming the employment of other agents. Salomon v. Cress, 22 Oregon 177.

1. Jones v. Edwards, 57 Miss. 28; Morgan v. Wattles, 69 Ind. 260; Logansport v. Justice, 74 Ind. 378; Paul v. Meek, 6 Ala. 753; Seaboard Mfg. Co. v. Woodson, 94 Ala. 143; Ham v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 142 Pa. St. 617; State v. Thompson, 19 Iowa 299; Fulton v. Maccracken, 18 Md. 528; Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532; San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Keller, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 569.

May Be Based on Party's Theory of What Evidence Shows.—Where instructions are given at the instance of each party, based upon the theory that the evidence shows a certain state of facts, and directing the jury if they find the facts one way to find for the plaintiff, and if they find the facts as claimed by the defendant to find for him, it cannot be said that the plaintiff's instruction is misleading as assuming a state of facts. Eames v. Rend, 105 Ill. 506.

2. Ladd v. Pigott, 114 Ill. 647; Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Martin, 111 Ill. 219; Mullin v. Spangenberg, 112 Ill. 140; Chicago v. Sheehan, 113 Ill. 658; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Avery, 109 Ill. 314; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lehmburg, 75 Tex. 61; Austin, etc., R. Co. v. Beatty, 73 Tex. 592; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Waldo, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 783; O'Connell v. St. Louis Cable, etc., R. Co., 106 Mo. 482; State v. Grayor, 89 Mo. 600;

Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 22 Neb. 775.

Using Words "As You May Find."—The court instructed as follows: "You may find for the plaintiff for any amount which you may find was collected and not paid over, if any was so collected and not paid over, or you may find for the whole amount collected and not paid over, after deducting such amount as you may find was consumed by fire." Bronnenburg v. Charman, 80 Ind. 475.

3. Hawley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa 717; Carraher v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 81 Cal. 98.

4. Harris v. Shebek, 151 Ill. 287.

The assumption, in an instruction, that the mere keeping of a place where intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of law is of itself a common nuisance, without any judicial determination of that fact, is not error under the Kansas Crimes Act, § 392, declaring such a place to be a common nuisance, and providing for punishment of the keeper and abatement of the place "upon the judgment of a court having jurisdiction finding said place to be a nuisance under this section." State v. Saxton, 2 Kan. App. 13.

5. Contracts—Actions on.—An instruction that "it is incumbent on the defendants, under the contract alleged in plaintiff's declaration, to show an offer to perform, or some sufficient excuse for nonperformance on their part, in order to excuse themselves from liability to pay damages, if the evidence shows that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract," does not assume the existence of a contract. Bird v. Forceman, 62 Ill. 212.

Where an answer sets up payment as a consequence of certain transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant, an instruction which speaks of "payment of the note sued on by plaintiff to defendants, as alleged in their answer," does not assume pay-

b. ASSUMPTION OF MATTERS NOT IN EVIDENCE. — It is error for the court, in instructing the jury, to assume the exist-ment in money. Semple v. Crouch, 8 Mo. App. 593.

In an action based on the defendant's failure to furnish the plaintiff with all the ice he might need in his business, the court, after instructing the jury fully upon facts which would entitle the plaintiff to recover, at the request of the plaintiff further charged that the fact that the plaintiff required more ice in his business in the warmer months, and requested the defendant to furnish him with a greater quantity than he had furnished during the preceding months, would not release the defendant from the contract, or from damages sustained by the plaintiff, unless the defendant was willing to furnish the amount required by the contract and the plaintiff refused to receive it. It was held that, taken with other portions of the charge, it was not misleading the jury to assume the liability of the defendant for damages. Egan v. Faendel, 19 Minn. 231.

Condemnation Proceedings — Damages.

— An instruction that the jury should consider all the inconvenience or annoyance proved by the evidence as resulting from the condemnation proposed does not assume that the plaintiff will necessarily be subjected to annoyance and inconvenience from the condemnation. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wolf, 137 Ill. 360.

Criminal Prosecutions — Assault. — An instruction that it was "important that you determine whether the alleged assault, or assault and battery, made upon W. [the deceased] by defendant, either alone or in company with others, was an unlawful or a lawful act," does not assume that the assault was proved. Patterson v. State, 70 Ind. 341.

1 An instruction that "if the jury believe * * * that A, an adult male, did on," etc., "commit an aggravated assault on the person of B, a female, you will find the defendant guilty," etc., is not objectionable as telling the jury that A is an adult male, and B a female. Davis v. State, 6 Tex. App. 133.

Larceny. — An instruction that the jury cannot convict unless the state proves that the defendant stole some portion of the property described; that the property stolen was of some value; that the property stolen was the property of, etc.; that the act of stealing was committed within two years, etc., does not assume that the property was stolen. Huber v. State, 57 Ind. 341.

Mur' v. — Where the court in charging spoke of the "place of the alleged murder," and afterwards of the "time and place of the murder," it was held that the jury could not consider that the court assumed the murder to have been proved. People v. Chun Heong, 86 Cal. 329.

Where it was shown that the death of the deceased was caused by a blow struck by the defendant with a club, an instruction that if the defendant, in the heat of passion and without design to cause death, by "means and use of a dangerous weapon, to wit, a wooden club, feloniously killed the deceased, and that the killing was not justifiable or excusable, they will find him guilty of manslaughter," does not assume that the club was a dangerous weapon. State v. Grayor, 16 Mo. App. 558, 89 Mo. 600.

An instruction that "the first question for you to consider is, was J. killed at or near Liberty church, in, etc., on, etc., and, if so, was the killing murder or manslaughter?" does not assume that J. was the person found dead. Beavers v. State, 58 Ind. 530.

Where the court, before giving the instructions asked for by the defendant, the substance of which had been already given by him, told the jury that he did not desire to have any question in the case, and that he would give the instructions asked for in addition to those already given, and that he did not deem it necessary to give certain instructions that he usually gave in homicide cases, it was held that the remarks of the court were not an intimation that the case was one of unusual enormity, or that the instructions asked by the defendant were given under protest. People v. Lee Sare Bo, 72 Cal. 623.

Personal Injuries — Actions for. — A direction to find such sum as will compensate for the injury, if any, does not assume that there was an injury. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Linn, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. Rep. 895.

An instruction that a servant "did ence of facts in support of which there is no evidence. This constitutes a direct perversion of the testimony upon which alone the jury are to render their verdict. The court, as well as the jury, is to consider only the testimony offered in court.¹

not accept risks which grew out of any defects in the road which rendered it more hazardous than reasonable, unless he had knowledge" thereof, is not objectionable as assuming the existence of defects. Taylor, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, 79 Tex. 104.

An instruction that "the particulars of the alleged injury and negligence are set forth in the petition, as plaintiff claims the facts were," and which then proceeds to state the gist of the action and submits the question to the jury, does not assume the facts stated in the petition to be true. Hotel Assoc. v. Walter, 23 Neb. 280.

An instruction that if the jury should find for plaintiff they should allow "first, the expenses incurred by plaintiff in attempting to cure himself of his injuries; second, his loss of time occasioned by this; third, his bodily pain and suffering, and mental anguish," does not assume that the plaintiff had incurred expenses, lost time, and endured bodily pain. Klutts v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. 642.

An instruction that the plaintiff "was not informed—it is for you to say whether he was or not—that he must not work in the place where he was at work at the time this accident happened," does not assume that the plaintiff was not informed. Nugent v. Breuchard, 91 Hun (N. Y.) 12.

An instruction that "the plaintiff * * * brings this suit against the defendant to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been received by the negligence of the defendant in the operation of a car on which he was riding, by reason of which said car collided with another car, and plaintiff was thrown to the ground and permanently injured," is not objectionable as an assumption of facts. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Keller, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 569.

Where the recovery for personal injuries was based on the ground that the defendant negligently left a ditch in the highway unprotected, it is not improper to charge that if the defendant negligently left the ditch unprotected, and the plaintiff, without negligence on his part, fell into it, the jury should find for the plaintiff. Britton v. St. Louis, 120 Mo. 437.

Sales.—The court instructed that "testimony has been introduced tending to show that * * * the plaintiff and defendant traded and exchanged animals, etc. The plaintiff * * * has introduced testimony intended to show that said exchange or sale was and is void, because defendant falsely and fraudulently warranted the said mule to be sound, knowing that it was unsound, etc. Wherefore plaintiff seeks to avoid or rescind the contract of sale." The instruction was held not erroneous as an assumption of fact. Graham v. Nowlin, 54 Ind. 389.

Witnesses—Contradiction of.—On a prosecution for manslaughter in which the accused testified in his own behalf, an instruction was given that in determining the degree of credibility to be accorded to the testimony of the accused, the jury should take into consideration the fact, if it was a fact, that he had been contradicted by other witnesses. It was held that this instruction did not assume that the accused had been contradicted. Moeck v. People, 100 Ill. 242.

Work and Services—Actions for.—In an action for wages, an instruction telling the jury to "find in favor of the plaintiff such amount as they may believe * * * to be the reasonable value of such services," does not assume that the services were of some value. Blackman v. Cowan, 11 Mo. App. 589.

But "the assumption of a fact by the court is materially different from giving instructions to the jury without any evidence to support them. To assume a fact is to state as proved that which is to be proved, as, 'if the jury find that after the sale' assumes the fact of the sale, and was therefore erroneous. * * * But to instruct the jury upon an hypothesis of which there was no evidence is to leave them to assume or find that for which there was no foundation. The errors, though closely similar, are by no means the same." 1

Possible Existence of Facts. — It is likewise error to assume the pos-

Instances. — An instruction that the killing was not disputed by the defense is erroneous, when no such admission on the part of the defendant was made on the trial nor involved in the theory of the defense. People v. Lee Chuck, 74 Cal. 30. And in a criminal case an assumption in a charge that the defendant has confessed the crime when he has not is erroneous. People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151. So an instruction is improper which assumes the existence of a partnership, where there was no evidence of such fact. Freeman v. Exchange Bank, 59 Ill. App. 197.

Where there was no evidence before the court that any witness had sworn falsely, but the main witness for the plaintiff, before his dismissal as such witness, had asked leave to make a correction and retraction of a part of his testimony, it was held error on the part of the court to instruct the jury that the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, applied. Kay v. Noll, 20 Neb. 380.

In an action for damages by negligence a charge which permits the jury to consider whether the plaintiff did not contribute thereto is erroneous, in the absence of evidence that he did not exercise due care. Brower v. Edson, 47 Mich. 91.

sible existence of a state of facts which the jury have no right to find, because of a want of evidence.¹

Refusal Proper. — This being so, a request for instructions which assumes the existence of facts not in evidence is improper, and should be refused.²

c. ASSUMPTION OF MATTERS WHICH EVIDENCE SHOWS DO NOT EXIST. — So it is erroneous to assume the existence of facts which the evidence shows or tends to show do not exist.³

d. ASSUMPTION OF MATTERS ADMITTED BY THE PLEADINGS. — It is not error to assume the existence of a fact alleged in the petition when it is admitted, or not denied, in the answer,⁴ and it has been held error to assume that a matter admitted by the pleadings was in issue.⁵

e. ASSUMPTION OF MATTERS ADMITTED BY THE PARTIES. — So the court may, in charging the jury, assume as true what is admitted by the parties, or by the party against whom the instruction is given,⁶ or may instruct that the fact is established,

Applications of Rule. — In an action brought by an employee to recover for personal injuries sustained, where it is admitted that the machine by which the plaintiff was injured was dangerous, an instruction is not improper which assumes that the machine was dangerous. Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Reinneiger, 140 Ill. 334.

The court may assume as true that which the prisoner, in his defense, has treated as true; as, where a prisoner indicted for murder does not pretend that, if guilty of the homicide, he is guilty of anything but murder; but relies, in his defense, solely upon the ground that he was not guilty of the homicide. State v. Rash, 12 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 382.

It Is Often a Matter of Convenience in giving instructions, and avoids circumlocution, to assume the existence of certain facts about which the parties are agreed; and neither party, under such circumstances, can afterwards make the assumption a ground of objection to the instructions. *Martin v. Where Parties Testify Alike. — Where, on a trial before the court and jury, the plaintiff and the defendant testify substantially alike as to a material fact, in instructing the jury on the law of the case the court may properly assume that such fact is established, the same as if admitted by the pleadings or by the parties in open court on the trial. Douglass v. Geiler, 32 Kan. 499; Menzies v. Kennedy, 9 Nev. 152.

A party will not be sustained when he complains that the judge, in his charge to the jury, assumed as true the existence of a state of facts not contradicted by evidence, and was sustained by testimony introduced by himself. Caruth v. Grigsby, 57 Tex. 259.

Where Evidence Is All One Way. — Where the evidence is all one way, and unquestionably proves the fact for which it was introduced, the court may tell the jury that the fact is proved, and instruct them to find accordingly. State v. Herold, 9 Kan. 194.

It is not error to assume a fact as to which all the witnesses agree and about which there is no room for controversy. Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14 Iowa 363; Hanrahan v. People, 91 Ill. 144.

Thus an instruction which assumes that an accident occurred is proper where all the witnesses testify that it did occur. Trinity, etc., R. Co. v. Lane, 79 Tex. 623.

Where Evidence Most Favorable to Defendant Proves His Guilt. — If, according to the evidence most favorable to the defendant, he is guilty, it is not error to charge the jury that if they believe the testimony of any witness examined the defendant is guilty. State v. Burke, 82 N. Car. 551.

The Rule in Ohio. — In Ohio it has been held not erroneous for the court to refuse to give instructions which require it to assume or imply the existence of material facts in issue in the case, although such facts are clearly proven by the evidence submitted to the jury. Bellefontaine R. Co. v. Snyder, 24 Ohio St. 670.

as to a matter of fact in issue,¹ it is erroneous to submit it as an open question to the jury, and that the proper course is for the court to assume that it was proved, and to charge on that theory; the view being taken that any other course is likely to confuse and mislead the jury,² and that the court should not assume a doubt as to matters about which there can be no doubt, nor assume a hypothesis at variance with a certain fact.³

Where Merely No Conflict. — It must not be understood, however, from anything said in this connection, that the court in its charge, or counsel in his request for instructions, is authorized to assume that a matter is proved merely because there is no conflict in the evidence with regard to it,⁴ as there may be a question as to the weight and credit which should be given to the testimony.⁵

h. ASSUMPTION OF MATTERS BY WAY OF ILLUSTRATION. — See infra, V. 17. Assuming Facts by Way of Illustration.

1. Wintz v. Morrison, 17 Tex. 372.

2. Reason for Rule. — Under such a state of proofs a charge which, in effect, tells the jury that it is competent for them to find either for or against the existence of the facts so proved is erroneous, as it assumes that there is evidence in the case tending as well to disprove such facts as to prove them. Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

McCann*, 10 Md. 122; Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 86.

Illustrations of the Rule. — In People v. Webster, 111 Cal. 381, it was held in a prosecution for rape that it cannot be assumed that the prosecutrix was under the age of consent, even though her testimony to that effect was uncontradicted. In this case the court said: "A jury in a criminal case is not bound to believe the uncontradicted statement of a witness as to a fact. * * * They were not bound to take this witness's statement of her age as true. They had the right to disbelieve it, and were not accountable to any court for dereliction of duty in not believing it. * * * The conduct of this witness when upon the stand may have shown her to have been lying. Her appearance may have shown her to have been of mature years. The inherent improbabilities of her testimony may have placed it beyond the pale of belief. Would such uncontradicted testimony be conclusive if the witness by her appearance was shown to be wrinkled and gray with age?"

In Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, which was an action of trespass to try title, it was necessary for the plaintiffs, who claimed as descendants of an uncle, to show that he left no wife and children surviving him. There was no evidence to the contrary, and the court in its charge assumed that the deceased was a single man. The reviewing court held that this was error, saying: "It was a material fact to be proved affirmatively by the plaintiffs, by which we do not mean positively, but just like any other material fact, and it was not established by the absence of evidence to the contrary."

In Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 86, it was held that the fact that all the evidence in relation to the delivery of a deed was offered on one side, to show its delivery on the day of its date, does not authorize the court to assume that the jury could not find the delivery on another day.

In American Oak Extract Co. v. Ryan, 112 Ala. 337, it was held that the value of property should not be assumed as a fact where it is shown by the evidence of only one party, though his testimony is not disputed.

5. Saar v. Fuller, 71 Iowa 427; Rhodes v. Lowry, 54 Ala. 4.

i. PRESUMPTIONS ON APPEAL. — Where the trial court in its instructions assumes the existence of certain facts, it will be presumed, on appeal, that such facts were admitted or conclusively proved.¹

j. HARMLESS ERROR. — An improper assumption of a fact in an instruction, if it could not have worked to the prejudice of the party complaining of it, will not be ground for reversal.²

V. ELEMENTS AND REQUISITES OF CHARGE — 1. In General —

a. AS TO STYLE. — A large discretion is vested in the trial judge in regard to the style and general manner of the charge.³ It belongs to the judicial office to exercise discretion as to the style and form in which to expound the law and comment upon the facts.⁴

b. AS TO FOLLOWING PRECEDENTS. — In framing instructions it is always better to adhere to precedents long and well established.⁵ "It is always hazardous to travel out of the beaten path."⁶

c. INACCURACIES IN EXPRESSION. — Mere inaccuracies in expression, or verbal or clerical mistakes, in a charge will not in general be ground of reversal. If the charge is substantially correct a verbal criticism may be disregarded,⁷ unless it would

It will be presumed that the trial court gave the jury correct instructions on all the material points in the case, and if the court assumes to state what the facts are, or upon what questions or issues evidence was introduced, the appellate court will presume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that such instructions were given because the facts were admitted by the parties, or were established by uncontradicted evidence. Patchell v. Jaqua, 6 Ind. App. 77.

In an action of replevin the use of the word "owner," in an instruction, in referring to the plaintiff, is harmless error where he is entitled to the possession of the property as mortgagee. Hardy v. Graham, 63 Mo. App. 40.

4. Continental Imp. Co. v. Stead, 95 U. S. 166.

Method of Arrangement. — The want of orderly and logical arrangement of the propositions of law involved in a charge is not ground for new trial if all of the propositions fairly applicable to the case are given in such manner as fairly to inform the jury of the principles necessary for their guidance. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Calvert, 52 Kan. 547.

have misled a jury of ordinary intelligence.¹ In drafting instructions, the exactness of statement required in pleadings is not necessary.²

2. Must Be Direct and Certain. — Instructions should be definite, direct, and certain,³ and if defective in this respect, and calculated to mislead, will operate to reverse the judgment.⁴

1. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 270.

Using Word "Plaintiff" for "Defendant." — The use of the word "plaintiff" for the word "defendant," in an instruction, is not likely to mislead, and will not be ground of reversal. Nichols v. Mercer, 44 Ill. 250; McKenzie v. Remington, 79 Ill. 388; Lucas Market Sav. Bank v. Goldsoll, 8 Mo. App. 596.

Use of Word "Plaintiff" Instead of "Decedent." — A mistake in the use of the word "plaintiff" instead of the word "decedent" in an action for debt, caused by negligence which is a mere inadvertence and could not have misled the jury, will not warrant a new trial. O'Callaghan v. Bode, 84 Cal. 489.

Use of Word "Evidence" Instead of "Defendant." — Where the court properly instructed the jury that facts against the defendant must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, a mistake in repetition of the same instructions, by substituting the word "evidence" for the word "defendant," is harmless error. People v. Carroll, 92 Cal. 568.

Instructions Held Vicious for Indefiniteness and Uncertainty. — A request for an instruction which leaves in doubt the question whether the jury are to find according to a preponderance of the evidence, or must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, should be refused. Hocum v. Weitherick, 22 Minn. 152. An instruction that the jury may, from the manner and position of the witness giving testimony before them, attach whatever credit they may think proper to his statements, is too vague and indefinite to be given. Welsh v. State, 11 Tex. 368. So it is erroneous to instruct that one is disqualified to contract, when "from old age, infirmity, or Leaving Jury Uncertain. — If an instruction is so worded as to leave the jury to uncertain conjecture as to its meaning, and hence is liable to lead the jury astray in their consideration of the case, this is good ground for a new trial.¹

Accurate, Clear, and Explicit. — Instructions should be so framed that they will be accurate,² clear, and explicit.³ A charge should other misfortune [he] was reduced to a state of mental imbecility which disqualified him from the proper exercise of his reasoning faculties, and the ordinary prudential management of his affairs." Prather v. Naylor, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 245. So a request for instruction that "the authority offered in evidence by the avowant is insufficient to sustain the distress relied upon," is bad for uncertainty, since it does not clearly appear whether it relates to the warrant to distrain and the proceedings thereunder, or to the authority under which the avowant's agent acted, which was also given in evidence. Giles v. Ebsworth, 10 Md. 333. In an action against a railroad company, to recover for a failure to give the plaintiff, a passenger, an opportunity to get off at a station to which he held a ticket, the plaintiff claimed exemplary damages, and the court instructed that special damage need not be proven. It was held that this instruction was too indefinite. Southern R. Co. v. Kendrick, 40 Miss. 374. So the following charge was properly refused for uncertainty: "Where the proof of drunkenness is presented for the purpose of showing that the defendant's mind was clouded, frenzied, and disturbed by being drunk, proof as to the defendant being unable to distinguish between right and wrong need not be so clear as when it is presented for the purpose of showing a complete defense to the action." Adams v. State, 29 Ohio St. 412.

Request for Correction Held Necessary. — It has been held that if an instruction is indefinite and uncertain, the party objecting should ask for one that is more definite, or his exception will not avail on appeal. Corcoran v. Harlan, 55 Wis. 120.

When Not Ground for Reversal. — The want of precision of expression in charging a jury is not a sufficient ground for setting aside a verdict where there is no reason to believe that they were misled by it. Dunbar v. Briggs, 13 Neb. 332; Mutual Hail Ins. Co. v. Wilde, 8 Neb. 427; Shinnabarger v. Shelton,

41 Mo. App. 147; Warson v. McElroy, 33 Mo. App. 553. So an instruction will not be held bad for indefiniteness if in other instructions given by the court the omission complained of is distinctly set forth; some credit must be given to the ordinary intelligence of the jury. *Thornberry v. be so explicit as not to be misconstrued or misunderstood by the jury in the application of the law to the facts as they may find them from the evidence.¹ The law should be placed fairly before the jury in a few plain, forcible, pointed, and pithy instructions,² free from all doubt, and announcing correct legal principles, so that there can be no question as to what the law is.³

Technical Terms to Be Avoided. — In charging the jury the court should use language of ordinary significance and capable of being understood by persons of average intelligence. It is better to instruct juries in plain English, and to avoid altogether the use of technical terms.⁴ If this is done, there will be much less liability of misapprehension.⁵ If, however, it is a question in

Where Evidence Is Evenly Balanced. — Where the evidence as to the facts in the case is evenly balanced the jury should be instructed as to the law with accuracy. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 77 Ill. 217. And it is important that their deliberations be not influenced by an improper instruction. Shaw v. People, 81 Ill. 150.

Where Evidence Is Conflicting. — Where there is a conflict of evidence, or where the evidence leaves it doubtful which way the jury should find, instructions should be accurate, clear, and perspicuous. They are to aid the jury in arriving at a correct conclusion, not to mislead or leave them in doubt as to the law arising upon the evidence. Volk v. Roche, 70 Ill. 297.

Instructions Held Not Sufficiently Explicit. — An instruction that if the jury believed "that T. M. and those claiming under him were in possession of the land in controversy more than twenty years before they were divested," etc., is erroneous because not sufficiently explicit, as the possession must have been adverse and continual, and the instruction, omitting this qualification, might have misled the jury. Forman v. Ambler, 2 Dana (Ky.) 110. So on the trial of an indictment for perjury an instruction that if the prisoner swore falsely to the statement contained in the indictment, the jury will find him guilty "if the case is otherwise made out," is not sufficiently explicit. 5. Using Term "Prima Facie." — The use of this term in instructing the jury is condemned. Chappell v. Allen, 38 Mo. 222.

Comparisons of Legal Presumptions. — An instruction which attempts a comparison of a legal presumption may well be refused as "theoretical and impractical." Morrison v. State, 76 Ind. 339.

Using the Word "Malice" Without Defining It. — The court instructed that if there was reasonable ground to apprehend great personal injury from the deceased, "and the defendant struck issue what certain words used in a technical sense mean, and evidence has been admitted to show what this meaning is, the question is properly submitted to the jury.¹

3. Must Not Be Obscure, Vague, or Involved. — It is scarcely more than a repetition of what was said in the last section, to state that instructions should not be vague, obscure, or involved, that the refusal of such instructions is proper,² and that the giving of them, if calculated to mislead the jury, will be reversible error;³ but that mere obscurity in an instruction, him with the seal to avoid such injury, and not in a spirit of malice or revenge, he was justifiable." In commenting on this instruction the reviewing court said: "It will be observed that the term 'malice' is not defined; the jury were, therefore, left to construe it as they would." *Morgan v. Voluminous Instructions. — If instructions are so voluminous as to mislead the jury, this may be ground for new trial. Thatcher v. Quirk, (Idaho 1894) 38 Pac. Rep. 652.

Instructions Held Erroneous for Obscurity. — An instruction that "you will assess to the plaintiff such damages as from all the evidence in this case you shall find he has sustained by reason of the illegal taking and detention of the personal property," is vague, and constitutes reversible error. Morehead v. Adams, 18 Neb. 569. So, also, the following instruction is vague and misleading: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant * * * is guilty of an attempt, as charged in the second count, your verdict should be 'guilty.'" Preisker v. People, 47 Ill. 382. And so is an instruction that "the party dealing with an agent is bound to know at his peril whether the power of an agent is, and to understand its legal effect." Colquhoun v. Wells, 21 Nev. 459.

Necessity for Request for Correction. — It has been held that a charge which asserts a correct legal proposition, but is objectionable on account of generality or obscurity, is not ground of reversal, and that the adverse party should protect himself by asking a not misleading, is not ground for reversal.¹

4. Must Not Be Ambiguous. — Instructions which are susceptible of two constructions, one of which is correct and the other not, are erroneous, and should not be given,² and the refusal of such instructions is always proper.³ If the giving of such an instruction has a tendency to mislead the jury to the prejudice of the party complaining, this amounts to a misdirection for which the judgment will be reversed.⁴

The Giving of an Ambiguous Instruction, however, will not operate to reverse if it is apparent that no prejudice could have resulted therefrom;⁵ and it has been held that if the charge is merely qualifying or explanatory charge. O'Donnell v. Rodiger, 76 Ala. 222.

An ambiguous instruction, correct only upon a construction inapplicable to the evidence, amounts to reversible error. Black v. Duncan, 60 Ind. 522.

Whenever the question is one of evidence only, and there is room for apprehension that the jury, on account of ambiguity of the language in the charge, may have been misled in considering and weighing the testimony, it is safest to send the case back for another trial. Fain v. Cornett, 25 Ga. 184.

Combining Requested Instructions of Both Parties Condemned. — Charges made up of selections from the requests of both parties, supplemented by general judicial observations, are disapproved as incoherent, obscure, and sometimes ambiguous. Marquette, etc., R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433.

5. Little Miami Co. v. Hambleton, 40 Ohio St. 496. In this case the only serious defect in the charge was a failure to define clearly the kinds of damage for which the defendants were jointly liable. The court said that no proper request to charge on that part of the case was made, but if the verdict was clearly supported by the evidence of joint liability, the judgment should not be set aside. Sweeney v. Merrill, 38 Kan. 217, where it was held that if an instruction is not entirely free from ambiguity, but does not by a reasonable construction state the law incorrectly, it will not be deemed reversible error when the correct rule of law is given in the instruction next following. People v. Alsemi, 85 Cal. 434, in which it was held that an instruction which, standambiguous, the party who is dissatisfied should ask the court to explain it before the jury retire, otherwise the objection will be considered waived.¹

5. Must Not Be Argumentative — a. IMPROPRIETY OF GIVING ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS. — Instructions should be concise, and briefly present the law on the case fairly and fully, on which alone the parties rely.² Courts should give such instructions only as present the issues in a clear, single, plain, and unencumbered manner.³ The purpose of the charge is to state and explain the law, not to carry on a process of general reasoning,⁴ and therefore the practice of injecting an argument into the instructions is considered a reprehensible one, and one which should not be encouraged,⁵ as it only tends to confuse the jury, protract the trial, and render more uncertain a fair and just dis-

ing alone, appears ambiguous because of grammatical errors, must be considered in the light of common understanding rather than by the strict rules of grammar, and also in connection with its context; and if the remainder of the charge upon the same subject is clear and correct, and free from ambiguity, and if the objectionable sentence, when properly corrected by grammatical rules, would be a correct exposition of the law, it will be presumed that the jury so understood it and were not misled thereby. Fisher v. People, 20 Mich. 135, in which it was held that where a request to charge is susceptible of two interpretations, and the charge is correct upon the theory that the most obvious of these interpretations is the true one, and the interpretation relied upon to show that the charge was erroneous was not specially brought to the attention of the court, and if it appears from the whole charge given that the subject involved in the request was fairly left to the jury, the charge will be sustained. Duty of Court. — Whenever ambiguous instructions are given and the attention of the court is called to them, the court should, at any stage of the trial, before the instructions have been acted upon by the jury, remove the ambiguity and make the meaning of the instructions plain. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Boyd, 67 Md. 32.

Instructions Held Argumentative. — The following instructions have been held argumentative: "If two witnesses testify about a transaction, and one of the said witnesses was immediately at the scene of the transaction, and the other witness was some distance off, then the jury may look to this in determining which witness they will believe." Jones v. Alabama Mineral R. Co., 107 Ala. 400. "If the jury believe the evidence in the case they are bound to believe that the defendant's servants in charge of the train were competent and fit to perform their respective duties; and they cannot consider arguments of counsel for the plaintiff to the contrary." Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Propst, 30 Ala. 1. "In determining the question as to whether the slanderous words charged were spoken about or concerning the plaintiff, it is proper for you to consider whether at this time, when these words were alleged to have been spoken, Lachman knew the person of the plaintiff or not; and if he did not know the person of the plaintiff at this time, how could he have referred to her? and how could he have pointed her out as the subject of his accusation?" Morris v. Lachman, 68 Cal. 112. That the jury may find the defendant not guilty without finding whether the prosecutrix testified falsely. Carter v. State, 103 Ala. 93. "Positive fraud or undue influence is hard to prove; is generally done by proving facts and circumstances to which the jury may look to infer fraud or undue influence." Johnson v. Armstrong, 97 Ala. 731. "An opprobrious epithet conveying the idea of a lack of chastity would to a woman cause no pain, while applied to a pure and gentle wife, no tongue can tell the anguish, the shame, the sense of humiliation it would bring." Hanna v. Hanna, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 51. That "there is no fact that is not the subject of proof by circumstantial evidence;" that "as the fraud vitiating a transaction, at the instance of creditors, lies in the intention of the parties to it, it is not generally susceptible of proof otherwise than by evidence of circumstances." Teague v. Lindsey, 106 Ala. 266. That it was the duty of the person operating the train "to slow up the speed of the said train as it approached the point at which" the deceased was killed; and that the jury are instructed that the defendant "had a right to believe that the train would be slowed up, and to act upon such belief, unless, from the conduct of such employees or servants it was apparent to him that the speed of the train would not be slackened." McDonald v. International, etc., R. Co., 86 Tex. 1. That in weighing their evidence the jury might take into consideration the fact that certain witnesses were under indictment for the offense with which the defendant was charged. Mathews v.

State, 100 Ala. 46. "If you find good character established by the evidence, you should consider it and allow it such weight as you believe it fairly entitled to, as tending to show that men of such character would not be likely to commit the crime charged in this case." Dorsey v. State, 110 Ala. 38. In an action against a street-car company for personal injuries, a charge that the fact that a driver might have been at other times careless or imprudent would not render the company liable in this action, unless such driver was careless, reckless, or imprudent on the occasion of the injury sued for. Hays v. Gainesville St. R. Co., 70 Tex. 602.

Instructions Held Not Argumentative. — Where the issue was whether the plaintiff designedly drove off the bank of a highway to recover damages of the town, and a witness testified to parts of conversation which she overheard between her husband and the plaintiff, an instruction that in order to make this evidence "the jury must be satisfied that it had reference to this transaction" is not objectionable as argumentative. Whitcomb v. Fairlee, 43 Vt. 671. So, where a charge on circumstantial evidence was necessary, a charge that great jurists have pronounced circumstantial evidence "of a nature equally satisfactory with positive evidence, and less liable to proceed from perjury," is not argumentative. State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153.

1. State v. Turner, 19 Iowa 149.

In commenting on the practice of asking argumentative instructions, an Ohio judge has said: "Without intending to refer to this case, we may say that it seems as if this objectionable practice has arisen from two purposes on the part of those who adopt it; first, a determination to lose the cause before the jury, and next, to reverse the result. The first always succeeds, the other rarely." Bates v. Benninger, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. 568.

b. WHETHER GROUND FOR REVERSAL. — The giving of argumentative instructions, it is believed, though manifestly improper, will not in general be ground for reversal if the instructions contain a correct proposition of law, and are otherwise unobjectionable; and it has been said in a few decisions that it is within the discretion of the court to give an argumentative instruction.¹

Harmless Error. — According to some decisions, an argumentative charge will not be ground for reversal unless it plainly appears that injury resulted therefrom.²

Stating Law Correctly. — If, on the whole, the charge states the law correctly, the fact that it is argumentative will not operate to reverse.³

Request for Correction Necessary. — It has been held that if a party considers that an argumentative instruction may mislead, it is his duty to ask any modification or qualification necessary to prevent its apprehended misleading tendency. Schaungut v. Udell, 93 Ala. 302.

Instances of Misleading Instructions Held Not Ground of Reversal. — In a trial for the murder of a six-year-old child the court charged as follows: "You will look to the evidence and see what was the provocation for the deed; what circumstances of alleviation, palliation, or justification are in the case; if the circumstances are not shown does it not follow that the killing shows an

Reversal for Argumentativeness. — There are cases, however, in which the judgment has been reversed on the ground that an instruction is argumentative,¹ or where the instruction is also vicious in other respects.²

6. Must Not Be Contradictory or Inconsistent — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — Instructions should be so framed that they will not only state the law correctly, but be entirely in harmony with each other,³ in order that the jury may be aided and not misled in arriving at their verdict.⁴ Instructions which are inconsistent or contradictory, when asked, should, of course, be refused,⁵ and abandoned and malignant heart?" This was held no ground for reversal. Jones v. State, 65 Ga. 621.

Instructions Giving Reason for Rule of Law. — An instruction argumentative only in the way of giving a reason for a rule of law is not ground for reversal. Carleton v. State, 43 Neb. 418.

1. Chisum v. Chesnutt, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. Rep. 758. In this case the court said: "An analysis of the testimony bearing upon the issue as to whether the land included in the deed from Preston to Chisum includes the strip in controversy causes us now to think that the statement of the same proposition in these two instructions, following its announcement in the general charge, probably seriously influenced the jury in reaching their verdict. Hence the argumentative character of the instructions will require a reversal of the judgment."

"The only safe rule * * * is to harmonize the instructions before they are given to the jury. If this is not done, the instructions, which should be a guide to the jury, only serve to confuse." Quinn v. Donovan, 85 Ill. 196.

Conflicting Evidence. — Where the evidence in a case is very conflicting it is especially important that there should be no conflict in the instructions. Chapman v. Copeland, 55 Miss. 476.

Interpretation of Instruction. — Instructions to a jury are always and only given by the court and should be consistent, though not giving the whole of the law in every part. They must never be considered separately, but each as limiting and interpreting other portions, and if the law is correctly stated, when the instructions are thus considered, the verdict and judgment will not be disturbed. Kennon v. Gilmer, 5 Mont. 257.

Instructions Founded on Different Hypotheses. — "Where prayers granted on the same hypotheses of fact are so inconsistent that conformity with one necessarily implies disregard of the other, they are calculated to mislead, and therefore erroneous; but instructions founded upon different hypotheses are not liable to that objection. Moreover, it must appear not only that the instruction was erroneous, but that the appellant was prejudiced by the error." Young v. Mertens, 27 Md. 114; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Blocher, 27 Md. 277.

Instructions Held Not Contradictory. — An instruction that a person of mature age, in order to ratify a contract made by him during infancy, must know that he is not bound by such contract is not inconsistent with another instruction that every person of sound mind and mature age is presumed to know the law. Ogborn v. Hoffman, 52 Ind. 439.

There is no inconsistency between instructions which on the one hand require a user to be shown, and on the other hand explain the character of the user referred to. State v. Bradley, 31 Mo. from contradictory instructions those which correctly express the law. Where an instruction is clearly and fully withdrawn, no harm results, but where it is simply contradicted by another instruction it is otherwise.¹ To warrant a reversal for contradictory instructions it is enough to know that error may have intervened,² and it has been said that a reversal cannot be refused merely because the record does not show affirmatively that injury has been done.³

Instances of Instruction Held Inconsistent and Contradictory. — In an action for malicious prosecution, to instruct that if the defendant sincerely designed to reform the manners of the plaintiff, but in pursuing that design wilfully inflicted a wrong not warranted by law, such wrong is malicious, is contradictory and therefore erroneous. Whitfield v. Westbrook, 40 Miss. 311. An instruction at the instance of the plaintiff that the jury could not consider the defendant an indorser merely, unless they find that at the time of signing the note, and before its delivery to the plaintiff, an agreement had been made between him and the defendant that he should be considered an indorser, and an instruction given at the instance of the defendant that if they found that the defendant put his name on the note with the understanding that he was to be treated as an indorser, and the plaintiff knew this when he received it, they must find for the defendant, are contradictory. Otto v. Bent, 48 Mo. 23. In an action on a promissory note, where the defense was the statute of limitations, and on the trial the issue was whether the defendant had been residing out of the commonwealth, instructions that if he resided out of the commonwealth his intention was immaterial, and that if the jury were in doubt as to his residence they might consider his intention as matter of evidence, are contradictory and insufficient. Moorar v. Harvey, 125 Mass. 574. So where in one part of the charge the jury were instructed that the plaintiff may recover without reference to the truth or falsity of the representations, and in another that he cannot recover unless the representations are false, such instructions are inconsistent and calculated to confuse. Baker v. Ashe, 80 Tex. 356. Where an indictment charged that whiskey was drunk with defendant's permission, an instruction that although the jury should believe from the evidence that the purchaser drank the whiskey in the defendant's store, as charged in the indictment, yet if they believe that he drank it without the knowledge or consent of the defendant they will find him not guilty, is contradictory. May v. State, 35 Tex. 650.

Instance. — Thus on a trial for murder, where two parts of the charge are contradictory, and one is correct and the other not, the judgment of conviction will be reversed even though the appellate court may be satisfied from the evidence that the jury ought to have found the defendant guilty. People v. Valencia, 43 Cal. 552.

3. Adams v. Capron, 21 Md. 187

b. REASON FOR RULE. — The reason for the rule is obvious, for where the instructions on a material point are contradictory it is impossible for the jury to decide which should prevail,¹ and it is equally impossible after verdict to ascertain what instructions the jury did follow.²

c. WHETHER ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION CURED BY SUBSEQUENT CORRECT INSTRUCTIONS. — It is clear, then, from what has been said, that an error in an instruction is not cured by a subsequent contradictory instruction laying down a correct rule,³ unless the erroneous instruction is expressly withdrawn,⁴ and if the court gives a correct instruction and afterwards gives another nullifying it the error will operate to reverse.¹ A contradiction between two instructions, so far from correcting the evils of either, multiplies them in both.²

d. WHEN CONTRADICTORY INSTRUCTIONS HARMLESS. — It has been said that a judgment will not be reversed because of contradictory instructions where it is clear to the court that the erroneous instructions did not mislead the jury,³ and that "circumstances might possibly occur" where such inconsistent instructions might not work confusion in the mind of the jury.⁴ While it is not easy for the ordinary mind to conceive how it could be made clear to a reviewing court that a jury were not misled by contradictory instructions,⁵ it is nevertheless true that the giving of such instructions will not always work a reversal. This exception to the rule is exemplified by the giving of contradictory instructions, the one least favorable to the party complaining being correct, and the one most favorable to him being incorrect.⁶

5. In Union Pac. R. Co. v. Milliken, 8 Kan. 651, a case where contradictory instructions were given, the court quoted as follows from Catawissa R. Co. v. Armstrong, 49 Pa. St. 193: "There was error in this, unless we can see clearly that it was neutralized by what preceded it. How is it possible to ascertain this? Can we suppose it made no impression? The jury heard it; it had meaning, and was given to guide them to what principles they were bound to apply the facts, and it was almost the last words that fell on their ears in closing this part of the instructions. It will not do to hope or conjecture that a false rule will do no evil because a true one was also given. To a court it would have been harmless, but how was a jury to say which was right and which was wrong?"

Co.*, 114 Mo. 384; Lobdell v. Hall, 3 Nev. 515, in which the court said: "The rule that a case must be reversed where instructions on a material point are contradictory is not as unqualified as appellant contends for. If one party asks for an instruction which is given by the court, laying down a rule of law in language too broad and unqualified, and the other side then asks an instruction, which is also given, which qualifies and limits the former instruction, and in some respects contradicts it, if the second instruction contains only sound law, the conflict between the two instructions is not an error of which the party can complain who obtained the instruction which was too broad and unqualified. It might be that this was error injurious to the other side, for the jury might not understand that one instruction was a modification of the other, and might be misled by the too broad language of the first. But they could not do wrong by being governed by the modification. The error could not be complained of by the party who got the wrong instruction, or the instruction not properly qualified and guarded."

Error Favorable to Party Complaining.

— In an action upon certain promissory notes, where the defense was an agreement for an extension of time made by the agent of the plaintiff, and no claim was made by the pleadings of a subsequent ratification of such agreement by the plaintiff, it was held that while an instruction which submitted the question of subsequent ratification to the jury might have been erroneous, it was without prejudice to the defendants. Miller v. Root, 77 Iowa 545.

Instructions Apparently Conflicting. —

Unless a party is prejudiced or the jury misled by apparently conflicting in-

c. APPELLATE REVIEW. — If on appeal it is assigned as error that the instructions were contradictory, but no contradiction is pointed out, and none is apparent to the reviewing court, and no exceptions were taken upon the trial, the assignment will not be available.¹

7. As to Length and Number of Instructions — a. PRACTICE OF ASKING AND GIVING NUMEROUS AND LENGTHY INSTRUCTIONS CONDEMNED. — The practice of asking or giving large numbers of instructions, or instructions drawn out to a great length,² especially when argumentative in form,³ has been repeatedly condemned by reviewing courts as a pernicious practice, tending to confuse and mislead the jury by obscuring the real points in issue. The practice is further condemned because it entails unnecessary labor both on the trial and reviewing courts,⁴ and because the chances of error getting into the record are largely increased.⁵

Instructions Held Not Too Numerous. —

On the trial of a criminal case it was held that five instructions, each of which was made into matter pertaining to the case, and stated the law fairly to the jury, were not so numerous or perplexing as to work a reversal. Scolf v. Com., (Ky. 1887) 5 S. W. Rep. 361.

In Ingram v. State, 62 Miss. 142, the court said that the frequent commission of error in instructions in criminal cases suggests the opinion that it would promote the just administration of the law and advance the interests of the state if it were the practice in circuit courts to give fewer instructions; that in many cases it would be wise to give no instructions at all for the state; and that in none is it prudent to give many; that by the adoption of such a course, convictions would be as numerous and reversals would be rare. In Citizens' Gaslight, etc., Co. v. O'Brien, 19 Ill. App. 234, forty-two instructions, covering thirteen pages of the printed abstract, were presented to the court by the appellant. The court said: "To launch such a mass of legal conundrums upon a court, which can never enlighten a jury, but are generally drawn with the real, if not avowed, purpose of getting error into the record and entangling the court in some technical contradiction that may

Instructions Ought to Be as Few as Practicable in view of the evidence; couched in plain, simple language, addressed, as they usually are, to common understanding; and where they are so, and conform to the principles and policy of the law, it is enough.¹

b. JURY NOT TO BE LEFT UNINSTRUCTED BECAUSE OF TOO NUMEROUS REQUESTS. — It is not to be understood, however, from anything said, that the court may refuse instructions on account of their length or number, and leave the jury uninstructed in toto.² The court should either select so many of the instructions as the party asking is reasonably entitled to,³ or take the instructions asked by counsel "and embody the law contained in them and applicable to the case in a concise, perspicuous charge."⁴

Contrary Doctrine. — In one state alone are there any decisions which seem to maintain a contrary doctrine. In Missouri it is said, in a number of decisions, that the court would have been justified in refusing the instructions on the ground of their number alone; but an examination of these decisions will show that in each case the trial court either selected such of the instructions be used in a higher court, is a perversion of the law of instructing jurors."

A Few Plain Propositions embracing the law upon the facts of the case are greatly to be preferred in every case to a long string of instructions running into each other and involved in intricacies, requiring as much elucidation as the facts of the case themselves. State v. Mix, 15 Mo. 159; State v. Ward, 19 Nev. 297.

2. Andrews v. Runyon, 65 Cal. 629; Chicago West Div. R. Co. v. Haviland, 12 Ill. App. 561; Lowry v. Beckner, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 42; Mabry v. State, 71 Miss. 716, in which it was said: "The first thirty-two instructions asked by the accused were given, and the next seven were refused. We draw the line far this side of thirty-two instructions on one side. Life is too short and time too precious to be expended in dealing with fifty-three instructions, or any such number in one case; and as all terrestrial things have limits, we have determined to announce that where the court, in any case, has given the first six, eight, or ten instructions asked by a party, and refused any more, we will not consider errors assigned as to such refused instructions, unless it shall appear that the jury was not furnished a sufficient guide for their proper determination of the case."

Co.*, 38 Iowa 539; McCaleb v. Smith, 22 Iowa 244. In this case it is said that the practice of refusing to give instructions because they were unnecessarily lengthy and numerous would be a most dangerous one, and ought not to receive the sanction of an appellate tribunal.

Where numerous and complicated instructions are asked by counsel, calculated, in the opinion of the judge, to embarrass the jury, he has a right to refuse all, and to give such prepared by himself as may illustrate the principles of the law involved in the controversy and asked for by the parties. But whenever this course is taken, the judge should be careful to include in his instructions all the principles of law embraced in the instructions asked on both sides which should be given. Lowry v. Beckner, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 43.

In Hannibal v. Richards, 35 Mo. App. 15, we find the following statement by Judge Thompson: "In Andrews v. Runyon, 65 Cal. 634, it was held error to refuse to give any instructions merely because of the number and length of those requested. But contrary to this view, it has been held by our Supreme Court and by this court that where the issues are simple and few, and a multitude of instructions is presented to the court, the court is justified in refusing them all by reason of their number alone. Crawshaw v. Sumner, 56 Mo. 521; Desberger v. Harrington, 28 Mo. App. 636." It may be reasonably inferred from this quotation that Judge Thompson thinks that the trial court may properly refuse to give any instructions at all in behalf of a party whose requests for instructions are too lengthy and numerous. But neither of the cases thus cited nor any of the other Missouri decisions support this doctrine. In Desberger v. Harrington, 28 Mo. App. 636, the court, relying on the authority of Crawshaw v. Sumner, 56 Mo. 521, said that "as the issues were simple and few, and a multitude of instructions could only tend to confound the jury, the court would have been fully justified * * * to refuse all the instructions asked by the plaintiff, on account of their number alone," but it appears that in this case the court gave some of the instructions asked — presumably as many as were necessary to present the case fully to the jury. In Crawshaw v. Sumner, 56 Mo. 521, we find this statement: "The plaintiffs asked twenty-five instructions, which were refused. We think it unnecessary to transcribe them, as the number of them alone is sufficient to justify a court in refusing them. Such a multiplicity of instructions would only tend to confuse the jury. The points of law in the case were few — indeed substantially only two — and twenty-five instructions could only be comments on particular parts of the testimony or repetitions of a principle of law, neither of which it is the duty of a court to give if the instructions given cover the whole ground of dispute." Although the first part of this quotation may give color to the dicta of the later Missouri decisions, the whole statement should be taken together, and if this is done it is very clear that the court meant to limit the doctrine to cases where the court gave other instructions sufficient to cover the whole case. In this case, also, it appears that the instructions given fully presented the case to the jury. What has been said here in criticism of Judge Thompson's dictum is further supported by State v. Ott, 49 Mo. 326, in which it was held that "where counsel insist upon offering such a multitude of verbose instructions, the obvious tendency of which is to confuse the jury rather than enlighten or guide them, it would conduce to the administration of justice for the courts to refuse them altogether, and to give of their own motion a few clear, precise, and intelligent instructions, covering the law in the case."

The court should, as a general rule, instruct the jury hypothetically, and not assign a conclusive effect to circumstances, or assume that such circumstances were proven. In the absence of opposing proof they are

If There Is Any Conflict in the Evidence the court should instruct the jury hypothetically, stating the law applicable to such facts as there is evidence tending to prove, and leaving the jury to apply the law laid down in the instruction, in case they find the facts in accordance with the hypothesis.¹

If There Is Nothing to Counteract the Evidence and it would be the duty of the court to set aside the verdict contrary thereto, it would seem that the court may properly assume the facts as proved and instruct accordingly.²

Form of Hypothesis. — A charge presenting a hypothetical case should embrace all the circumstances in evidence bearing on the subject.³

Request for Instructions. — Where a point is put to the court upon oral testimony it must always state the evidence hypothetically, leaving it to the jury to determine what the fact is and then to apply it to the instruction of the court as given upon the supposed state of the fact. Bartley v. Williams, 66 Pa. St. 329.

If a party wishes to obtain instructions on a given hypothesis he must state the facts hypothetically, if they are controverted, and if disputed facts are assumed in a point propounded by one of the parties it may properly be refused. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McTighe, 46 Pa. St. 316.

It is not error to refuse to charge that if the jury believe certain witnesses they must find for the party in whose favor they testify; and the facts should be hypothetically stated, leaving the jury to decide whether they were proved. Chapman v. Erie R. Co., 55 N. Y. 579.

A defendant may successfully move the court for peremptory instructions to the jury, where he does so on the plaintiff's evidence alone, and admits every fact that the plaintiff's evidence conduces to prove, or he may himself mingle record evidence or undisputed evidence. But it is error to give peremptory instructions on motion of the defendant when he has introduced evidence of a parol character; the plaintiff has a right to controvert this, and the instructions should be hypothetical. *Dallam v. of Rule. — Although there are some decisions which hold that it is not error to read the pleadings to the jury, or to refer them to the jury in order that they may determine what are the issues in the case,¹ and other decisions holding that though not erroneous such practice is not commendable,² the clear weight of authority is to the effect that it is the province and duty of the court to state specifically to the jury what issues are raised by the pleadings, and that it is erroneous to refer the jury to the pleadings to ascertain for themselves what the issues were; that the construction of the pleadings and the issues raised thereby are questions for the court alone to determine, and not for the jury.³

Reason for Rule. — The difficulty which even learned judges often encounter in defining the issues as joined in the pleadings is argument sufficient in support of the rule. It would not conduce to a full and fair trial, that jurors, inexperienced in such matters, were left to determine the issues from the pleadings.⁴

How Issues Are Stated. — The court should instruct the jury as to what questions of fact are to be tried under the plead-the issues should always be given to the jury." Burns v. Oliphant, 78 Iowa 456.

What Are Issues Within the Rule. — Matters of dispute arising upon the law of the evidence are not issues which the court must specifically present to the jury. State v. Nadal, 69 Iowa 478.

Instances of Instructions Held Erroneous Under This Rule. — Instructions should not tell the jury that if they find that the act was done, "as charged in the petition," etc., Grant v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 227; or make a statement of this nature: "For a more precise and exact statement of the allegations of the parties and the issues in the case, see the pleadings themselves," Lindsay v. Des Moines, 68 Iowa 368; or say to the jury that the injuries complained of "are set out in plaintiff's declaration, which you will have out with you, and which you will read. In the defendant's plea, * * * which you will read, these wrongs and injuries are denied. * * * These pleadings form the issue which you * * * were sworn to well and truly try," East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Lee, 90 Tenn. 570; or direct the jury to the petition for the "particular statement of fact upon which the plaintiff must recover, if he is entitled to recover at all," Keatley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 94 Iowa 685.

Instructions Held Not Erroneous as Referring Jury to Pleadings for Issues. — The following instructions have been held not erroneous as referring the jury to the pleadings to ascertain the issues: An instruction that if the excavation "mentioned in plaintiff's petition" was made by the defendant contractor by permission of the city, and was made in the alley, "in the petition mentioned," Britton v. St. Louis, 120 Mo. 437; that upon the issue of contributory negligence raised by the defendant's answer, the burden of proof is upon the defendant, Sherwood v. Grand Ave. R. Co., 132 Mo. 339; an instruction containing the following words: "as charged in the indictment," "as mentioned in the indictment," State v. Scott, 109 Mo. 226; an instruction containing the words: "in direct consequence of the acts herein complained of," it appearing that the words quoted referred to acts complained of and specified in other instructions, Taylor v. Scherpe, etc., Architectural Iron Co., 133 Mo. 349. See also Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., (Iowa 1896) 66 N. W. Rep. 234, in which the court said: "In the first paragraph of the charge to the jury it was said that plaintiff claimed to be the owner of certain lots 'in said petition described,' and the property is not more definitely referred to in the instructions, but is throughout named as 'said premises, or property.' This is claimed to be error, because the jury was referred to the petition for the description of the property. We do not understand that the jury was referred to the petition to ascertain the numbers of lots, or the description of the property. The property was so designated by the evidence that a technical description was wholly unnecessary. The court stated the description in a general way, and this was sufficient. The instructions clearly and plainly stated the issues, and the jury was not directed to the pleadings to ascertain the issues."

Effect of Statute Forbidding an Expression of Opinion upon the Issues. — A statute (Maine Laws 1874, c. 212) which forbids the expression of opinion upon the issues of fact does not prohibit the judge from stating to the jury the questions upon which they are called to determine, or matters of fact which are not in dispute but appear in the case as admitted. McLellan v. Wheeler, 70 Me. 285.

Repetition Unnecessary. — Where the issues in the third division of an answer were substantially embraced in the second, it was held that the statement of the third division was unnecessary. Richmond v. Sundburg, 77 Iowa 255.

How Correctness of Instructions as to Issues Tested. — The correctness of an instruction must be determined by considering it in connection with the issues presented to the jury, but not with issues pleaded but not presented in the instructions. Warbasse v. Card, 74 Iowa 306.

Submitting Issue Not Raised by Pleadings — How Error Cured. — Where an instruction submitted one question which did not arise under the pleadings,¹ and should tell the jury what facts are denied and what facts stand admitted thereby.² It is erroneous to leave to the jury to determine whether a cause of action or defense has been stated,³ or to determine whether the evidence varies from the pleadings under which it is offered.⁴ The court may, however, properly omit to state an issue in support of which there is no evidence.⁵

Issue Withdrawn. — It is not necessary to instruct the jury as to an issue which has been withdrawn,⁶ even though there is some evidence in support of it.⁷

(2) Limitations of Rule. — Where, however, the pleadings contain a plain and simple statement of the matters in controversy, it has been held a sufficient statement of the issues to set out the pleadings and adopt them as a part of the instruction;⁸ and it has also been held that where references to the pleadings in the instruction are made for the purpose of shortening the instructions, and are not to the essential questions in the case, which

ings, but by other instructions the issues were properly submitted, and it was clear that the very question upon which the rights of the party depended was before the jury, it was held that this did not constitute reversible error. Newton v. Ritchie, 75 Iowa 91.

1. Procter v. Loomis, 35 Mo. App. 482; McGinnis v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 21 Mo. App. 399; Tipton v. Triplett, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 570.

3. People v. Jackson County, 92 Ill. 441; Bradshaw v. Mayfield, 24 Tex. 482. See also Hall v. Renfro, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 51, in which it was held erroneous to instruct that the jury are to construe and determine the effect of the pleadings.

Instructions Not Obnoxious to This Rule. — An instruction that if the plaintiff has made out his case as laid in his declaration the jury must find for the plaintiff, does not make the jury the judges of the effect of the averments of the declaration, but merely empowers them to determine whether the evidence introduced sustains the issues made by the pleadings in the case. People v. Jackson County, 92 Ill. 441. So an instruction directing a verdict for the plaintiff "if the jury believe * * * that the plaintiff has proven his declaration, or any one count thereof, in manner and form as therein set forth," does not require the jury to determine whether the cause of action is stated. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, 162 Ill. 200.

4. Oxley v. Storer, 54 Ill. 159.

5. Whalen v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 75 Iowa 563; Dupuy v. Burkitt, 78 Tex. 338; Carter v. Carusi, 112 U. S. 478.

Thus where but one issue is made by the testimony, although others are made by the pleadings, it is proper that the charge be confined to the issues made by the evidence, and to refuse charges as to other issues not so made. Dupuy v. Burkitt, 78 Tex. 338.

6. Stanford v. Murphy, 63 Ga. 410; Bugbee v. Kendrick, 132 Mass. 349. Fry v. Leslie, 87 Va. 269; New Haven Lumber Co. v. Raymond, 76 Iowa 225. A refusal to give an instruction upon a count in a declaration which is not submitted to the jury is no ground of exception. Bugbee v. Kendrick, 132 Mass. 349. So where a plea of the statute of limitations has been stricken out a failure of the court to instruct as to its effect is no ground of complaint. Fry v. Leslie, 87 Va. 269; Stanford v. Murphy, 63 Ga. 410.

7. Stanford v. Murphy, 63 Ga. 410.

Withdrawing Evidence. — Where an issue has been withdrawn, the evidence bearing on that issue should be taken from the jury. Hammer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 70 Iowa 623. But it has been held that where the court expressly charges the jury to consider only the issues submitted, a refusal to withdraw from the jury all the testimony bearing on such issues is not error. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Shieder, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 509.

8. Crawford v. Nolan, 72 Iowa 673.

are apparent in the instructions, they are not objectionable.¹ So it has been held not erroneous to refer the jury to the pleadings to ascertain a narrative of the facts therein contained.²

Where Other Instructions Correctly State Issues.— While it is improper to direct the jury to the pleadings for the purpose of ascertaining what the issues are, such reference will not work a reversal if the issues are clearly stated in other instructions without regard to such reference.³

Reference to Pleadings by Agreement.— So, if the parties agree that the pleadings shall form part of the instruction, a failure to state the issues is no ground of complaint, although erroneous.⁴

Approval of Statement Given.— And if the statement of the issues is submitted to and approved by the parties before being given, they cannot be heard to complain of any imperfections therein.⁵

6. MANNER OF STATING ISSUES.— It is not necessary that the issues should all be stated in a single paragraph of the charge. It is sufficient if they are fully stated to the jury in some part of the charge, in such a manner as to be understood.⁶

It is not improper to state in one instruction the issues as joined, and in another, if such be the fact, that the defendant has admitted the truth of the complaint in certain particulars. The two propositions are not inconsistent. Haymond v. Saucer, 84 Ind. 3.

Where the defense pleaded and the issues thereon are fairly and fully presented in an instruction, "it is as well presented in that connection as though it had been found in the statement of the pleadings and issues preceding the instructions." Siltz v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 71 Iowa 710.

Stating Issues in Terms Raised by Pleadings.— There can be no error in submitting the issue to the jury in terms in which it is raised. Planters Bank v. Alexandria Bank, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 346; Hess v. Newcomer, 7 Md. 342.

There can be no valid objection to a statement of the issues in the form in which they are made by the pleadings, even though an issue is thus presented on which, as a matter of law, there can be no recovery. Fleming v. Shenandoah, 71 Iowa 456.

Instructions Held Not Erroneous as Misstating Issues.— Where the petition charged negligence on the part of the engineer in backing up his train unusually fast, an instruction stating such cause of complaint referred to this allegation as being that "the parties in charge of the engine moved the train at an unusually fast rate of speed." The instruction was not erroneous in not properly stating the plaintiff's cause of action. Beems v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 58 Iowa 150.

Iowa—Statement of Issues to Be in Writing.— A statement of the issues should be in writing, and it is error to make such statement by reading from the pleadings portions which are not incorporated in the writings. Hall v. Carter, 74 Iowa 364; State v. Birmingham, 74 Iowa 407.

Ultimate Facts. — In stating the issues it will be sufficient to state the ultimate facts pleaded, where the pleadings contain matters of evidence instead of ultimate facts.¹

c. EFFECT OF MISSTATEMENT. — A misstatement of the issues in a case is, in general, reversible error.² But of course if it is apparent that no prejudice could have resulted, the judgment will not be reversed.³

d. EFFECT OF IMPERFECT STATEMENT. — In one jurisdiction it has been held that if the issues are imperfectly stated the party desiring a more specific instruction must call the attention of the court thereto by a request for a correct instruction, in order to secure a review by the Supreme Court,⁴ but in some states it is the duty of the court to instruct fully on all the issues presented by the pleading.⁵

Oskaloosa*, 57 Iowa 748, in which it was held that when the court, in stating the issues to the jury, stated that the amount claimed by the plaintiff was a certain amount, basing this statement upon both the original and the amended petitions, whereas the amount stated in the amended petition was not in addition to that stated in the original petition, such statement constituted error, but whether under the circumstances it was error without prejudice was not determined.

3. Stark v. Willetts, 8 Kan. 203, in which it was held that where the judge in charging the jury instructs them correctly as to the questions which they are called upon to consider and decide, under the pleadings and the evidence, he does not commit an error for which the judgment will be reversed, even if he misconstrues one of the pleadings in giving such an instruction. Brown v. Hendrickson, 69 Iowa 749, where it was held that the fact that the court in stating the issues to the jury confounds the action of trespass with trespass on the case does not constitute such error as will warrant a reversal.

If the court undertakes to state the issues it should do so fully, and give the jury such instructions in reference thereto as will enable them to apply the evidence understandingly to the principles of law contained in the charge of the court. Potter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 46 Iowa 402.

The Rule in Indiana. — "An instruction which purports to set out all the material averments necessary to be proven in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover must be correct and complete," and an omission of any such material averment is fatal. Jackson School Tp. v. Shera, 8 Ind. App. 330. Thus in an action by an employee against his employer for injuries resulting from unsafe appliances, while in the line of his duty, the essential elements necessary to be established, in addition to the injury, before there can be a recovery, are (1) that the appliance was defective; (2) that the employer had notice thereof, or by reasonable diligence ought to have known it; (3) that the employee did not know of the defect, and did not have equal means of knowing with the employer; and if, in instructing the jury, any of these essential elements is omitted, such omission will constitute reversible error. Kentucky, etc., Bridge Co. v. Eastman, 7 Ind. App. 514.

applicable to, the pleadings and evidence.¹ Instructions should be neither broader² nor narrower³ than the pleadings, but should be predicated of all the issues raised by the pleadings and supported by the evidence,⁴ and they are equally faulty whether they enlarge or restrict the issues.⁵

It is Erroneous to Submit to the Jury an issue which is not warranted by the pleadings and evidence.⁶ Instructions should not divert Instructions should correctly state the law applicable to the issues, and should submit all questions of fact arising in the case. Grim v. Robinson, 31 Neb. 540.

A charge ought not only to be correct as an abstract enunciation of the law, but to be so explicitly adapted to the pleadings and the proof as not to be misunderstood by the jury in their application of the law to the facts in evidence. Reardon v. State, 4 Tex. App. 602.

Harmless Error. — If the court charged the jury erroneously upon a proposition of law which does not arise in the case, either upon the pleadings or the evidence, and which could not affect the result, the error is immaterial and will not cause a reversal of the judgment. Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.

Where an instruction given was upon a matter not properly in controversy, and there was a special finding thereupon in the verdict, but in the judgment entered both the matter of the instruction and the finding were wholly ignored and treated as surplusage, there is no weight in an objection either that the court did not strike out so much of the verdict, or that the judgment did not conform to the verdict; and there was no prejudicial error which would justify an interference with the judgment. Kearney v. Wurdeman, 33 Mo. App. 447.

Presumptions on Appeal. — Where an instruction is given narrower than the issues made by the pleadings, and yet assuming to cover the whole question in dispute, the Supreme Court will presume, the record not showing the contrary, that the parties, on the trial, had limited their controversy to the ground covered by the instruction; so that in its application to the case it was right, if asserting no incorrect

Illustrations. — Where there is no allegation that the injury was caused by a failure on the part of the defendant to adopt rules and regulations for the protection of its employees, and nothing in the law or evidence calling for a charge on that subject, it should not be given. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Sweeney, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 173. So, in an action brought by a husband to recover for personal injuries to his wife, it is error for the court to submit to the jury the question whether damages should be allowed for the plaintiff's mental anguish, where there is no claim made in the petition for damages on that ground, and no evidence to support such a claim. Dallas Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Campbell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 884. In a trial of an action for negligence resulting in an injury, the defendant asked an instruction that the omission of certain acts or duties did not constitute such misconduct as the law would recognize as wanton or wilful. Such negligence was not alleged in the pleadings or claimed on the trial, and it was held that the refusal of such an instruction was proper, there being no such issue in the case. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 617. Instructions Held Justified by Pleadings.

— A declaration in an action for personal injuries alleged, in respect to the character of the injury received, that the plaintiff "then and there became and was sick, lame and disordered, and so remained for a long time, to wit, hitherto," etc. This was held to warrant an instruction that the jury might award to the plaintiff damages for such permanent injury as the evidence showed he had sustained, the question of permanency of the injury being one resting on the evidence and which need not be averred in the declaration. Eagle Packet Co. v. Defries, 94 Ill. 598. So, where a declaration alleges that the defendant "falsely, wilfully, voluntarily, knowingly, and corruptly" testified, on a former trial between the parties, to the material facts, which defeated the plaintiff's recovery, an instruction that unless a jury believe from the evidence that the defendant falsely, wilfully, etc., committed perjury they should find for the defendant is not erroneous as being variant from the allegation in the declaration. Bell v. Senneff, 83 Ill. 122. And where a declaration in an action for damages caused by the falling of a pile of barrels alleges that the plaintiff was working for the defendant near the barrels, and that it was the defendant's duty to keep them from falling, it was proper to instruct that it was the defendant's duty to use ordinary care in furnishing a reasonably safe place for the plaintiff to work and to use all reasonable precautions to that end. Libby v. Scherman, 146 Ill. 540. Where a complaint alleged that the defendant negligently overloaded a truck and placed it so as to obstruct a public sidewalk, and that the truck could not be passed without taking hold of it, and that while the plaintiff was passing along the sidewalk the truck fell on her without her fault, it was held that there was not a variance between the complaint and the instruction sufficient to warrant a reversal, though the court charged that if the truck was carelessly loaded by another company and brought to the employees of the defendant, and was received by the defendant's employees in that condition and suffered to remain, and the plaintiff in passing touched the truck, which caused it to fall, then the defendant was liable. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Shanks, 132 Ind. 395. In assumpsit, where the plaintiff alleges title and right of possession, and that the defendant converted the property into money, and the plaintiff offered evidence tending to show an absolute gift, and a gift in expectation of death, the court may instruct not only as to what constitutes an absolute gift, but also as to what constitutes a donatio mortis causa. Pryor v. Morgan, 170 Pa. St. 568. A charge that, under the facts adduced in evidence, does not correctly construe a lay down the broad doctrine that the instructions must be applicable and limited to the issues raised by the pleadings, and that it is error to give an instruction which does not conform to this rule.¹ Of course, if the giving of such an instruction constitutes contract involved in the issue, is not to be considered erroneous if it express the same idea as that conveyed by the plea, which sets it up as a defense. Fort v. Barnett, 23 Tex. 460. Where the plaintiff seeks to avoid a contract pleaded by the defendant, on account of undue influence and unfair advantage taken of weakness of mind, he is not required to plead such matter of avoidance in order to prove the same, and an instruction on that subject, if based upon evidence sufficient to warrant it, is not outside of the issues. Rankin v. Sisters of Mercy, 82 Cal. 88.

Limiting Recovery to Amount Prayed.

—An instruction should limit the amount of recovery to that asked. Crews v. Lackland, 67 Mo. 619; Fort Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Measles, 81 Tex. 474; Wright v. Jacobs, 61 Mo. 19. And where damages are asked they should be allowed; the instruction should not authorize the jury to consider any other grounds than those stated. Payne v. Francis, 37 Tex. 75; Taylor v. Kansas City Cable R. Co., 28 Mo. App. 552; Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., 86 Iowa 608; Holt v. Spokane, etc., R. Co., (Idaho 1893) 35 Pac. Rep. 39; Edmundson v. Pollock, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 185; Gardner v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 588; Farrell v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1297. Thus it is error to instruct the jury that they may allow for loss of time and expenses for medicine, where there is no allegation in the pleadings as to loss of time. Gardner v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 588. So, where a petition prays damages for making an embankment in the street in front of the plaintiff's property, thereby raising the grade, it is erroneous for the court, in instructing, to include a further cause of action and to direct the jury to assess damages sustained by reason of either or both. Taylor v. Kansas City Cable R. Co., 28 Mo. App. 552. In an action against a physician for damages arising out of his unskilful treatment of a patient, an instruction that if the jury believe that the plaintiff was injured by the unskilful treatment, ignorance, carelessness, and neglect of the defendant as a physician, they should find for the plaintiff, is erroneous where no damages were sought on the ground of carelessness or neglect. Payne v. Francis, 37 Tex. 75.

Ground for Reversal. — The decisions further hold that the giving of such an instruction, if calculated to mislead, will operate to reverse,¹ but that if it is apparent that such an instruction did not operate to the prejudice of the party complaining, the judgment will not be reversed.²

Instruction Applicable to Incompetent Evidence. — An examination of the reports of these decisions discloses few, if any, in which it appears definitely whether or not incompetent evidence to which such instructions might have been applicable was admitted. It would, therefore, be improper to cite these decisions as sustaining the proposition that an instruction should be limited to the issues raised by the pleadings, notwithstanding the admission of evidence inapplicable to the issues raised thereby. There are, however, many decisions bearing directly on this question, but they do not seem to be entirely harmonious.

(b) Rule that Instructions Must Be Strictly Limited to Issues Raised by Pleadings. — In some decisions it is said that a recovery can be had only on the case made by the pleadings, and that the issues cannot be changed by the instructions;³ that instructions should not be given unless there is evidence on which to base them, and that there can be no evidence on which to base them if that evidence overthrows the pleadings of the party who introduces it.⁴ These decisions and a number of others hold that even though evidence on which such instructions might be based is admitted, it is none the less error to give an instruction based thereon,⁵ and it is proper to refuse it.⁶ Only a few of these decisions show

"Instructions must be applicable to the pleadings and evidence, and it is not sufficient that there is evidence to support them when there is no issue under the pleadings to which they are applicable." Matson v. Frazer, 48 Mo. App. 302.

6. Whitman v. Keith, 18 Ohio St. 134. See also Doggett v. Sims, 79 Ga. 254, where it was held that where a complainant desires a bill to be construed as presenting three aspects for relief, definitely whether an objection was taken to the admission of the evidence on which the instructions held erroneous were based. In one of them it was held that the fact that an objection was not taken made no difference.¹

(c) Rule that Instructions May Be Based on Incompetent Evidence Admitted Without Objection — aa. STATEMENT OF RULE. — If the decisions cited in the notes of the preceding section, in which decisions it does not appear whether an objection was taken to the evidence or not, intend to lay down the rule that an instruction based on evidence improperly admitted is erroneous whether a proper objection to their admission was taken or not, they are against the weight of authority in cases involving this precise question and in cases involving similar questions; for while it is undoubtedly true that an instruction based on evidence incompetent under the pleadings and improperly admitted over objection is erroneous,² and a refusal of such instruction proper,³ unless an amendment is moved and made at the proper time,⁴ there are many decisions holding that if no objection is made to the admission of evidence incompetent under the pleadings, the error will be disregarded or an amendment permitted, and that the court such as actual fraud, constructive fraud, and mistake, the bill should suggest all three and not one only; that the court is not bound to charge the jury on a wider case than that made by the bill, though the evidence might warrant it were the bill amended; Marx v. Schwartz, 14 Oregon 177, where a requested instruction was refused, the court saying that an instruction which directs the attention of the jury to a fact not in issue and makes the finding on that fact decisive against the plaintiffs is erroneous, although, under proper issues, the question presented might become material and possibly decisive of the rights of the parties.

Harmless Error. — Where evidence is admitted at the trial, upon which instructions are given, both evidence and instructions being competent if founded upon proper pleadings, but no such issue is raised by the pleadings, such evidence and instructions are erroneous; but if from the whole record it is apparent that the verdict could not have been affected thereby, such error will not operate to reverse. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 39 Kan. 419.

1. Coos Bay R. Co. v. Siglin, 26 Oregon 387.

In Another Case, where no objection was taken, it was said that while the plaintiff, not having objected to the admission of the evidence, could not be heard to complain on that account, still the introduction of the evidence without objection did not enlarge the issues. Safety Fund Nat. Bank v. Westlake, 21 Mo. App. 572, in which the court further said that no issue of a waiver by the plaintiff of the performance by the defendant of the condition of the warranty was raised by the pleadings; therefore the plaintiff had a right to ask the court to submit the case to the jury without regard to such issue, and it was error for the court to refuse so to submit the case when asked by the plaintiff to do so.

Instructions Against Party Introducing Evidence. — Where improper testimony has been admitted against objection, the party introducing it cannot complain of an instruction based thereon. Bowen v. Carolina, etc., R. Co., 34 S. Car. 217.

may instruct the jury in relation to the whole field of inquiry covered by the evidence.¹

Issues Mutually Disregarded. — So it has been held that where the issues presented by the pleadings are mutually disregarded and evidence not competent under the pleadings is admitted, it is erroneous to refuse an instruction based on such evidence.²

See also Giles v. Fauntleroy, 13 Md. 126; Dorsey v. Dashiell, 1 Md. 207; Brooke v. Waring, 7 Gill (Md.) 5; Birney v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341, where it was held that when a request for an instruction neither points to nor refers to the pleadings, the correctness of its being rejected or granted depends not upon the state of the pleadings, but upon the evidence to which it alone refers. So in Stockton v. Frey, 4 Gill (Md.) 421, it was held that if a party desires the opinion of the court upon the evidence, in connection with the pleadings, he should frame his prayer accordingly; "as, for example, that the plaintiff is or is not entitled to recover under the pleadings."

Instances. — In an action for commissions claimed to have accrued to N. on a sale of a printing press to C. A. & Co., the complaint alleged that N. "sold" the press for the defendants and at their request. There was no evidence of such sale by N., but the question of fact fully litigated at the trial and submitted to the jury at the instance of the defendants was whether N. was instrumental in enabling them to sell the press. It was held that the complaint might be amended at any time to conform to facts proven, or the variance might be wholly disregarded. Flanders v. Cottrell, 36 Wis. 564.

Where the declaration alleged that the plaintiff was injured by the defendant's negligence in using certain defective tools, the court was authorized to charge in regard to negligence in using them in an unskilful manner, especially when the plaintiff was permitted to introduce evidence on this point without objection. Central R., etc., Co. v. Attaway, 90 Ga. 656.

The declaration, among other things, distinctly claimed damages because of an increase in the height of the dam, alleged to have been made by the defendants, which they denied; and although the plaintiff's evidence may have been insufficient to establish the truth of their contention upon this issue, yet as it appears to have remained in the case, both under the pleadings and the evidence, until the end of the trial, the court did not err in charging upon the same. Middlebrooks v. Mayne, 96 Ga. 450.

Amendment Held Necessary. — If the evidence shows a different state of facts from that contained in the pleadings, and the party to the suit desires instructions in accordance with those facts, he must first amend his pleadings by leave of court. Budd v. Hoffheimer, 52 Mo. 297.

2. Brusie v. Peck, 135 N. Y. 622, 48 N. Y. St. Rep. 439. In this case, which was an action for breach of contract whereby the defendants acquired exclusive right to manufacture and sell a machine patented by the plaintiff, the complaint alleged the fraudulent practice by the defendants of competing with and underselling the plaintiff upon the market by a machine resembling the plaintiff's, but inferior to the plaintiff's. The answer denied fraud, and alleged that the machine made and sold by the defendant did not infringe on the plaintiff's. On the trial the plaintiff proceeded for a recovery of royalties on the machines sold, abandoning the grounds alleged in the complaint, and Variance Not Objected to. — There are a great number of decisions to the effect that a variance between the pleadings and proof, if not objected to at the trial, cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal, provided the variance is not such as to leave the allegations of the pleadings unproved in their entire scope and meaning.¹ Under these decisions it would be proper to instruct as to the effect of evidence not properly admissible under the pleadings, if no objection was taken to its admission.

bb. LIMITATION OF RULE. — It is not to be understood, however, from anything here said, that the court may base an instruction on evidence constituting a cause of action entirely different from the one pleaded, as a pleading cannot be so amended as to state a new cause of action.²

(2) In Criminal Cases. — In criminal cases the rule is more strict than in civil cases. A charge must meet and be strictly limited by the case set forth in the indictment; it must not go outside and beyond the allegations. Before the jury can convict, the crime charged or one of lesser grade must be proved.³

evidence was admitted without objection tending to show the rescission of the contract. It was held erroneous to refuse to submit the question of rescission to the jury. Compare Kenyon v. Kenyon, 72 Wis. 234, where it was held that a failure to instruct on a point as to which there was evidence inadmissible under the pleadings was not erroneous where there was no request for such an instruction.

Illustrations. — It is erroneous to instruct the jury, on the trial of one charged with an aggravated assault, to return a verdict of guilty if they find that the defendant inflicted a serious bodily injury on the party assaulted, when that was not alleged in the indictment as a ground of aggravation. Coney v. State, 43 Tex. 414. Where the defendant was charged with the crime of feloniously entering a certain dwelling-house with intent to commit larceny, it was erroneous to instruct that if the jury believed from the evidence that the defendant entered the house with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or "any felony," they should find him guilty. People v. Mulkey, 65 Cal. 501. Where an indictment for murder by poison did not charge an attempt to rob, it was error to instruct the jury to consider whether such was the intent, and thus submit an issue not presented in the indictment. Tooney v. State, 5 Tex. App. 163. Where an information charged the playing of cards at a house for retailing spirituous liquors, an instruction to convict the defendant if the jury found that the playing was done at any other place was erroneous. Bacchus v. State, 18 Tex. App. 15. On a trial for conveying into a jail articles useful to aid prisoners in escaping, it is error to charge as to the law against aiding a prisoner to escape from an officer. Mason v. State, 7 Tex. App. 623.

Charge on Theory Consistent with Facts Proper. — Neither judge nor jury is strictly confined to the theory of either the prosecution or the defense in a criminal case if other theories are consistent with the facts. And a casual suggestion in the charge, involving a different theory and implying the possible guilt of some other person, is not clearly prejudicial to the respondent, and ought not to be made the subject of an exception unless objection is made to it at once, so that the judge can correct it if he sees fit. People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497.

c. LIMITING INSTRUCTIONS TO EVIDENCE — (1) Introductory Statement. — In charging the jury the court should limit its instructions to the facts in evidence.¹ The court is not called alone which arise from the facts and circumstances established by the testimony, and which properly belong to the case at bar.

The Fair Test of the propriety of a charge cannot be whether in the abstract it is right. It must be considered with reference to the evidence of the facts charged on which the jury is required to respond.¹

(2) Impropriety of Instructions Not Based on Evidence — The Rule Stated. — It follows, then, from what has been said, that it is improper to give an instruction where there is no evidence on which to base it, or to submit to the jury matters which there is no evidence tending to prove. There is a host of authorities enunciating and applying this rule.²

1. Thompson v. Shannon, 9 Tex. 536.

The instructions ought to have reference to the circumstances of the case, and to be so given as to secure the fair consideration of the judgment of the jury upon the points at issue. A charge which consists mainly of extracts or opinions in reported cases, having no special reference to the circumstances of the case on trial, is objectionable, and where from the consideration of the whole evidence it is reasonable to suppose that the jury may have been misled by such charge, a new trial ought to be granted. Marietta, etc., R. Co. v. Picksley, 24 Ohio St. 654.

Proper Test of Instruction. — A charge, as to its sufficiency or insufficiency, is to be tested by its applicability to the facts adduced in the evidence. Brown v. State, 6 Tex. App. 286.

A charge is to be interpreted by the evidence, and it is sufficient that it be correct as applied to the evidence. Warren v. Buckminster, 24 N. H. 336.

verse.¹ This is especially true where the instruction is favorable to the party complaining.²

(4) What Evidence Sufficient to Warrant Instructions. — To justify the trial court in giving an instruction predicated upon a supposed state of facts, it is not necessary that the court should be entirely satisfied of the existence of the facts on which the instruction was founded.³ It is not for the court, in ruling upon evidence, or in framing instructions, to determine the probative force of evidence. If the evidence is material, relevant, and competent, it is for the jury, and instructions bearing upon the evidence, without respect to its weight or credibility, cannot be deemed irrelevant.⁴ Accordingly an instruction cannot be deemed erroneous if there be any evidence on which to base it, no matter how slight and inconclusive that evidence may be.⁵

The court should, if asked, submit to the jury every proposition of fact, if the evidence adduced in its support is of such force that fair-minded men might doubt or debate as to whether it had been proved, and an instruction as to the rule of law appropriate to such a state of case ought to be given.

A Refusal to give an instruction where there is any evidence at all, no matter how slight or inconclusive, is equally erroneous.¹ The court is not justified in refusing an instruction merely because it believes that the weight of the evidence does not support it.²

Trifling Statements. — Instructions should not be given, however, upon trifling and indefinite statements irrelevant to the question at issue.³

Evidence Raising Conjecture. — Nor should instructions be given upon evidence which at the most merely raises a conjecture,⁴ nor where the evidence is so slight as to amount merely to an assumption.⁵

Instructions as to Qualifications and Exceptions to Rules. — In giving a general rule as applicable to the evidence, if there is evidence tending fairly to bring the case within an exception to that rule, it is proper for the court, in connection with the rule itself, or in some other part of the charge, to refer to the exception and the Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Puckett, 42 Ill. App. 642.

It is not necessary the court should be satisfied the hypothetical case stated in an instruction is fully sustained by the testimony before it would be required to submit it to the jury. That would practically include the services of a jury, and would debar a party of the constitutional right to have his cause tried by a jury. The court might take one view of the evidence, and yet, if submitted, a jury might reach a different conclusion, and it is for that reason a party has the right to have submitted any hypothetical case the testimony tends to sustain, otherwise the court might try the cause without the intervention of a jury in the first instance. But that, of course, could not be done over objection taken. Even positive testimony is not always required. It has been held by this court, in cases where there was no direct evidence of a material fact, that circumstances proven from which the fact might reasonably be inferred would be sufficient on which to base an instruction. It was so ruled in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 Ill. 272, and also in Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 134.

Where there is evidence to which an instruction is applicable, it is immaterial by whom or for what purpose it was introduced. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Buchanan, 100 Ind. 63.

Car. 606. See also Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 402. In this case the court said: "If its force is deemed to be very weak, trivial, light, and its application remote, the court is not required to give a charge upon it. If, on the other hand, it is so pertinent and forcible as that it might be reasonably supposed that the jury could be influenced by it in arriving at their verdict, the court should charge so as to furnish them with the appropriate rule of law upon the subject."

Although it is not easy in practice to draw the boundary between a defect of evidence and evidence confessedly slight, where no part of the testimony offered can fairly warrant the inference of the fact in issue or furnish more than materials for a mere guess or conjecture thereon, it is error for the court to leave it to the jury to infer the fact from such testimony. Cobb v. Fogelman, 1 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 440.

testimony tending to sustain it.¹ But the court need not specify exceptions to a general rule where there is no evidence tending to bring the case within such exceptions,² and it is even erroneous to lay down a correct qualification to a rule of law, when there is no evidence touching the subject-matter of the qualification.³

(5) Basing Instructions on Rejected Testimony. — It is erroneous to give an instruction based on rejected testimony,⁴ and, of course, it is proper to refuse a request to give such instruction.⁵ Such instructions are out of place and have nothing to rest on.⁶

(6) Presumptions on Appeal. — On appeal or error, if the record fails to show the applicability of an instruction asked and refused to the evidence, such refusal cannot be held erroneous. The presumption is that the instruction was properly refused.⁷ But the giving of an instruction not applicable to any evidence admissible under the issues is error and ground of reversal, though the evidence be not in the record.⁸

11. Basing Instructions on Belief from Evidence. — It is very generally declared to be erroneous so to instruct the jury that they can find a verdict upon their belief not based upon the evidence. Hence an instruction prefaced with the words, "if you believe," instead of, "if you believe from the evidence," should not be given.⁹

Where Improper Testimony Is Withdrawn. — Where evidence is put in under an objection, and the judge permits the party putting in the evidence to withdraw it, a refusal to give instructions which are only appropriate on the theory that the evidence is in the case is not a ground of exception. Hayes v. Kelley, 116 Mass. 300.

Rohr*, 70 Md. 328, in which the court said: "The objection made to the plaintiff's prayers that they do not say that 'the jury must find from the evidence,' is hypercritical. All instructions are based on the evidence; and the jury are told that if they find, which means, without possible chance of misleading, that if the evidence convinces them of the state of facts set out in the prayer, then they must find for the plaintiff."

Instructions Held Unobjectionable. — An instruction that "if from all the evidence and under the instructions

Ground for Reversal. — There are very few decisions, however, in which it appears that an instruction vicious in this respect was of itself sufficient ground for reversal. According to two of the decisions cited, such a defect would not be ground for reversal.¹ According to others, the judgment should not be reversed unless it appears that the jury were misled.² The remaining decisions on this question all show other errors which would be ground for reversal, so that it is not easy to determine whether the court would have reversed on this ground alone.

It Is Not Necessary to Repeat in Each Clause of an instruction that the jury must believe from the evidence.³

you find for the plaintiff, then, in fixing the amount of damages you will award, it will be proper to allow the plaintiff * * * such damages as he sustained, if any, on account of the delay occasioned by being required to leave the train," is not objectionable as allowing the jury to assess the plaintiff's damages without reference to the evidence. Pennsylvania Co. v. Connell, (Ill. 1889) 20 N. E. Rep. 89.

So an instruction that in case the jury find for the plaintiff they "must take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the case," is not objectionable as directing the jury that they are at liberty to go outside of the case as made for circumstances upon which to direct their verdict. Dufour v. Central Pac. R. Co., 67 Cal. 324.

So the following instruction was held not objectionable as not requiring the jury to assess the damages from the evidence in the case: "If you find under the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, it will be your duty to assess the amount of damages which, in your judgment, she should recover. In estimating this amount you may take into consideration expenses actually incurred, loss of time occasioned by the immediate effect of her injuries, and physical and mental suffering caused by and arising out of her injuries. In addition you may consider the professional occupation, if any, of the plaintiff, and her ability to earn money, and she will be entitled to recover for any permanent reduction of her power to earn money by reason of her injuries; and the amount assessed should be such a sum as, in your judgment, will fully compensate her for the injuries, or any of them, thus sustained." Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 429. See also Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196.

"If the Evidence Shows You," — It is not error for the court, in its charge to the jury, to use the words, "if the evidence shows you," instead of the language, "if you believe from the evidence." Silberberg v. Pearson, 75 Tex. 287.

Conjectures from Evidence. — It is not error for the court to caution the jury that they must find their verdict upon what is actually adduced in evidence, and not upon conjectures arising from a seeming withholding of the testimony of better-informed witnesses. Statesville Bank v. Pinkers, 83 N. Car. 377.

1. McPherson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 97 Mo. 253; State v. Umfried, 76 Mo. 404.

2. Holliday v. Burgess, 34 Ill. 193.

Where the first part of an instruction omitted the words, "from the evidence," as the basis of the jury's belief, but at the conclusion of the clause stated, "and if you further believe from the evidence," it was held that the jury could not have been misled and have felt authorized to act on a belief not arising from the evidence. Belden v. Woodmansee, 81 Ill. 25.

3. Miller v. Balthasser, 78 Ill. 302; Wear v. Duke, 23 Ill. App. 322; Gizler v. Witzel, 82 Ill. 322; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Lockhart, 71 Ill. 627; State v. Davis, 27 S. Car. 609. See also Wills v. Cape Girardeau Southwestern R. Co., 44 Mo. App. 51.

It is sufficient if, in the first clause of the instruction, the jury are told that their belief must be founded upon the evidence, and there is nothing in the subsequent part from which sensible men could infer that they had a right to find a verdict upon any belief outside of the evidence. Miller v. Balthasser, 78 Ill. 302.

Admitted Facts. — An instruction based upon an admitted fact or upon facts not disputed is not erroneous merely because it fails to contain the words, "if you believe from the evidence."¹

Belief from Instructions. — An instruction beginning, "if you believe from the evidence and the instructions," is erroneous.²

"Inclined to Believe." — An instruction to find for one of the parties if the jury are "inclined to believe" certain facts, is erroneous.³

12. Singling Out and Giving Undue Prominence to Issues and Evidence — a. SINGLING OUT ISSUES. — If there are several important issues, the court should not single out one and submit it to the jury as the controlling issue.⁴

b. SINGLING OUT EVIDENCE — (1) Statement of Rule. — So, in framing instructions, it is very generally regarded as improper for the trial court to single out and give undue prominence to isolated portions of the evidence.⁵ Nor is it allowable in an Instructions Held Not to Violate Rule Against Singling Out Evidence. — An instruction which in substance informs the jury that if they find from the evidence the facts alleged in the declaration, relied upon as proved (reciting them), their verdict should be for the plaintiff, is not objectionable as selecting and giving undue prominence to isolated portions of the evidence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Snyder, 117 Ill. 376. Where there were but two witnesses for the defendant, and the testimony of one M. presented fully the plaintiff's claim, it was not error as giving undue prominence to the testimony of one witness to charge that if the jury believed M. they should find for the plaintiff. Gregg v. Mallett, 111 N. Car. 74. An instruction which sets out the facts stated in the petition, and bases a right to recover on proof of such facts, is not objectionable for presenting the cause of action with undue emphasis. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Dunlap, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 655.

Argumentativeness. — Such an instruction is, in a sense, argumentative, and the office of an instruction is not that of an argument to the jury on the facts, but to inform them what the law of the case is,¹ without giving undue prominence to any special feature of the evidence.²

A Positive Misdirection. — An instruction which singles out particular portions of the evidence,³ or the testimony of a particular witness or witnesses,⁴ and directs the jury to find one way or the other if they believe such evidence, amounts to a positive misdirection if there is other evidence which might authorize a different result, and of course the refusal of such an instruction is proper.⁵

Applications of Rule. — Where the court instructs the jury upon what state of facts they must find a verdict for a party, the instruction should include all the facts in controversy material to the rights of the plaintiff or the defense of the defendant.⁶ It is improper to direct the jury that they may look to certain evi-

It is an abuse of the purpose of a request to charge, to endeavor to get the court to give special prominence to particular testimony by calling the jury's attention especially to it, and so get the court to argue the case for the party making such request. Reed v. Reed, 56 Vt. 492.

Where, in a suit on an altered note, a knowledge on the part of the defendant of the alteration was put in issue, and there was also a denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's ownership of the note, the presentation of the note for payment, its dishonor, notice to the plaintiff, etc., an instruction which tells the jury that if they should find that the alteration was made with the consent of the defendant, this would warrant a finding for the plaintiff, is erroneous, in that it singles out certain facts and directs a verdict on them, regardless of other facts at issue. Iron Mountain Bank v. Murdock, 62 Mo. 70.

It is error to single out a number of inconclusive circumstances in proof favorable to the one side, omitting all references to other circumstances favorable to the other side and bearing on the same point, and inform the jury that such circumstances are proper for their consideration in making up their verdict. McIntyre v. Thompson, 14 Ill. App. 554.

dence as tending towards certain conclusions,¹ or that they may look to and consider certain facts in determining a disputed question,² or to state that a particular fact is of great importance.³

Giving Undue Prominence by Repetition. — So undue prominence may be given to evidence by a repeated reference thereto, and this should be avoided.⁴

Lessening the Importance of Evidence. — A commentary by the court upon a particular fact in evidence is also vicious when its tendency is to lessen the evidentiary value of such fact.⁵

(2) Limitations and Exceptions to Rule. — The rule against singling out facts in charging is not applicable where the effect of the facts thus selected cannot be varied by any of the other facts proven.⁶ So where all the evidence consists in a single undisputed fact, constituting the plaintiff's case, the rule does not apply.⁷ Nor is it objectionable to tell the jury that the force of a fact established by the evidence is not what is claimed for it.⁸ It is also held proper to direct a jury's attention to important evidence in such terms as to explain the case and aid them to give their attention to essential points, if it is done without misleading them or withdrawing their attention from other important evidence.⁹

"Counsel may select the strong and salient points appearing, and seek in the argument to direct the thought of the jury to them as being the important and controlling features of the case, but the instructions of the court should not be made the medium for conveying such views to the jury." Meachem v. Hahn, 46 Ill. App. 149.

Whether Error Will Operate to Reverse.

— Ordinarily the repetition in a charge of the court of the elements of damage which the jury may consider will not require a reversal of a judgment rendered against the defendant; but when the verdict seems excessive, a reasonable presumption arises that the jury may have been influenced thereby. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Gordon, 70 Tex. 80.

If the charge is otherwise correct, and it is not apparent that injury has been done by the repetition, the judgment will not be reversed. Maes v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App.

1893) 23 S. W. Rep. 725; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Larkin, 64 Tex. 454.

5. Leeser v. Bockhoff, 33 Mo. App. 223.

Casting Discredit upon Particular Witness. — The trial court should not call the attention of the jury to particular testimony in such a way as to throw discredit upon it, or to lead the jury to believe that the judge discredits the witnesses or their testimony. Wilson v. Hotchkiss, 81 Mich. 172.

6. Beers v. Housatonic R. Co., 19 Conn. 570.

Theory of Each Party Fairly Presented.

— And where the theory of each party, as well as the testimony in support of it, is fairly presented, one party cannot complain that the testimony of the other assumes more prominence in the charge when it appears that this is due to the nature and quality of the testimony itself. Irvin v. Kuttruff, 152 Pa. St. 609.

Testimony of One Witness Decisive. —

So where the testimony of one witness is of such a character that if believed by the jury it is decisive of the merits of the case, the court may

13. Giving Undue Prominence to Propositions of Law. — According to some decisions the trial court should not, by frequent repetition, place too prominently before a jury any principle of law involved in the cause on trial,¹ and an instruction defective in this respect may properly be refused.² If, however, it becomes necessary, in instructing as to the different phases of the case, to embody a proposition in several instructions, the prominence thus given to the proposition does not constitute error,³ and according to another decision it does not constitute error to repeat a correct proposition of law any number of times.⁴

14. Ignoring Issues, Theories, and Evidence — a. IGNORING ISSUES AND THEORIES. — The charge should be so framed as not to ignore or exclude any of the material issues in the case. A requested instruction, defective in this respect, should always be refused, and if given will, in general, operate to reverse the decision.⁵ Where there are several distinct issues, it is error to charge the jury hypothetically in reference to it without noticing the other evidence. Hart v. Bray, 50 Ala. 446; Garrett v. Garrett, 27 Ala. 687.

Ignoring Issues and Theories — Instances. — Where the defendant's liability depended on the existence of a partnership, and there was evidence on that subject proper for a jury, a prayer denying the plaintiff's right to instruct the jury to find a verdict in favor of one party if they determine a particular one of the issues in his favor,¹ and where a case rests upon several grounds necessary to be passed upon by the jury, the court cannot properly give an instruction which will make the case turn on a single point.² In charging the jury it will be sufficient if the charge taken as a whole covers all the issues,³ and an instruction may properly ignore issues where there is a total lack of evidence in support of them.⁴

b. IGNORING EVIDENCE — (1) Instructions Ignoring Material Evidence Erroneous. — Instructions which ignore material evidence in the case are erroneous.⁵ It is the right and duty of the recover, based on the theory of principal and agent, of which there was also evidence, and ignoring the partnership, is erroneous. Fulton v. Maccracken, 18 Md. 528. An instruction upon a case of conflict brought on by the accused, giving only the law applicable if the conflict had been brought on with intent to kill, is erroneous. The failure to instruct upon the law had the conflict been brought on for any other purpose might convey to the jury the impression that the conflict had been brought on with intent to kill. Perry v. State, 44 Tex. 473. Where an affirmative defense is pleaded in the defendant's answer, it is error to instruct that "if you believe from the evidence that all the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint have been proven by a preponderance of the evidence, then you will find for the plaintiff." Dignan v. Spurr, 3 Wash. 309. Where two contracts are in evidence, an instruction applicable to one of them, ignoring the existence of the other, is properly refused. Krewson v. Purdom, 13 Oregon 563. Where suit is brought for money loaned to a church, and the defense is that the plaintiff accepted the personal obligation of the church treasurer in satisfaction of his claim, an instruction ignoring this defense by directing a verdict for the plaintiff if the church has not paid the sum borrowed, is erroneous. Swedish Lutheran Immanuel Church v. Nelson, 43 Ill. App. 493. In a suit for breach of warranty an instruction that if the jury believe the goods to have been deposited with the plaintiff to be sold for the defendant, they must find for the defendant, is erroneous for failure to make any reference to the terms on which the deposit may have been made. Beall v. Pearre, 12 Md. 550. An instruction should not present promi-nently the theory of one party and overlook that of his adversary. Jones v. Rex, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 1077; Fiore v. Ladd, 25 Oregon 423; Minick v. Gring, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. Thus an instruction that if a given state of facts is found by the jury the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict is erroneous, if it ignores the defendant's theory, which is supported by testimony, and which is a complete defense if accepted by the jury. Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

Ignoring Evidence—Instances. — Instructions on a contract which altogether ignore the limitations of the contract are erroneous and should not be given. Craycroft v. Walker, 26 Mo. App. 469. On the contest of a will on the ground of an insane delusion on the part of the testator, the proponents of the will asked an instruction to the effect that if the maker's brain was not diseased to such an extent as to render him incapable of transacting his ordinary business, he was capable of making the will. It was held that this instruction was properly refused as ignoring the question of insane delusion. American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 623. A charge requested which, specifying one or two of the facts proved, instructs the jury that "this, in the absence of other suspicious circumstances, does not necessarily establish the crime" charged, is properly refused. Buchanan v. State, 55 Ala. 154. A charge that if the jury believe "from the evidence that the defendant killed deceased by shooting him with a pistol, the law presumes it was done with malice," when the evidence tended to show that the pistol was resorted to in self-defense, is erroneous, since it ignores the evidence of self-defense. Martin v. State, 47 Ala. 564. In an action against a street-car company to recover for injuries caused by a collision with a locomotive at a crossing, the defense was that the track was wet, and that the shortness of the distance from the crossing rendered it practically impossible to stop the car. It was held proper to refuse an instruction requiring the defendant to show that the injury was the result of an inevitable accident. Jacquin v. Grand Ave. Cable Co., 57 Mo. App. 320.

Instructions Held Not Objectionable as Ignoring Evidence. — An instruction which directs the jury's attention to the principal question in the case is not erroneous, even if there are some minor and subordinate questions not noticed therein, but to which attention has been sufficiently called in other instructions. International Bank v. Ferris, 118 Ill. 465. In a proceeding to condemn land for right of way, in which a cross-petition was filed, claiming damages to other lands, it was admitted that the cross-petitioner had title to a portion of the land, and also that his grantors had good title to another portion of the land in question. It was held that an instruction that "statements of counsel or parties not made under oath, or made as admissions, are not evidence, and are not to be regarded as such by the jury in making up their verdict," was not objectionable as excluding such admissions from the jury. Bowman v. Venice, etc., R. Co., 102 Ill. 459. An instruction is not necessarily objectionable as ignoring a question of fact because it lays especial stress upon another question of fact. Thus an instruction telling the jury that it is a question of fact to be by them determined, whether any part, and if so how much, of the proceeds of the sale of cattle belonging to another, the claimant, came into the hands of the executor of the estate of the person making the sale, after the death of the latter, in a suit against the executor to recover such proceeds, is not to be understood as holding that to be the only question of fact submitted to the jury for consideration. Kirby v. Wilson, 98 Ill. 240. An instruction that if the jury found certain facts "from the testimony of the plaintiff," she was not necessarily negligent, is not objectionable for ignoring conflicting testimony given by the defendant, but simply states the effect of the facts testified to by the plaintiff. Shaw v. Sun Prairie, 74 Wis. 105.

Rebuttal Testimony of Minor Importance. — Where the trial judge has fully stated all the direct evidence bearing upon the case, the judgment will not be reversed because he failed to refer to they should be left free to do so.¹ An instruction should not be based on the evidence of one party while that of his adversary is ignored,² and in criminal cases should not ignore a material fact as a constituent of the prisoner's guilt.³ The mere fact that evidence is strongly contradicted,⁴ or even weak and inconclusive, does not justify a charge ignoring it.

(2) Refusal of Instructions Ignoring Material Evidence Proper. — It is always proper to refuse an instruction which ignores material evidence in the case.⁵

hibited by constitutional¹ or statutory provisions,¹ the common-law practice of summing up the evidence² is still permissible where there is nothing in the organic law or statutes prohibiting it.³

Statutory Authority. — In some of these jurisdictions, indeed, there is express constitutional or statutory authority for this practice. Thus in some states the provisions against charging on the weight of the evidence permit the court to state the testimony and declare the law applicable thereto.⁴

1. See supra, IV. 1. Charging on the Weight of the Evidence.

2. Summing up evidence is thus outlined by Blackstone: "When the evidence is gone through on both sides, the judge, in the presence of the parties, the counsel, and all others, sums up the whole to the jury; omitting all superfluous circumstances, observing wherein the main question and principal issue lies, stating what evidence has been given to support it, with such remarks as he thinks necessary for their direction, and giving them his opinion in matters of law arising upon that evidence." 3 Black. State*, 48 Ind. 163) hold that it is competent for the trial court to sum up the evidence. Then follow two decisions (Killian v. Eigenmann, 57 Ind. 480; Cunningham v. State, 35 Ga. 373) which hold directly to the contrary. But a still later decision (Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Sponier, 85 Ind. 165) contains a dictum to the effect that the trial judge may sum up the evidence. These are all the decisions on the question which the writer has been able to find, and he would not like to hazard an opinion as to what this court will decide when the question is again presented.

So a statute of one state provides that the court may state to the jury the law of the case, and may also state

Construction. — The provisions which prohibit charging on the weight of the evidence, but which authorize the trial judge to state the evidence and declare the law, are thus construed. They take away from the judge all power to intimate or express any opinion on the facts, but leave unimpaired his right to recapitulate or sum up the evidence as at common law,¹ the latter clause being merely declaratory that the judge's discretion in that regard is not affected by the prohibitory clause.² So a statute which merely declares that the trial court shall not express an opinion as to what has or has not been proved does not take away the right to sum up the evidence.³

b. MANNER OF STATING EVIDENCE — (1) In General. — In summing up evidence the court need not repeat the testimony of a witness verbatim; it will be sufficient if the substance of the testimony is correctly given.⁴

the evidence when the same is disputed. Alabama Code, § 2754. See also Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37. And in another there is a statutory provision that the trial court "shall state in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case, and declare and explain the law arising thereon." North Carolina Code 1883, § 413.

1. State v. Lipsey, 3 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 485; Com. v. Barry, 9 Allen (Mass.) 278.

2. State v. Lipsey, 3 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 485.

"Although there is a seeming repugnancy in the two branches of the section, we think that they are susceptible of a reasonable interpretation, which will give full force and effect to both of them, and at the same time carry out what seems to have been the manifest purpose of the legislature. It is clear beyond controversy that the first clause contains a distinct and absolute prohibition, that the courts shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact." To reconcile this with the clause that follows, which provides that the courts 'may state the testimony and the law,' the prohibition must be regarded as a restraint only on the expression of an opinion by the court on the question whether a particular fact or series of facts involved in the issue of a case is or is not established by the evidence. In other words, it is to be construed so as to prevent courts from interfering with the province of juries by any statement of their own judgment or conclusion upon matters of fact. This construction effectually accomplishes the great object of guarding against any bias or undue influence which might be created in the minds of jurors, if the weight of the opinion of the court should be permitted to be thrown into the scale in deciding upon issues of fact. But further than this the legislature did not intend to go. The statute was not designed to deprive the court of all power to deal with the facts proved. On the contrary, the last clause of the section very clearly contemplates that the duty of the court may not be fully discharged by a mere statement of the law. By providing that the court may also state the testimony, the manifest purpose of the legislature was to recognize and affirm the power and authority of the court, to be exercised according to its discretion; to sum up the evidence, to state its legal effect and bearing on the issues, and to indicate its proper application under the rules of law." Com. v. Barry, 9 Allen (Mass.) 278.

3. Shiels v. Stark, 14 Ga. 429.

4. Krepps v. Carlisle, 157 Pa. St. 358; Strawn v. Shank, 110 Pa. St. 259. Compare People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, where it was held that if the judge in his charge to the jury in a criminal case undertakes to state a portion of the testimony, the safer way is to recite the language of the witness as taken down by the reporter or in the judge's notes; but when the language of the district judge is in substance and effect a repetition of the testimony, the defendant cannot complain. See also People v. Perry, 65 Cal. 569; People v. Vasquez, 49 Cal. 560.

Using Memorandum Made by Another Person. — It is not improper for a

Order of Recapitulation. — So the court is not bound to recapitulate or state the testimony of each witness in the exact order it was given, but he may arrange it in the order in which it applies to the several questions of fact arising in the case, and lay it before the jury as thus arranged.¹

Words Spoken by Witness — Circumstances. — Nor is the judge confined to the words spoken by the witnesses. He may state all the circumstances attendant upon the examination to show how they are contradictory and how reconcilable, and then submit a reasonable inference which may be drawn.²

Existence or Nonexistence of Evidence. — The right to state the evidence has been held to include the right to state that there is no evidence,³ or that there is evidence,⁴ as to a particular fact.

Testimony of Particular Witness. — So the court may tell the jury what the testimony of a particular witness was, if requested so to do.⁵

judge, in stating the testimony to the jury, to read a memorandum of testimony taken by another person, instead of using his own minutes or making the statement from his own recollection. People v. Boggs, 20 Cal. 432.

Summing up evidence includes the idea of placing it in its logical relation to the propositions which it is adduced to support or contradict, as well as to the propositions and rules of law by which its bearing and force ought to be controlled. Redding v. South Carolina R. Co., 5 S. Car. 69.

2. State v. Moses, 2 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 452. See also Rose v. Otis, 5 Colo. App. 472.

Thus where a witness testified that at a distance of ten paces on a dark night he saw the prisoner pull the trigger of a gun, and the judge informed the jury that if they believed the witness to mean that by the flash of the gun he saw the prisoner's hand upon the trigger, that would explain the apparent contradiction, it was held that the judge by such an instruction did not transgress the limits of his duty. State v. Moses, 2 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 452.

The judge is not a mere machine to detail to the jury the evidence just as it occurred and in the order it occurred. It is the duty of the judge, when he does charge upon evidence, to collate it and bring it together in one view, on each side, with such remarks and illustrations as may properly direct the attention of the jury to the merits of the case. It is also his duty to bring to the notice of the jury principles of law or facts which have an important bearing upon the case, though omitted in the arguments of counsel. Bailey v. Poole, 13 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 404.

The North Carolina statute (Code, § 413), prescribes that the court "shall state, in a plain and correct manner, the evidence given in the case, and declare and explain the law arising thereon." This does not imply a mere recital of the evidence. This would be of little or no service. It means a clear, fair, and intelligent statement of it in its bearings, its relations, one part with another, and its legal bearings upon the issues submitted to the jury. The object is to help the jury clearly to apprehend and apply it, and to give it just and proper weight, this being the sole province of the jury. State v. Jones, 97 N. Car. 469.

The presiding judge, at a trial, may call the attention of the jury to the evidence which is in the case, and state his recollection of what has or has not

Claims and Theories. — The court may state the respective theories and claims of the parties.¹

(2) Effect of Misstatement. — It is not every misrecollection by the court of a witness's testimony, or every misstatement of his language, that works material error.² In the absence of anything to show that the jury were misled to the prejudice of the party complaining,³ or of exceptions saved,⁴ the judgment will not be reversed. A misstatement of evidence which will work a reversal "must be in a substantial part of the testimony, and such a misstatement as probably misleads the jury."⁵ Such a misstatement is, of course, reversible error.⁶

McCready*, 54 Conn. 174; State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 388, in which the court said: "The prisoner claims that the judge erred in saying, in the course of his charge, that it was claimed by the prisoner that three chambers only of his pistol were found discharged, that previous to the affray it had been shown by witnesses that he made three discharges of his pistol, and that the cylinder now showed that three discharges only had been made, and that consequently his pistol could not have done the mischief; that the state claimed to have shown that after the pistol was loaded at Thompson's corner, about four o'clock that afternoon, two discharges of it were made; that if these three discharges were made as the prisoner claims, then five discharges were made; that if this was so the prisoner must have reloaded somewhere. It is claimed that the judge stated a conclusion of fact to the jury, upon a point upon which there were conflicting claims and testimony. But it seems to us that the judge was simply stating the claims of the state and the prisoner, and that if such claims were correct, such must have been the result. We see no objection to this, and cannot see how the prisoner could possibly have been prejudiced by it."

A mistake by the judge in stating the testimony to the jury on a trial for murder is not a sufficient ground for setting aside a verdict finding the defendant guilty of manslaughter, where the character of the mistake renders it improbable that the verdict was influenced thereby. *People v. Failure to Save Exception — Illustration of Rule. — In charging the court said: "The evidence shows that three letters, I think, were mailed from La Crosse by the defendants, of this character;" and the evidence showed that there were only two. It was held that objections to this misstatement were waived by failure of the party aggrieved to call the attention of the court to it at the time. Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236.

Remedy for Misstatement of Testimony. — It has been held that if testimony is incorrectly stated to the jury, or reference to some material testimony is omitted in the charge, the proper remedy is to call the attention of the judge to such error or omission at the time, or at least move for a new trial before the Circuit Court upon that ground. State v. Davis, 27 S. Car. 609.

c. WHAT FULNESS OF STATEMENT REQUIRED. — In recapitulating the evidence, it is largely within the discretion of the court as to how much detail shall be entered into, and how minute the reference to the testimony shall be.¹

All Evidence and Theories. — The court is not bound to recapitulate all the evidence in its charge to the jury,² nor is the court bound

Illustrations. — In an action for the killing of a person by a railroad company at a crossing, the evidence was conflicting as to whether the deceased, on approaching the crossing, stopped before going upon the track. The court charged that it was uncontradicted that the deceased did stop, "but did he stop there for the purpose of looking out for trains?" The judgment was reversed on this ground, and that too though the evidence had been correctly stated in the preceding part of the charge. Steinbrunner v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 146 Pa. St. 509.

Under a statute providing that the court may give its recollection of the testimony on a point in dispute, a misstatement of a material fact to the prejudice of a party complaining, when requested by the jury to state its recollection of a part of the testimony, is erroneous. Stephens v. Patterson, 29 Neb. 697.

1. Fowler v. Smith, 153 Pa. St. 639; Borham v. Davis, 146 Pa. St. 72; McPherson v. McPherson, 21 S. Car. 273.

"The real point of controversy often and generally depends on a very small portion of the testimony introduced. In the course of a trial, points made upon prolix and complicated documents; or after the most wearisome examination of witnesses, are abandoned, sometimes expressly, but oftener tacitly, because not sufficiently raised by the proof adduced, or answered by fuller proof on the other side. * * *

A burden which the counsel thus takes away from the court and jury the judge cannot be bound to reassume. To advert to everything that has thus occurred during the trial, though not pressed by the party, though yielded by him, immaterial, or absurd, would be a harmful consumption of time, obscure the truth, and confound the minds of the jurors. And it is not possible to lay down any rule but one of two: either that it must be left to the sound discretion of the judge himself to determine where and on what circumstances he will advert; or that he must notice and comment upon all; for who else can determine which was material or immaterial? * * * In the whole circle of duties to the performance of which a judge is called, there is not perhaps one, to the due performance of which greater abilities, and a happy temperament and elocution, are more necessary than this of summing up to a jury. It often calls for the highest efforts of the most vigorous natural faculties, improved by education, informed in professional and general learning, practiced in forensic debate and judicial investigation. It cannot be meant that the least man should fully and correctly perform that to which only the greatest is equal. * * *

The charge to the jury, therefore, must be left, as it always has been, to the discretion of the judge, the occasion to his conscience, the manner to his ability. The only exception is such a plain departure from impartiality in collating the evidence as of itself to convey to the jury an impression of the judge's opinion as clearly as an explicit declaration would. If it were possible to make such a case appear in its true light in the record brought here, this court would be bound to set aside the verdict." Per Ruffin, J. (dissenting), in *State v. Stating Facts on One Side More Fully. — In charging a jury the judge may to notice every position discussed by counsel.¹ It will be sufficient to direct the attention of the jury to the principal questions before them, and to explain the law applicable thereto.²

Repetition of Testimony. — If a repetition of the entire testimony or any specific part thereof is desired, a request for such repetition should be made in apt time,³ and if any material portion of the testimony is omitted, this should be brought to the attention of the court, and a request for correction made.⁴

Statement Prejudicial to One Side. — But a presentation of the proof prominently on one side, and an entire omission to state the countervailing evidence on the other, will probably operate to reverse whether any request for a statement of such evidence be made or not.⁵ The court should not omit or slur over the strong points on either side.⁶

d. DISCRETION OF COURT AS TO SUMMING UP. — In instructing the jury the trial judge, even in those jurisdictions where summing up is held proper, is under no obligation to do so, unless he sees fit. This is a matter which rests entirely in his discretion,⁷ and it makes no difference that he was requested so to do.⁸

arrange and classify the testimony, and in doing so, much must be left to his discretion. Brady*, 107 N. Car. 822.

5. See Wright v. Central R., etc., Co., 16 Ga. 46.

If a judge in his charge to the jury presents only the inference that can be drawn on one side, arrayed in solido so as to constitute an imposing argument to the jury, without summing up on the other side, it is an invasion of the

"It cannot be traced or ascertained, on the first point, that any rule of the common law exists that makes it imperative on a judge to repeat the evidence to the jury. He is placed on the bench to the end that he may preside over the order and solemnity of trials, maintain the authority of the laws, and administer them upon all applications which are solely confined to his jurisdiction. If, on the trial of a cause, the witnesses are numerous, the evidence complicated, and the main question or principal issue obscured by various and conflicting testimony, he may, in his discretion, sum up the whole to the jury, that they may apply it properly, and have their attention directed to the essential points in controversy. No judge would ever refuse to impart such assistance when it is requested by a jury, nor would he withhold it in any

e. IN WHAT JURISDICTIONS NOT PERMISSIBLE. — In some jurisdictions the courts are expressly forbidden by statute to sum up the evidence,¹ and a recent constitutional provision in another state has been held to prohibit this practice, although not forbidding it in terms.² Under this provision the proper practice, it case wherein the nature of the evidence or the conduct of the cause led him to believe that his aid would enable them to discharge their constitutional functions with more correctness or facility. But it must of necessity depend on the circumstances of each case whether the judge believes that his aid would be of any efficacy; whether the case be not so plain and intelligible as to render his interference unnecessary, or the evidence so equally balanced as to make it unsafe. All these considerations the law has wisely confided to the sound discretion of the judge; and it affords a singular testimony in favor of our free institutions, that the reluctance of judicial interposition should be made a subject of complaint, when in other countries, where the same system of law prevails, the invasion of the rights of juries has been an abundant source of public evil. The common law is not altered in this respect by the Act of 1796, c. 52, which professes only to prescribe the manner in which a judge shall charge the jury when he thinks fit to deliver a charge; not to make it his duty to deliver one if he deem it unnecessary. 'It shall not be lawful for any judge, in delivering a charge to the petit jury, to give an opinion whether any fact is fully or sufficiently proved, such matter being the true office and proper province of the jury; but it is hereby declared to be the duty of the judge in such cases to state, in a full and correct manner, the facts given in evidence, and to declare and explain the law arising therefrom.' No implication can arise from this law that he must charge the jury; but if he does charge them, he must do it according to the rule there laid down." State v. Morris, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 390.

Waiving Statement of Evidence. — Counsel having incorrectly stated material evidence, the court refused to stop him, but remarked that this misstatement would be corrected by a recital of the testimony from the notes taken by the court. When about to commence the charge to the jury, the court asked if counsel desired the evidence to be repeated, and counsel on both sides expressly agreed that it need not be recapitulated. It was held that a failure to do so could not be thereafter objected to. Wiseman v. Penland, 79 N. Car. 197.

1. Mississippi. — The judge shall not in any cause, civil or criminal, sum up or comment on the testimony, or charge the jury as to the weight of the evidence. Annot. Code of Mississippi 1892, § 732. See also Southern R. Co. v. Kendrick, 40 Miss. 374, in which the court instructed the jury that if they believed the testimony of K., the plaintiff (setting out what the testimony was), they might find vindictive damages. It was held that this was erroneous, being a matter to be determined entirely by the judgment of the jury what the testimony was.

Louisiana — Criminal Cases. — In charging the jury in criminal cases, the judge must limit himself to giving them a knowledge of the law applicable to the case. In doing so he shall abstain from stating or recapitulating the evidence so as to influence their decision on the facts. He shall not state or repeat to the jury the testimony of any witness. Rev. Stat. of Louisiana, § 991; State v. Asberry, 37 La. Ann. 125.

Texas — Criminal Cases. — In criminal trials the judge shall not express any opinion as to the weight of the evidence, nor shall he sum up the testimony. Rev. Stat. of Texas 1895, Code Civ. Pro., § 715; Gibbs v. State, 1 Tex. App. 13; Hannah v. State, 1 Tex. App. 579.

2. Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. Car. 488.

The Constitution of 1868, art. 4, § 26, provided that "judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." This was amended by the Constitution of 1895, art. 5, § 26, to read as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but shall declare the law," thus taking away the permission to "state the testimony." Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. Car. 488.

would seem, is for the court to declare the law applicable to the case, base that law upon hypothetical findings of fact by the jury, and instruct the jury that if they believe so and so from the evidence they have heard, then such and such will be the result. In so doing if he be careful not to repeat any of the testimony, nor to intimate directly or indirectly what is in evidence, he will be chargeable neither with stating the testimony nor with charging in respect to matters of fact.¹ It has been held a violation of the provision even to recite the evidence in an interrogative form.²

16. Defining Words and Terms Used — a. WORDS AND TERMS OF ORDINARY SIGNIFICANCE. — The meaning of words or terms in ordinary use need not be defined in instructions.³ Accordingly

1. See Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. Car. 488. In reaching this conclusion the court, in a very able and exhaustive opinion, reasoned as follows: "The prohibition, 'Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact,' now stands alone in section 26, unqualified by the permission to 'state the testimony,' which permission has been stricken out by amendment. And any direct reference to the testimony in charging a jury, any expression as to what is in evidence, any remark that would amount to a stating of the testimony, in whole or in part, is absolutely prohibited. At the same time, we cannot presume that it was the intention of the framers of the new constitution (many of whom were members of the bar and learned in the law, and familiar with the decisions of this court), to require trial judges in their charges to declare the law, and yet forbid them to base that law upon any foundation by which alone they can make it apply to a given case. The constitutional mandate is, they 'shall declare the law.' To require that they shall do so, and to forbid them to establish the law they must declare upon any foundation, is to require the impossible. We have shown by the highest authority that such a foundation is absolutely necessary. Formerly it was furnished either by a statement of actual facts in evidence, or by a statement of hypothetical facts; now it must be found solely in the latter — a supposed state of facts. We therefore conclude and hold that as it would be impossible to declare the law applicable to a case on trial without connecting the legal principles involved with some state of facts, actual or hypothetical, it was the intention of the framers of the new constitution, in amending section

26, art. 4, that the trial judge, in charging the law of the case, should lay before the jury that law as applicable to a supposed state of facts, but that in so doing he should carefully avoid repeating the evidence on the facts at issue, making no statement of the testimony, either in whole or in part."

A charge in the form: "Does" such a witness (naming him), "say" thus and so? (repeating the testimony) violates Const. 1895, art. 5, § 26, providing that "judges shall not charge jurors in respect to matters of fact, but shall declare the law," since the charge states the testimony, though it be in interrogative form. State v. Stello, (S. Car. 1897) 27 S. E. Rep. 659.

6. Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Black, 91 Iowa 490. In this case the court said: "They are not words of rare use, nor are they technical terms applicable to any branch of learning or science, but words of common use and commonly understood." Compare Lagow v. Glover, 77 Tex. 448, where the court considered a charge defective for not explaining "acquiescence," but said that this was a matter which the parties might have had explained to the jury if a proper charge had been asked.

7. Edelmann v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 3 Mo. App. 506. The court said: "It is an English word of well-known meaning, and so used in the instruction, and the fact that under certain circumstances courts of law have to decide what constitutes negligence does not destroy the popular character of the word."

It is held often highly important and even indispensable for the court to explain to the jury the meaning of technical terms not in common use, or to define the meaning of words or phrases used in a contract, statute, or the like. And it is proper for the court, on its own motion, or on request, to define specifically what is meant in an instruction by the words "due and proper care," though there is no necessity for so doing except upon request. Schmidt v. Sinnott, 103 Ill. 160.

The court takes notice of the meaning and force of the ordinary words of our language, and also of technical words where their meaning is well settled by common usage, and it may, when necessary, define and explain them to the jury. It is, therefore, not error for the court to instruct the jury as to the ordinary meaning and definition of "anæsthetic," "chloroform," and "poison," as given by Webster's Dictionary and other works of standard authority, where it appears that the definitions are correct. State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 4.

Technical Phrases Not Necessary.—It is no objection to the charge of the court, that technical phrases are not employed. It is often necessary to employ phrases more familiar to unprofessional men, and if the jury be not misled there is no error in so doing. Gano v. Samuel, 14 Ohio 592.

so. The charge should embody the legal definition of the important technical words and phrases which are used and are necessary to be understood by the jury for the proper determination of the case,¹ and when the instructions given fail so to do, it is error for the court to refuse a request to define such words.² On the other hand, an instruction containing technical words which do not convey a definite impression to the ordinary mind without defining the words may be refused.³

(2) Terms Held to Need Definition. — Keeping in view these principles, it has been held that the following words and phrases used in an instruction need explanation: "warranty,"⁴ "material facts,"⁵ "exemplary damages,"⁶ "malice,"⁷ "unlawfully" (in a charge that the jury were to determine whether the killing was unlawfully done),⁸ "fixtures,"⁹ "presumptive notice,"¹⁰ "adverse possession,"¹¹ "for an illegitimate purpose,"¹² "to dispose of property with intent to defraud creditors,"¹³ "color of title,"¹⁴ "gross negligence,"¹ "presumption of law" (in a charge that a delivery of a note created a presumption of law that it was paid).²

"Preponderance of Evidence."—About the use of the term "preponderance of evidence" without explaining its meaning, the authorities are not harmonious. According to some decisions no explanation of it is necessary,³ and a request for an instruction explaining it may be refused.⁴ According to other decisions it is not the best practice to use this term without explanation, but a judgment will not be reversed for this defect.⁵ The court taking this view considers it proper to refuse an instruction defective in this regard.⁶

"Wilfully."—If an act must be committed wilfully to render it an offense, the legal meaning of the word "wilfully" should ordinarily be explained.⁷ But if attempt to defraud is an element of the offense, and the court explains that the act must have been committed with such intent, no explanation of the word "wilfully" as used in the statute is necessary.⁸

Burden of Proof.—The unexplained use in an instruction of a phrase having a technical legal meaning, as for instance, "burden of proof," is not ground for reversing a judgment. Miller v. Woolman-Todd Boot, etc., Co., 26 Mo. App. 59. See also Murphy v. Creath, 26 Mo. App. 581.

be sufficient.¹ In charging, no material element of the statutory definition must be omitted.²

17. Assuming Facts by Way of Illustration. — The trial judge may very properly use assumed facts, not connected with the case and not proved, to illustrate a principle or rule of law, if the instruction is so framed as not to assume that these facts have been proven.³ Even a faulty or erroneous illustration will not

"This is a common practice in our courts. No intelligent juror can be deceived by such illustrations. And whether the judge, in commenting upon the facts of the case, has made use of too strong language, or has gone too far in using, by way of illustration, historical or personal incidents of a kindred character to those on trial, is not for us to say. He has a right to illustrate his views as he pleases, and a rule requiring that a rigid criticism should be applied to such expressions would impose upon the judge an unreasonable restraint, and lead to great inconvenience." Masters v. Warren, 27 Conn. 300.

Instances of Illustrations Held Proper.

— In an action to recover for personal injuries, an instruction assuming the facts as to the plaintiff being "engaged in reading a newspaper, or otherwise having his attention" averted, merely as an illustration of contributory negligence, and not as facts proved in the case, is proper. Long v. Milford Tp., 137 Pa. St. 122. So in stating the circumstance which might be considered evidence of guilt, an enumeration by way of illustration of certain circumstances which did not appear in the evidence in the case is not error. People v. Williams, 59 Cal. 674. Where a charge illustrates the case by analogy, but so cautions the jury against applying it fully that they could not have been misled by it, it is not error. It was so held where the analogy was between a wife's authority to buy necessities on her husband's credit, and the power to purchase supplies exercised by one who is hired to run a hotel. Beecher v. Venn, 35 Mich. 466. If the court instructs the jury as to the abstract principle of the right of taking life in self-defense, and then states a hypothetical case falling within the principle as an illustration of the rule laid down in the charge, the statement of the hypothetical case cannot be construed as telling the jury that the right of taking life in self-defense is confined to the hypothetical case stated. People v. Campbell, 30 Cal. 312.

Instances of Instructions Held Improper. — On the trial of an action against a city to recover for an injury received from a defect in a culvert, the court instructed the jury "that positive evidence is entitled to more weight than negative evidence; and that if twelve men were in a room where there was a clock, and one of them should swear he heard the clock strike, and the eleven should swear they did not vitiates a correct charge on the law, or operate to reverse,¹ unless it has a tendency to mislead.² The court is not required to give to the jury a hypothetical illustration of the law in the language of a written request, but may illustrate the principle to suit his own views.³ It is sufficient if he gives the law as requested, leaving out all illustrations of the legal principle, if he sees fit so to do.⁴

18. Erroneous Reasons for Giving or Refusing Instructions.—Instructions which are correct in themselves will not be deemed invalid because erroneous reasons were given for them,⁵ unless it plainly appears that the jury were misled by them, or that injustice has been done in consequence of them, or at least that the verdict may have been in some way affected by them.⁶ With the reason for the instruction the jury has nothing to do.⁷ So if an instruction should have been refused, it makes no difference that the reason given for such refusal was erroneous.⁸

hear it strike, then the jury, in such a case, should give a judgment for one against the eleven; and if H. and G. swear they saw a hole in the culvert in question, and twice as many witnesses, equally as credible, say they did not see holes in the culvert, then positive evidence should be taken by the jury." It was held that the instruction was objectionable, and not apt as an illustration, since it omitted the element of the reasonableness of the fact testified to. Greenville v. Henry, 78 Ill. 150.

Illustration by Hypothesis Unfavorable to Accused.—The court may illustrate its instruction to the jury by a hypothesis unfavorable to the accused provided the evidence justifies it, and need not say anything of an opposite state of facts if there be no evidence of those facts before the jury. Pressley v. State, 19 Ga. 192.

1. State v. Alvarez, 7 La. Ann. 284; Parker v. Glenn, 72 Ga. 638.

2. Parker v. Glenn, 72 Ga. 638. To the same effect see Wilson v. State, 33 Ga. 207, in which the court said that where, in charging the jury, the court correctly states the law governing the case, but exception is taken to an illustration used by the court explanatory of a legal principle, the reviewing court will not narrowly scrutinize the illustration if satisfied that, whether right or wrong, it was not calculated to mislead and did not in fact mislead the jury.

4. Whitley v. State, 66 Ga. 659. See also Whitcomb v. Fairlee, 43 Vt. 675, in which it was said: "Nor do we hold it to be the duty of the court to illustrate a general proposition of law, correctly stated, in every conceivable way, or in any particular manner, unless specially requested so to do. It is enough if the illustrations given do not inculcate any false principle."

Instances.—If a party move the court to instruct the jury that a deed is void for one cause, and the instruction is given accordingly, the instruction, although not warranted for the cause assigned, is not ground for reversal if it appears that the deed was void for another reason. Dale v. Arnold, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 606.

8. Budd v. Brooke, 3 Gill (Md.) 198; Posey v. Patton, 109 N. Car. 455.

Instance.—Where a request for an instruction is made too late, the fact that the court bases its refusal on the ground that it has already given such instruction—which it has not—does not render the refusal erroneous. Posey v. Patton, 109 N. Car. 455.

19. Instructions as to Punishment — a. WHEN ASSESSED BY THE COURT. — Where the jury have nothing to do with fixing the punishment no instruction on the subject is necessary, and the court may properly refuse to instruct thereon.¹ Whether the punishment following the verdict would be greater or smaller, cannot in any way come within the range of the jury's province, since it can in no manner affect the weight or indication of the evidence on which the jury are required to consider and act.²

Consequences of Verdict. — The court may nevertheless instruct the jury as to the consequences which will flow from their verdict, but this is a matter which is entirely within its discretion,³ and it has been said to be the better practice for the court to say nothing about it in the charge.⁴

b. WHEN ASSESSED BY THE JURY — (1) In General. — In some jurisdictions, where the court is required by statute to give in charge the law applicable to the case,⁵ a failure to instruct on the question of punishment when it is to be assessed by the jury, whether requested or not, is held reversible error.⁶ Thus where

5. Texas. — Rev. Stat. Tex. 1895, Code Crim. Pro., p. 100, art. 715, requires the court to give a charge which distinctly sets forth the law applicable to the case, and provides that this charge shall be given in all felony cases, whether asked or not.

§ 3147, subd. 4, provides that "the court shall instruct the jury in writing upon the law applicable to the case."

Instructions as to Punishment Held Sufficient. — An instruction in the language of the statute, authorizing the jury, on conviction of the defendant for a misdemeanor, to say whether he shall be put at hard labor for nonpayment of a fine, sufficiently explains the nature and meaning of the statute, and under such instruction the jury may find in their verdict that if the fine is not paid the defendant shall be put to hard labor for its nonpayment. Smith v. Com., (Ky. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 471.

So where an indictment for robbery contains several counts, and on each count the court instructs as to the punishment for the offense therein charged, this is a sufficient statement of the punishment, and the defendant cannot complain that the punishment was not stated in connection with the definition of the offense of robbery. Stewart v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 407.

Inconsistent Instructions. — On a trial

the jury are authorized by statute to recommend life imprisonment instead of the death penalty, in case of mitigating circumstances, the judgment has been reversed for failure of the court so to instruct, even in the absence of a request therefor.¹ But in another jurisdiction it is held that in the absence of a request for an instruction on that subject, the judgment will not be reversed for the failure to give it;² the statute governing charges in criminal cases in that jurisdiction providing that the court shall charge in writing, and that if either party desires further instructions they shall write precisely what they desire the judge to say further.

How Charge Framed.—Where the punishment is to be fixed by the jury a charge on that subject should be so framed as not to interfere with the discretion of the jury in that regard.³ for aggravated assault the court gave a proper instruction as to the penalty, and said in addition thereto: "If you find the defendant guilty and assess his punishment at a fine only, the form of your verdict will be: 'We, the jury, find the defendant E. guilty, * * * and assess his punishment at a fine of $500,' filling in the amount agreed upon." This instruction was held erroneous as stating two inconsistent penalties, one correctly presenting the law and the other stating a penalty unknown to the law. Blackwell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 416.

Failure to Submit Determination of Punishment to Jury—Collateral Attack.—Where the plea of guilty of murder in the first degree is entered by the defendant, the court commits error in sentencing him to imprisonment for life without submitting to the jury the question whether in their discretion the punishment shall be assessed at death or at imprisonment for life; but while this is true the judgment is not void, and cannot be attacked collaterally on habeas corpus proceedings. Lowery v. Howard, 193 Ind. 440.

Recommendation to Mercy—Charge Held Sufficient.—Where a charge is requested that "notwithstanding any recommendation to mercy that they might think proper to make, the punishment would still require confinement in the penitentiary," a charge in the language of the statute on that subject, that "in all cases where the term of punishment in the penitentiary is discretionary, the court shall determine that punishment, paying due respect to any recommendation which the jury might think proper to make in that regard," is a sufficient compliance with the request. Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 465.

Charge Defective for Misspelling and Omissions.—An instruction regarding punishment that if the jury "found appellant guilty, his punishment should be confinement in the penitentiary for any term not less than fives within your discretion," "five" being spelled "fives" and "years" being omitted, is no ground for reversal on account of bad spelling and omissions, where no exception was saved at the time. Champ v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 90.

Statement in Writing.—The court may properly instruct the jury in writing as to the penalty for the crime charged. Farmer v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1894) 28 S. W. Rep. 197.

Charges Not Violating This Rule.—An instruction that if the jury find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and also find some extenuating fact or circumstance, it is within their discretion to fix the punishment at imprisonment for life, but that if there are no extenuating circumstances, then they should impose the death penalty, is not erroneous as interfering with the discretion of the jury. People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195.

So an instruction that "you can find defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, or guilty of murder in the second degree, or guilty of manslaughter,

(2) Effect of Misstating Punishment. — Nor should the court misstate the punishment prescribed for the offense charged. According to the decisions of one state this is a fundamental error,¹ which will operate to reverse even though the punishment may have been legally assessed,² or although the error operated to the benefit of the accused,³ and it makes no difference that no exceptions were saved.⁴ In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the judgment will not be reversed if it appears that the error was not injurious to the defendant.⁵

or you may render a verdict of not guilty; and it is for you to decide which one of these verdicts you may render; but if you do find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree you have the discretion to determine the nature of his punishment; and if, in your sound judgment and discretion, there is any fact or circumstance in the case which ought to mitigate the extreme penalty of death, you will by your verdict indicate the same; but if you find no such mitigation in the facts of the case, and think the death penalty should be inflicted, you will simply find him guilty of murder in the first degree," does not improperly restrict the jury in the exercise of their discretion to determine the punishment to be inflicted. People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 369.

State*, 14 Tex. App. 527; Bostic v. State, 22 Tex. App. 136; Gardenhire v. State, 18 Tex. App. 565.

Overstating Minimum Penalty. — It is erroneous for the court to overstate the minimum punishment prescribed by law for the offense charged. State v. McNally, 87 Mo. 644; Watson v. People, 134 Ill. 374.

Overstating Maximum Penalty. — An instruction which overstates the maximum penalty is also erroneous. State v. Sands, 77 Mo. 118; Hargrove v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1895) 30 S. W.

Rep. 801; Williams v. State, 25 Tex. App. 76.

Alternative Penalties. — On trials of offenses to which alternative penalties are attached, it is the duty of the court, whether asked or not, to give such alternative penalties in charge to the jury, and an omission to do so is erroneous. Cesure v. State, 1 Tex. App. 20; Prinzel v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1895) 33 S. W. Rep. 350; Moody v. State, 30 Tex. App. 422. Thus where the offense is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary or a fine as an alternative, the jury might substitute the county jail in lieu of the penitentiary, and whether asked or not, the jury should be so instructed. Ringo v. State, 2 Tex. App. 291.

2. Allen v. State, 1 Tex. App. 514; Searcy v. State, 1 Tex. App. 440. In this last case the judgment was reversed because the court charged that the jury could assess the punishment at not less than three nor more than ten years in the penitentiary, where the punishment prescribed by the law for the offense charged is not less than two years.

In this last case, while the error was harmless, the court seems in a measure to base its decision on the ground that it was not necessary for the court to give any charge on that subject.

In Whitlock v. Com., 89 Va. 340, the reviewing court said: "Technically, the court erred in telling the jury that this section applied to the case, inasmuch as a specific fine for practicing as a physician without a license is imposed by the Act of 1884, which im-

20. Instructions as to Lower Grades of Offense — a. poses a fine of not less than thirty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense. Acts 1883-84, p. 597, § 92. But this error was not to the prejudice of the defendant, since the minimum fine imposed by the act is the same as that prescribed by section 574 of the code, viz., thirty dollars; and in this case the jury, by their verdict, upon which the judgment complained of was entered, have imposed the minimum fine."

Applications of the Rule. — On a trial for murder in the first degree, if there is no evidence that the lower grades of homicide are involved, no charge as to those grades is necessary. Benton v. State, 30 Ark. 328. Thus where murder in the first degree is charged the court need not instruct as to murder in the second degree, where there is no evidence on which to base such an instruction. O'Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 343; People v. Byrnes, 30 Cal. 207; Blocker v. State, 27 Tex. App. 16; Johnson v. State, 18 Tex. App. 385; State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137. Nor is it necessary to instruct as to manslaughter where the evidence clearly shows that the offense was not manslaughter. People v. Lee Gam, 69 Cal. 552; People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469; Smith v. People, 1 Colo. 121; People v. Byrnes, 30 Cal. 206; People v. Estrado, 49 Cal. 171. Nor as to possible crimes lower than manslaughter, where the defendant was on trial for murder and the killing of the deceased was clearly proved. State v. Munchrath, 78 Iowa 268. So where the crime charged is assault with intent to murder, and the evidence shows that the defendant inflicted serious wounds on the prosecutor with a deadly weapon, it is proper to refuse an instruction as to simple assault. Hodge v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 69.

not only unnecessary but improper.¹ On the other hand, if there is evidence tending to reduce the grade of the offense, it is the duty of the court to give in charge the law applicable to that grade of offense,² and it makes no difference that the evidence tending to reduce the offense is very slight,³ or that the only evidence tending to reduce the offense is the testimony of the defendant himself.⁴

b. HOW FRAMED. — In giving a series of instructions relating to several grades of an offense, the court should be careful to make the jury understand to what grade each instruction is intended to apply.⁵

cide, where there is no evidence to reduce the crime from murder in the first degree, the court may so instruct. State v. Garrand, 5 Oregon 216. This, however, should not be done if there is any conflict of testimony as to premeditation. State v. Lee, 7 Oregon 237; State v. Whitney, 7 Oregon 386. And if the evidence all tends to prove a case of murder in the first degree, or of justifiable homicide, it is proper for the court by its instruction to confine the jury's attention to those two points. State v. Schoenwald, 31 Mo. 147; State v. Starr, 38 Mo. 270.

Doubt as to Degree of Crime. — By statutory provision (Code, § 4429), the jury is required, in case of reasonable doubt as to the degree of the offense of which the defendant is guilty, to convict him only of the lower degree; and it is error to fail to instruct the jury in accordance with this provision, even where proper instructions to the effect that they may convict of a lower degree or included crime are given. State v. Jay, 57 Iowa 164; State v. Neis, 68 Iowa 469; State v. Walters, 45 Iowa 389.

Waiving Right to Instruction. — While the defendant is entitled to an instruction on each grade of an offense on which there is evidence to base it, the defendant may waive his right to such instructions by requesting that the instructions be confined to the exact offense charged in the indictment. State v. Keele, 105 Mo. 38.

Even though the counsel for the prisoner has claimed and insisted upon the trial that the prisoner, if guilty at all, is guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, yet the prisoner has the right to the proper instruction as to lower grades of offense. State v. Johnson, 8 Iowa 525.

VI. REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS — 1. Duty of Court to Instruct on Request — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — It is the right of the parties to have the jury instructed on the law applicable to the case,¹ clearly and pointedly, so as to leave no reasonable ground for misapprehension or mistake.² And it is the duty of the judge, when requested, to give in charge any requested instruction which is correct as a proposition of law and applicable to the issues.³

Effect of Statute Making Jury Judges of the Law.—The fact that the jury are made judges of the law as well as of fact, in criminal cases, is no reason why the court should refuse to instruct the jury on the law of the case when requested. Leuder v. People, 6 Ill. App. 98.

The fact that the jury is the judge of both the law and the fact makes no difference. It is nevertheless the duty of the court to instruct it as to the law. Parker v. State, 136 Ind. 284.

Duty of Judge to Know the Evidence.—A statute confining the charge of the judge to matters of law does not release him from the duty of knowing the evidence given on the trial. It is important that he should know the evidence to enable him to charge the jury correctly on the law of the case as applicable to it, and to decide properly on a motion for new trial. *Dibble v. b. CONFLICT IN OR WEAKNESS OF EVIDENCE NOT A GROUND FOR REFUSAL. — Though the evidence is conflicting, each party is entitled to have the law given to the jury which is applicable to his theory of the case and the testimony of his witnesses;² and an instruction correct in point of law and applicable to the evidence should always be given, no matter how slight the evidence is in support of the hypothesis on which the instruction is based.³ The instruction, if pertinent, should be given without regard to the weight or preponderance of the evidence.⁴

Rule under the Georgia Statute. — Under the Trial Act of 1853-54, the defendant is not called upon to show affirmatively that injury has resulted from the refusal of the court to give a legal charge as requested; the statute assumes that damage is done, and will listen to no allegation to the contrary. Terry v. State, 17 Ga. 204.

In Sperry v. Spaulding, 45 Cal. 549, it was said: "It is insisted by the plaintiff, that as the defendant's evidence in respect to the time when the note was made and transferred was contradicted by that of the payee and indorsee, the jury were justified in rejecting as untrue all of the defendant's evidence; and that in view of the verdict, the court should presume that the jury had so rejected the evidence. But it is obvious that the defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed upon the law of the case, on the theory that they would regard all his testimony as true."

Illustration. — In an action to recover the price of an article sold, in respect to which it is claimed there was a warranty and a breach thereof, if there be evidence on the subject of such defense, although contradictory, it is the right of the defendant to have the jury pass upon it, and it is error to refuse an instruction asked for that purpose. *Wooters v. "Where there is any evidence, however slight, to sustain a legal claim or a legal defense, the party introducing such evidence has a right to have it submitted to the jury by appropriate instructions; and when an instruction is based upon evidence in the case, and stating correctly a principle of law applicable to such evidence and not covered by any instruction given, it is error to refuse the instruction, however meager the evidence to sustain the hypothesis contained in it." Riedle v. Mulhausen, 20 Ill. App. 73.

2. Right of Court to Instruct on Its Own Motion. — In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, it is apprehended, the court may always of its own motion instruct the jury on any question of law where the interests of justice require it.¹

3. Necessity of Requesting Instructions — a. RULE AS TO MISDIRECTION. — If the court misdirects the jury as to a matter of law involved in a case submitted to them, such error is ground for reversal,² unless it is apparent that no harm could have resulted

Unintentional Omission by Judge — Effect. — Where a legal charge is requested upon the main points in the case, but is unintentionally omitted by the judge and is not suggested by counsel when called on at the end of the general charge to suggest omitted points, a new trial ought to be granted. Adair v. Adair, 30 Ga. 102.

Where all the facts and circumstances relating to the subject are admitted, a party has the right to ask the court to instruct whether the evidence is sufficient to establish a waiver or not. Spring Garden Mut. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 9 Md. 1.

Special Verdict. — In Illinois it has been held that when the jury are to find a special verdict — “not the law, but the facts simply, entirely independent of their legal bearings, and regardless of any consideration of liability on the part of any one” — there is no error in refusing to give general instructions as to the law of the case. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Bush, 101 Ind. 582.

In Wisconsin it has been held that when the jury are called upon to render a special verdict the trial court may, in its discretion, limit its instructions to such matters as are necessarily involved in the questions of fact submitted to them. Burns v. North Chicago Rolling Mill Co., 60 Wis. 544.

In Mississippi, by virtue of statutory provisions, the court cannot give any instruction of its own motion, either in civil or criminal cases. Stewart v. State, 50 Miss. 587; Edwards v. State, 47 Miss. 581; Archer v. Sinclair, 49 Miss. 343; Bangs v. State, 61 Miss. 363;

Davis v. Tiernan, 2 How. (Miss.) 786; Montgomery v. Norris, 1 How. (Miss.) 499; Williams v. State, 32 Miss. 389. And if it does so, the error will operate to reverse, although the matter so charged is sound law and applicable to the case. Williams v. State, 32 Miss. 389.

The statute does not, however, require the court to give the identical charge requested, but when asked to charge on a certain point, a given instruction differing from the one asked, but which is pertinent thereto, is proper. Carpew v. Canavan, 4 How. (Miss.) 370.

It is not a violation of the statute to modify the request, and this power of modification may be exercised as well by giving a wholly new instruction, supplemental and amendatory of those asked, pointing out the limitations and qualifications of the doctrine announced, as by annexing the qualifying words to those asked. Watkins v. State, 60 Miss. 323.

Capital Cases. — Even in capital cases the court is not authorized to instruct the jury except upon request. Edwards v. State, 47 Miss. 581.

Suggesting Requests to Counsel Improper. — The rule that the court cannot originate independent instructions, not called for nor rendered necessary by those requested by counsel, cannot be evaded by handing the charge to the district attorney, who returns it, requesting that it be given, which is done. Watkins v. State, 60 Miss. 323.

In Iowa, where the powers of a justice of the peace are prescribed by statute, it is held that a justice cannot instruct the jury, the power to do so not having been expressly given by statute. St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53 Iowa 380.

therefrom.¹ Having undertaken to state the law the judge must do so correctly,² even though there has been no request for a correction, or any request at all to charge upon the point in relation to which the court has committed a misdirection.³

b. RULE AS TO PARTIAL NONDIRECTION—NECESSITY OF REQUESTING A FULLER AND MORE EXPLICIT INSTRUCTION.—(1) Statement of Rule.—The rule as to nondirection is altogether different from that just stated; for while it is the duty of the court to give instructions requested which are correctly drawn and applicable, and which are seasonably presented, it is a general rule in both civil and criminal cases, subject to a few exceptions which will be noticed hereafter,⁴ that mere nondirection, in the absence of request, does not constitute error. If an instruction is correct as far as it goes, but is too general, or is not sufficiently full and explicit, or omits material issues raised on the pleadings and proof, error cannot be assigned in the absence of a properly drawn request for more specific and comprehensive instructions.⁵ The reason of this is plain. The failure

Charge Uncertain or Needing Limitation. — The rule making requests for instructions necessary is applicable even though the charge given is obscure or involved,² or indefinite, vague, and uncertain,³ or ambiguous,⁴ or although the charge given by the court needs limitation and modification.⁵

Tendency to Mislead. — The mere fact that an instruction given has a tendency to mislead is no ground for reversal in the absence of a request for fuller and more specific instructions. The cause will be reversed only when it is plain that the jury have been misled.⁶

Even where the court has stated that an instruction of a certain character will be given, it has been held that the party is not thereby excused from making a request for such instruction at the proper time. Carleton v. State, 43 Neb. 373; International, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (Tex. 1886) 1 S. W. Rep. 565.

The Maintenance of This Rule is essential to a correct and careful administration of justice when the appellate court is limited to a consideration of exceptions in points of law, and cannot look into the whole case to see that substantial justice has been done between the parties. Madsden v. Phoenix F. Ins. Co., 1 S. Car. 29.

A charge which is not abstract and which asserts a correct legal proposition, though it be objectionable for obscurity or calculated to mislead the jury, is not an error which will work a reversal. The party who supposes himself injured by it should ask a qualified or explanatory charge. Jones v. Fort, 36 Ala. 449.

Where a charge is merely ambiguous, a party dissatisfied with it ought to ask the court to make it clear before the jury leave the bar; he should not acquiesce in the correctness of the instruction and after the verdict is against him claim the benefit of the ambiguity as error. *Schuylkill, etc., Imp. exceptions to a charge on the ground that it is not sufficiently full and specific, without any request for further instructions, presents no error on appeal.¹

(3) Applications of Rule.—Applying the rule stated, it has been held that in the absence of a specific request, error cannot be assigned of the court's failure to charge on the measure of damages,² or that the instructions as to the measure of damages were not sufficient,³ or that the court failed to charge specially on probable cause,⁴ or to define its meaning,⁵ or that there was a failure to charge on the legal presumption of payment,⁶ or as to

Worthy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 426; Browning v. Wabash Western R. Co., (Mo. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 731; Harris v. Northern Indiana R. Co., 20 N. Y. 232; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Cody, 30 U. S. App. 183.

Where the judge omits to instruct the jury to distinguish between certain damages for which the defendant is liable, and others arising from the same transaction for which he is not, the defendant should call attention to the distinction and request the judge to charge accordingly. Harris v. Northern Indiana R. Co., 20 N. Y. 232.

Matters in Mitigation of Damages. — Failure to instruct as to matters which may be considered in mitigation of damages is no error in the absence of a request for such instruction. Kelley v. Kelley, 8 Ind. App. 606; Tetherow v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co., 98 Mo. 74.

3. Freiberg v. Elliott, (Tex. 1888) 8 S. W. Rep. 322; Galveston Oil Co. v. Malin, 60 Tex. 645; Buzzell v. Emerton, 161 Mass. 176; Page v. Finley, 8 Oregon 45; Taylor v. Springfield, 61 Mo. App. 263; Clapp v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 36 Minn. 6.

The failure of the trial court to instruct the jury that in assessing the damages of the plaintiff they should not take into consideration any aggravation of such damages which was caused by the neglect of the plaintiff to give timely attention to his injuries, amounts only to a nondirection, and no such instruction is requested. Taylor v. Springfield, 61 Mo. App. 263.

Interest on Damages. — The omission to charge for interest on damages recovered cannot be considered an error in the absence of a request for special instructions on that subject. Fink v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. Rep. 330.

4. Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350; Lueck v. Heisler, 87 Wis. 644.

Omission, in an action for malicious prosecution, to charge as to the meaning of "probable cause," and as to the application of the law to the facts on that point, is no error in the absence of a request for instructions on that point. Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

5. Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

6. Abrahams v. Kelly, 2 S. Car. 237. In this case the court said: "The second proposition is to the effect that the legal presumption of payment does not arise unless the full period of twenty years has elapsed. It does not appear that this proposition was brought to the notice of the circuit judge at the trial.

* * * The presiding judge is not

What Constitutes Adverse Possession Under Statutes of Limitation. — The mere fact that the court, in instructing the jury, did not specify all the elements constituting possession under the statute of limitations, is not error where no specific instruction on that point was requested. Wood v. Figard, 28 Pa. St. 403.

Where the charge on the issue of adverse possession was merely defective in not defining it, and in failing to state that the limitation would be interrupted by the bringing of suit, error cannot be assigned on such defects in the absence of a request for an instruction correcting the same. Robinson v. McIver, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. Rep. 915.

Limitation of Rule. — If the liability of the party is determined solely by the legal construction to be put upon the instrument, it would seem that a failure to charge as to its nature and effect would be error, whether any request for instructions on that subject was made or not. Badger v. Cumberland Bank, 26 Me. 428.

Ordinary Care. — Where a party desires a definition of "ordinary care," he should ask an instruction to that effect. Quirk v. St. Louis United Elevator Co., 126 Mo. 279.

Reasonable Care and Diligence. — In an action for negligence, where the court uses the words "reasonable care and diligence" without giving any definition thereof, error cannot be assigned if the court is not requested to define those words. Johnson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 96 Mo. 340.

admitted,¹ or for a failure to limit the effect of evidence admitted only for a certain purpose,² or for a failure to charge on particular testimony,³ or to state the testimony to the jury as fully as counsel may wish,⁴ or for failure to direct a verdict.⁵

(4) Exceptions to Rule — (a) In General. — Where it is apparent from the bill of exceptions that the court would have refused an instruction on a certain point if asked, error in not giving it will be reviewed, although no request therefor was made.⁶ And this is so where the cause of action is partially based on an illegal and immoral consideration,⁷ or is barred by some act of the plaintiff,⁸ or where the court passes over one point which is pre-

Instances. — Statements made to the prisoner in respect to his connection with the alleged offense are admissible to show his conduct when the statements were made, but not as evidence of the truth of the statements; but the failure of the court to instruct the jury that those statements are not admissible for the latter purpose is not erroneous, unless the court was requested to give such instructions. People v. Ah Yute, 53 Cal. 613.

A failure of the court to instruct that a letter received in evidence was admissible for only one purpose is not error in the absence of a request for the instruction. Dow v. Merrill, 65 N. H. 107.

So where evidence is admissible as to one of several defendants only, it is the duty of the defendants against whom it is not admissible to request an instruction limiting the effect of such evidence to the defendant against whom alone it is admissible. Failure of the court to do so of its own motion is not assignable as error. Boggess v. Boggess, 127 Mo. 305.

If evidence favorable to the defendant be omitted by the judge in recapitulating the testimony, it is the duty of the prisoner's counsel to call it to the attention of the court in order that it may be supplied; after verdict an exception grounded on such motion cannot be sustained. 7. Viser v. Bertrand, 14 Ark. 267, in which it was held that the court should of its own motion instruct that there can be no recovery for so much of a claim as was based on an illegal and immoral consideration, "because, otherwise, if both parties to an immoral contract were content not to raise such objection, the courts might be compelled to adjudicate their alleged rights under contracts of that description which the law would neither enforce nor rescind."

8. Bunnell v. Greathead, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 106, where it was held that on the trial of an action for crim. con. where it appeared that the husband connived at the intercourse, it was reversible error not to instruct that such connivance was a bar to the action, although no request so to do was made because the real question at issue had not been decided.

liminary to get at another which could not fairly arise until the first was disposed of.¹

(b) Rule in Criminal Cases in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Oregon. — In Tennessee the accused is entitled, in all criminal prosecutions; "to a full, fair, and plain statement by the court, to the jury, of the law applicable to his case,"² and an omission to charge fully, though not requested, is ground for new trial³ unless it is clear that no injury could have resulted therefrom.⁴ In Kentucky and Oregon it is the duty of the court in all criminal cases to instruct the jury fully upon all the law applicable to the case.⁵

(c) Rule in Criminal Cases in California. — In California, in criminal cases, the court must charge the jury fully with respect to such matters of law as are applicable to the case, and if the charge is sufficiently comprehensive in this regard it is not too general, particularly if more specific charges are not asked.⁶

(d) Rule in Criminal Cases in Missouri and Texas. — In Missouri the court is required by statute, in all criminal cases of whatever grade, to instruct on all questions of law arising in the case, essential to the information of the jury;⁷ and the absence of a request,⁸ or

2. Lang v. State, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 433; Potter v. State, 85 Tenn. 88.

In Capital Cases. — While it is true generally that a failure of the circuit judge to charge fully, when there is no essential point omitted, is not error unless it appear that further instructions were asked, still, upon the trial of a capital offense, it is error if the court, although expounding the law correctly as far as the charge goes, omits to instruct the jury fully and explicitly upon the legal effect of all the circumstances developed upon the trial which would tend to determine the character or degree of the prisoner's guilt. Nelson v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 237.

Application of the Rule. — Where, on a trial for murder, there is proof that the deceased made threats against the defendant, some of which were communicated to him, and there is proof also tending to show that the deceased was a dangerous man and brought about the difficulty and was in fault at the time of the killing, the failure of the court to charge the law applicable to such threats is an error equivalent to the affirmative injury of an erroneous charge, and the judgment will be reversed although no further instructions were asked. Potter v. State, 85 Tenn. 88.

Self-defense. — An omission of a full charge, in a murder trial, on self-defense, which it is apparent could not have worked an injury, is not reversible error. Honeycutt v. State, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 372.

Grades of Offense. — Failure to charge on a lesser degree of the offense charged will not work a reversal if the defendant could not have been prejudiced. Williams v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 379; Ray v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 379, note. Even though the statute (Act of 1877, c. 85) makes it the duty of the court to charge the law as to each grade of the felony without request on the part of the defendant. *Good v. the fact that a request is incorrectly drawn,¹ will not excuse the court from so doing.² It is the duty of the trial court, in a criminal case, to give correct instructions whether asked or not, and if it fails to do so the judgment will be reversed on appeal.³ The statute, however, is not violated by an omission to instruct on the effect of impeaching testimony,⁴ or on good character,⁵ or on the effect of extrajudicial confessions.⁶ "As to collateral matters, it is for the respective parties to ask such instructions as they may be entitled to."⁷

In Texas it is not necessary for the court, in misdemeanor cases, to instruct the jury in the absence of a request in writing.⁸ But in all cases of felony the statute makes it necessary for the court to deliver a written charge in which it shall "distinctly set forth the law applicable to the case,"⁹ and this the court is bound to do whether requested or not.¹⁰ The defendant is entitled to a distinct and affirmative, and not merely an implied or negative, presentation of the case.¹¹ It is the fundamental policy of the code, that the law and all the law applicable to the evidence in the case shall be presented to the jury,¹² and if the court gives such instructions as are applicable to every legitimate deduction the jury may draw from the evidence, the statutory requirement is satisfied; ¹ more than that is not required. ² Exceptions, however, are necessary to save error in omitting to instruct on some necessary point unless it is apparent that the defendant might have been injured thereby. ³

c. RULE AS TO TOTAL NONDIRECTION — (1) Rule that Court Need Not Instruct at All Unless Requested. — There is considerable diversity of opinion as to whether a total failure to instruct is

1. Dawson v. State, 33 Tex. 491; Thrasher v. State, 3 Tex. App. 281; Noland v. State, 3 Tex. App. 598; Holden v. State, 1 Tex. App. 226; Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 391.

2. Smith v. State, 7 Tex. App. 414.

Constituents of Offense. — On a trial for an assault with intent to commit rape, it is the duty of the court to define to the jury, in the charge, the constituents of the offense of rape; and a failure to do this will constitute ground for reversal. Fulcher v. State, 41 Tex. 233.

Self-defense. — The defendant is entitled to have the law of self-defense explained correctly to the jury, in all the phases to which it may be applicable to the evidence. Jackson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 84; Ashworth v. State, 19 Tex. App. 182; Guffee v. State, 8 Tex. App. 187; King v. State, 13 Tex. App. 277; Edwards v. State, 5 Tex. App. 593; North v. State, 12 Tex. App. 111; Sterling v. State, 15 Tex. App. 249; Foster v. State, 8 Tex. App. 248; Kemp v. State, 11 Tex. App. 174.

Lesser Grades of Crime. — A failure to define murder in the second degree, in a case where the jury, upon the evidence, might have found the defendant guilty of the lesser offense, is cause for reversal whether instructions on that point were asked or not. Sanders v. State, 41 Tex. 306. See also Villarreal v. State, 26 Tex. 107.

Facts to Rebut Presumption of Fraud. — Where, on the trial of one charged with theft, the testimony is of such a character as to require the court to inform the jury what facts would rebut the presumption of a fraudulent taking, an omission to give such instruction is material error and ground for reversal. Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 390.

Limiting Effect of Evidence. — On a trial for theft, evidence of other offenses having been admitted, the cause will be reversed for a failure to charge that such evidence is admitted only for purposes of impeachment, whether there is any request or not.

Warren v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 502. So on an indictment for burglary, where the defendant testified that he had been indicted for theft, it was the duty of the court to instruct that such evidence should be considered only as affecting his credibility. Sexton v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 416.

Intent. — On a trial for assault, a charge is erroneous which authorizes a conviction without the finding of an intent on the part of the defendant committing the assault. Crawford v. State, 21 Tex. App. 454. But where the court has given a correct general charge as to the specific intent necessary to the commission of the crime, if additional instructions are desired on the effect of drunkenness upon his intent at the time of committing the assault, they must be requested. Bramlette v. State, 21 Tex. App. 611.

Insanity as a Defense. — Where insanity is set up as a defense and there is evidence tending to establish it, in failing to submit a direct, positive, and affirmative instruction upon insanity as a defense, and in failing to instruct the jury that "no act done in a state of insanity can be punished as an offense," the trial court fails to charge all the law of the case. Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 96.

Jury as Judges of Facts. — In a felony case the jury should always be instructed that they are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight to be given to the testimony. Barbee v. State, 23 Tex. App. 199.

Circumstantial Evidence. — Failure to instruct the jury upon circumstantial evidence is not error when the state is not relying upon that character of evidence. It is only when the inculpatory evidence is exclusively circumstantial that such a charge is required. House v. State, 19 Tex. App. 227; Jack v. State, 20 Tex. App. 656.

3. Bell v. State, 17 Tex. App. 538; Gilly v. State, 15 Tex. App. 287. See also Pitts v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1894) 24 S. W. Rep. 896.

error in the absence of requests for instructions. In North Carolina and Arizona it has been said that even in criminal cases the court is not bound to give any instructions unless requested,¹ and it has been so held in Wisconsin.² In New York, Texas, Ohio, and Maryland, there are dicta in civil cases to the effect that the court need not give any instructions in the absence of a request therefor,³ and it has been so held in Wisconsin, Virginia, Missouri, and Kentucky.⁴

(2) Rule that Court Must Not Give Any Instruction Unless Requested. — In Mississippi the court cannot instruct the jury at all, in the absence of a request for instructions.⁵

(3) Rule that Court Must Give Instructions Substantially Covering the Case, Whether Requested or Not. — In a number of jurisdictions, however, a radically different view of the court's duty is taken.

In Georgia, Iowa, Michigan, and Nebraska, the rule seems to be well settled, in both civil and criminal cases, that the law of the case must be given to the jury to the extent of fully covering the substantial issues made by the evidence, whether requested or not;⁶

Baker*, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 194.

In Stuckey v. Fritsche, 77 Wis. 329, it was held that a statute requiring the judge, before giving his charge, to reduce it to writing, does not require the jury to be instructed in every case, but was only intended to provide for written instructions when any are given, and that if no specific exceptions are taken to a refusal to charge, and no request to charge is made, it will be assumed that the defendant assented to the submission of the case without instructions.

In Womack v. Circle, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 208, the jury were left totally uninstructed even though requests for instructions were made, the requests being erroneous, and it was held that this was not error.

In Nolan v. Johns, 126 Mo. 166, it is said: "It is now well-settled law in this state that trial courts in civil cases are not required to instruct unless requested so to do."

"An entire failure to instruct the jury in regard to the law of the case is that it is the duty of the judge to see that every case is so presented to the jury that they have clear and intelligent notions of what they are to decide;¹ and that the omission to cover the case substantially must operate to reverse the judgment.²

In Kansas it is the duty of the court to instruct on questions of law which it deems applicable to the case as made by the pleadings and evidence, and if counsel thinks that other instructions are necessary he asks for them.³

In Vermont there are dicta to the effect that no requests are needed in any case for the purpose of protecting the parties' rights to instructions,⁴ and it has been held that the trial judge is bound to charge upon a point material to the decision of the case upon which there is evidence, and to charge correctly and fully, whether requested or not.⁵

In North Carolina the statute⁶ provides that it shall be the duty of the judge to "state in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case, and declare and explain the law arising thereon." Under this statute it is the duty of the judge, in charging the jury, to eliminate the immaterial facts of the case, array the facts on both sides, and apply the principles of law to each, so that the jury may decide the case according to the "credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence,"⁷ and "to state clearly very different from an omission to instruct in regard to some particular phase of the case, or some particular question arising upon the trial. In the latter case a proper instruction upon the subject must be requested before error can be predicated upon a failure to instruct; but the law imposes upon the court the duty of stating to the jury the law applicable to the case, and an entire failure to state the law to the jury has the effect of submitting to the jury the determination not only of facts but of the law. In this case there was a total failure to instruct the jury upon the law of the case. This would not be prejudicially erroneous if it were apparent that the jury had come to a correct conclusion. Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Shiley, 15 Neb. 109. But the error is prejudicial if it is apparent that the jury has taken a wrong view of the law. We must, therefore, examine the record in order to determine that question." York Park Bldg. Assoc. v. Barnes, 39 Neb. 834.

5. Donahue v. Windsor County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 56 Vt. 374. Compare State v. Hanlon, 62 Vt. 334, which apparently lays down a different rule. In this case it was held not erroneous to neglect to charge that the jury might find the defendant guilty of a simple assault if they found him not guilty of rape, of which he was accused. The court said: "He made no request on this subject, and was not injured by a charge which allowed his acquittal unless the jury, on the evidence, found the higher crime charged established."

But Unless Request Be Made for a Certain Minuteness of Charge, if what the court does say to the jury is sound and proper in law in its application to the subject and case in hand, exception will not be sustained for failure of the court to say more unless by such failure the jury would be misled. Walker v. Wait, 50 Vt. 668.

and distinctly the particular issues arising on the evidence and on which the jury are to pass, and to instruct them as to the law applicable to every state of facts which upon the evidence they may find to be the true one.”¹ It will not be sufficient merely to repeat testimony without stating the law applicable thereto,² nor will an instruction which deals in generalities and abstract propositions of law satisfy the requirements of the statute.³ Where, however, the facts of a case are few and intelligible, and there is no question of law to be charged by the court, it is unnecessary to recapitulate the facts, nor need the judge do so unless requested.⁴

In Colorado if, in an action triable by the court either with or without a jury, only certain specific questions of fact are required to be answered, subject to the power of the court to accept or reject the answers in whole or in part, the court need not instruct the jury.⁵

In Washington, under a statute requiring the court to instruct that

2. State v. Boyle, 104 N. Car. 800; Bailey v. Poole, 13 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 404. In this case the court said: “We do not consider a judge, under the Act of 1794, in delivering his charge on the facts of a case, to be a mere machine to detail to the jury the evidence just as it occurred, and in the order it occurred; but it is his duty, when he does charge upon it, to collate it and bring it together in one view on each side, with such remarks and illustrations as may properly direct their attention.”

3. State v. Jones, 87 N. Car. 547, in which it was said that merely reading headnotes of reported cases without making application of them to the facts of the case does not meet the requirements of the statute, and furnishes sufficient ground for new trial.

4. Holly v. Holly, 94 N. Car. 100. In this case it is said: “What is evidently meant by the ‘charge’ to the jury are the instructions given by the judge, upon the law applicable to the facts of the case; but when there is no principle of law involved, he cannot be said to charge the jury in the sense of the statute. * * * Cui bono recapitulate the facts of a case, where there is no principle of law depending upon them, and it is a pure question of fact, lying entirely within the province of the jury?”

“This statutory requirement, enacted first, substantially as it now appears, in 1796, has always since then been regarded as imposing on the judges to whom it applied a very important, necessary, and, in many cases, difficult duty to discharge properly. The purpose of it is to have the law made intelligible to the jury—to have them on such trials instructed by the court clearly, explicitly, and correctly as to the law bearing upon the evidence submitted to them as a whole, and upon every material aspect of it, whether there be many or few such aspects; and likewise to have the court, while it carefully abstains from the slightest expression of any opinion as to the weight of the evidence, or that a fact is or is not fully or sufficiently proven, help the jury by a ‘plain and correct statement of the evidence to apprehend, comprehend, appreciate, apply, and determine’ the weight of it properly. Such statement of the evidence should embrace an explanation of its nature, purpose, bearings, and groupings, and freeing it from possible misapprehension occasioned by inadvertence, mistake, or the undue zeal of counsel in their arguments to the jury, or otherwise. The office of the judge in such connection is to help the jury to see the evidence bearing on the issue and the law arising thereon clearly, stripped of redundant, improper, and merely confusing matters and things, whether of evidence, argument of counsel, or law.” State v. Boyle, 104 N. Car. 818, wherein the opinion was delivered by Merrimon, C. J.

6 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 25.

On the trial of an action for rent reserved in a lease, it appeared that the tenant's goods had been injured by rain leaking through the roof, and that the landlord had agreed to apply the tenant's damages on account of the rent as it fell due, which were to be ascertained by selling the damaged goods at auction. The defendant's counsel requested the judge to charge the jury that if they "found that the plaintiff had agreed to ascertain such damages by having the damaged goods sold at auction and deducting the amount so obtained from the invoice price of the same, and to apply the amount so ascertained in payment of the rent as it fell due, and that all that was done," then they should find a verdict for the defendants. It was held that the judge properly refused so to charge, as the proposition did not involve the necessity of the jury's finding a mutual agreement, but only an undertaking on the part of one party, which would be without consideration and void. Walker v. Churn, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 801, it was held that where an instruction is equivocal, being correct on one construction of it, the court should not refuse to give it, but should give it with such explanations as to insure its being understood by the jury. In Rosenbaums v.

b. AS TO PRESENTING REQUESTS IN WRITING. — In many and probably most jurisdictions, requests for instructions are required by statute to be made in writing, and if this is not done the court may properly refuse to give the request in charge.¹ In the absence of a statute or rule of court requiring a written request, an oral one, it is apprehended, would be sufficient; but in any event it is obviously the better practice to prefer requests in writing, in order to prevent mistakes and unnecessary disputes between the court and counsel as to what was requested.²

c. AS TO SIGNING AND NUMBERING REQUESTS. — See infra, VIII. Marking "Given" or "Refused," Numbering and Signing Instructions.

5. Time of Presenting Requests — a. DISCRETION OF COURT AS TO GRANTING REQUESTS NOT PRESENTED IN TIME. — It is thought proper to premise a discussion of this subject with the statement that it is generally within the sound discretion of the court to entertain a request to charge, although not made within the time required by some statutory provision or rule of court, or by the ordinary rules of practice independently of statute.³ The remainder of this section will be devoted to a discussion of what the parties may demand of right — not what they may obtain through some act of grace on the part of the court.

Weeden, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 785, it was held that the court may modify an equivocal instruction. In Carrico v. West Virginia Cent., etc., R. Co., 35 W. Va. 389, it was held that where an instruction is ambiguous and equivocal, and would not readily be comprehended by the average jurymen, the court should not refuse to grant it if by so doing the jury might be misled; but if it is correct upon one construction of it, the court should properly modify it so as to remove the ambiguity, and after such modification grant it; and in Peshine v. Shepperson, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 472, it was held that though an instruction is not fully correct, yet, if the general refusal of it may mislead the jury, the court should accompany the refusal with an explanation to the jury, and should give them an instruction stating the correct proposition.

b. VIEW THAT REQUESTS NOT PRESENTED IN TIME ARE PROPERLY REFUSED — General Rule. — In many jurisdictions the time of presenting requests for special instructions is prescribed by statutes, rules of court, or settled practice. In some of them these provisions are rigidly enforced, while in others, as will be seen in a subsequent section, much latitude is left to the trial judge in enforcing them. In interpreting these provisions the courts generally hold that a party who desires special instructions to be given to the jury, must deliver them to the court within the time fixed, and is not entitled to have any consideration given to his requests submitted later.¹

Special Interrogatories to Jury. — As to time of submitting these, see article SPECIAL FINDINGS OF JURIES.

Time of Submitting Propositions of Law on Trial by Court. — The written propositions of law allowed by Illinois Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 780, § 42, to be submitted in trials by the court, to be marked "held" or "refused," should be submitted upon the trial, so that the court may consider them in arriving at its decision. A provision that they may be submitted "within such time as the court may require" does not authorize the court to give leave to submit such propositions after final decision. Allman v. Lumsden, 159 Ill. 219.

It is not competent to submit such propositions after final judgment.

Reason of Rule. — The rules stated are intended to guard the court and the opposite party against surprise. They do not deprive either party of a right to the opinion of the court upon any material proposition which he may desire to have presented to the jury. They merely regulate the exercise of that right.¹ The judge should be given a fair opportunity and sufficient time for the consideration of the propositions involved.²

Application of Rule. — Accordingly requests preferred during the course of the argument,³ or during the course of the general charge,⁴ or after the judge has concluded his general charge,⁵ or after the cause has gone to the jury,⁶ or after the jury have come in and disagreed,⁷ or after rendition of verdict,⁸ have, according to the varied practices, been held to come too late. So in some jurisdictions, where statutes or rules of court provide that requests shall be presented before the general charge is delivered, it is held that the court may disregard requests for instructions presented after delivery of the general charge.⁹

c. VIEW THAT IT MAY BECOME ERROR TO REFUSE INSTRUCTIONS NOT PRESENTED IN TIME. — As already intimated in a preceding section, courts in some jurisdictions having similar provisions as to the time of presenting requests, and courts in other jurisdictions where there are no statutory regulations or rules of court on this subject, are not disposed to adopt any hard and fast rule to cover any and all possible combinations of circumstances. Where instructions are required to be presented to the court within a certain time, either by statute, or by rule of court, or by rule settled by adjudicated cases in the jurisdiction where the cause arises, it will ordinarily not be erroneous to refuse

5. Posey v. Patton, 109 N. Car. 455.

The court is not bound to notice a request made after argument and charge, and this is especially true where the charge adopted the position taken by counsel on both sides, as, for instance, that certain testimony was to be treated as impeaching evidence only, and the request was to charge that it was evidence in chief, thus giving to it a new character and application. requests presented after the required time.¹ But it is considered that a too rigid and unbending enforcement of the rule will sometimes work injustice and that it should be relaxed when the ends of justice so require. If peculiar circumstances exist which would render the enforcement of the rule unjust to one of the parties it should be disregarded.² The form which the general charge itself takes may render further instructions necessary.³

Illinois.— Prindeville v. People, 42 Ill. 217. But see Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak, 148 Ill. 573, where it was held that a request for an instruction should not be refused on the ground that it is not presented in time, in the absence of a written rule of court limiting the time for presenting requests. A rule could only exist in writing of record, as, when thus adopted, it has the force of law. The rule could not exist in the breast of the judge alone, but must be announced as a rule made of record, and is then applicable to all cases without discretion, unless an exercise of discretion is reserved in the rule.

Contra — Kentucky.— In this state it has been held that a rule of court prohibiting a party from obtaining the instruction of the court to the jury on any matter of law relevant to the case, at any time before the jury retire from the box, ought not to be made, and if made ought not to be adhered to. *Bell v. Time of Submitting Instructions to Opposite Party — Relaxation of Rule.—

A rule of court which requires each counsel to submit such instructions as he intends to ask, to opposite counsel, before final argument, may in many cases work injustice. Instructions upon a material point in a criminal case should not be refused because not submitted to the opposing counsel before his final argument, in obedience to a rule of court requiring it. People v. Williams, 32 Cal. 280.

3. People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 25; Pfeffle v. Second Ave. R. Co., 34 Hun (N. Y.) 499; Chapman v. McCormick, 86 N. Y. 479.

"The refusal to accept a request to charge is a fatal error in the conduct of a trial. Chapman v. McCormick, 86 N. Y. 479. It is true in that case no requests to charge had been presented prior to the commencement of the charge. It seems to be quite apparent that in principle it makes no difference whether the requests to charge are presented before or after the charge is delivered. In Raymond v. Richmond, the right to ask after the charge additional directions was recognized and sustained. See 88 N. Y. 671; and Ct. of App. Cas., N. Y. City Bar Assoc., vol. 16. While it is quite apparent that in many instances the charge itself may present an unforeseen view and create an unforeseen necessity which may demand from counsel, in the careful conduct of their case and in the Omissions or Errors in General Charge.—In accordance with these views it has been held that if at the close of a charge it appears that the court has omitted to charge on some point which a fair and impartial presentation of the case requires to be placed before the jury, the court should entertain a request for a further instruction supplying the omission.¹ This is especially true where the court fails to lay down the familiar rules of law which it is always expected will be given in cases to which they are applicable.² So it may be that the court has instructed the jury erroneously, and in that case counsel should be permitted to bring the errors to the attention of the court and ask for proper instructions.³ But the request should be made immediately after the close of the charge.⁴

Interrupting Court or Counsel.—It is not proper to make requests for instruction during argument of counsel or while the court is protection of their client's rights, the preparation of other requests, a necessity which may arise from the manner in which the previous requests had been disposed of or treated by the justice presiding at the trial, by his refusal to acquiesce in some and his treatment of others, and the expression of original views of the facts, circumstances, and law of the case; yet it is impossible for counsel to anticipate what disposition of their requests will be made, or what views may be expressed with regard to them or of the case itself. In any, and indeed in all, of these emergencies, the necessity for further requests may exist, and it is not only a right but the duty of counsel to make such requests in the discharge of his professional obligations, not only to his client but to the court, as the emergency demands. It is not to be denied that requests to charge very often assist in the administration of justice, either by preventing the enforcement of a rule not applicable to the case, or by preventing the omission of one which is controlling." Pfeffle v. Second Ave. R. Co., 34 Hun (N.Y.) 499.

2. Crippen v. Hope, 38 Mich. 344; People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 25; Brick v. Bosworth, 162 Mass. 338.

A party may well assume that, without special request therefor, the judge will properly instruct the jury on the leading points of the case; and if at the close of the charge he observes that the judge has omitted to refer to important matters which ought to be explained to the jury, he may bring the errors to the attention of the court and ask for proper instructions. Brick v. Bosworth, 162 Mass. 338.

Illustrations.—Thus if the presiding justice, in his charge to the jury, errs in assuming a matter to be uncontroverted which a party intended to controvert, State v. Fenlason, 78 Me. 495; or misstates the testimony, Smart v. White, 73 Me. 332; or if he has expressed any opinion upon the testimony, or uses an illustration unfavorable to one of the parties, State v. Wilkinson, 76 Me. 317: the court's attention should be called to such error before the jury retire, so that proper corrections may be made.

"Good faith requires that a litigant who claims to be prejudiced by a ruling of the court shall at once call attention to the fact by apt language, to the end that if an error has been committed it may be corrected or put in shape for review on the spot; and that is why the rules of practice invoked by the plaintiff exist." Smith v. Matthews, 9 Misc. Rep. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 431.

charging the jury.¹ Under such circumstances the instructions are properly refused.²

Want of Explicitness in General Charge. — A further charge may also become important in order to render more explicit that which has already been stated, but which has fallen short of being a clear exposition of the law on the point to which the court's remarks have been addressed.³

Points Overlooked in Hurry of Trial. — And it may happen in the hurry of the trial that counsel has overlooked some question on which the jury should be instructed. If, under these circumstances, an instruction proper in itself and necessary for the jury to consider in making up their verdict, is submitted at any time before the jury retire, it will be error for the court to refuse it,⁴ unless giving it at that time will unduly prejudice one of the parties.⁵

Improper Argument of Counsel. — And further instructions may be rendered necessary by the course of the argument of counsel.⁶

d. WHEN REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS CONSIDERED PREMATURE. — In Michigan it is held that the defendant cannot insist upon the court's instructing the jury until he has rested his case.⁷ Under the practice in Tennessee instructions must be presented after the general charge; if presented before, they may properly be refused.⁸ In Georgia, whether the framing of an instruction before the evidence is all in is erroneous, depends on whether the court charged the law of the case properly or not; if it did, the time when the charge was prepared was immaterial.⁹ In Maryland it is said to be a perfectly legitimate and usual practice to

2. The Proper Course is to wait until the charge is closed, to call the attention of the court to the point omitted and on which the charge should have been given. If this is done it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury in relation to the same. Yeldell v. Shinholster, 15 Ga. 189.

But it has been said that instructions given after argument should not go beyond what is fairly authorized by the argument of counsel or by some other good reason. Foster v. Turner, 31 Kan. 58.

b. WHAT MODIFICATIONS PROPER. — Thus the court may make explanatory additions to instructions asked, such as may be necessary to present the case more fully and clearly to the jury, and to obviate the danger of misapprehension.¹ It may state further principles germane to the point of instruction,² and make such modifications as will relieve the request of any possible ambiguity.³ So it may strike out irrelevant⁴ or unnecessary matter,⁵ and may so qualify the requests as to make them conform strictly to the evidence and pleadings, that is, so qualify them that they will be neither too narrow nor too broad.⁶ The Modification After Agreement to Allow.

— The court may modify instructions asked even after indicating, according to the requirement of the statute, what instruction would be given and what refused. It would be improper to compel the court to give an erroneous instruction merely because it had acted incautiously in indicating what instructions would be given. Logansport v. State, 95 Ga. 346; Shelby v. Offutt, 51 Miss. 128.

Upon the trial of a person under an indictment for perjury, the jury were instructed that intention was the gist of the charge, and although they might believe that the accused had sworn falsely, yet, unless they believed from the evidence that he had so sworn wilfully, corruptly, and falsely, and not by mistake, they must acquit. The court added: "provided any such mistake appears in the evidence." It was held that as the object of the modification was to confine the jury to the evidence it could do no harm, and was court may modify a request which is abstract, by making it applicable to the case;¹ and may qualify a request given, by the cautionary statement of an abstract principle of law,² or a direction to the jury to consider all the evidence in the case.³ But where an instruction as asked is correct, it is of course erroneous so to modify it as to mislead the jury.⁴ If, however, an instruction as asked is erroneous, the party requesting it cannot complain if the court gives an instruction which is the same in substance,⁵ and an erroneous qualification will not operate to reverse where no injury resulted.⁶

Erroneous Qualification of Erroneous Request. — Whether or not a party can complain of an erroneous qualification by the court of an erroneous instruction asked, does not seem to be well settled. There are rulings both ways on this point.⁷

c. HOW MODIFICATIONS MAY BE MADE. — Whether there are statutory provisions or not on this subject, the practice of modifying instructions asked, by interlineations or erasures, is very generally condemned; the proper method being to keep the original instructions and the alterations separate, so that they may be readily identified.⁸ Yet the court, in many cases, must have unobjectionable. Kimmell v. People, 92 Ill. 457.

Adding Qualification Based on Matters Not in Evidence. — Where a charge is asked pertinent to the evidence it is error for the court to annex thereto a material qualification based upon a state of facts purely conjectural, and as to which no evidence had been given to the jury. Bain v. Wilson, 10 Ohio St. 14; Walker v. Stetson, 14 Ohio St. 89.

5. Weller v. Hawes, 49 Iowa 45; Campbell v. Ormsby, 65 Iowa 518.

Where the court, in modifying an instruction asked by the defendant, merely employed the language of the defendant, used in another instruction, the latter cannot complain although the instruction so given is erroneous. Pierce v. Millay, 62 Ill. 133.

6. Moyers v. Columbus Banking, etc., Co., 64 Miss. 48; King v. Rea, 13 Colo. 78; Watson v. Com., 87 Va. 608.

7. Illinois. — In Morgan v. Peet, 32

Ill. 281, it is said: "If the instruction, in its original form, was not the law, it was the duty of the court either to refuse it altogether, or so to amend it as to make it law, and then give it as amended. * * * An instruction given by the court, on its own motion, is quite as influential with the jury, or more so, than one given at the instance of either party, and in either case it must declare the law on the point made." So, in O'Neil v. Orr, 5 Ill. 1, it was held that a party is not precluded from objecting to an erroneous instruction which operates against him, merely because it is given as a qualification of an illegal instruction.

Mississippi. — No qualification of an erroneous instruction can be assigned as error by the party asking the instruction, even though the instruction as modified is erroneous. "One who is entitled to nothing cannot complain that he gets something, but less than he asks." Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Suddoth, 70 Miss. 265.

8. Campbell v. Fuller, 25 Kan. 723; Phillips v. Starr, 26 Iowa 349; Ham v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 61 Iowa 720; Exchange Bank v. Cooper, 40 Mo. 169; Bishop v. Welch, 54 Ind. 527. See also Doe v. Mattox, 37 Ga. 289.

Statement that Qualifications Have Been Made. — Where instructions asked for were read, and then followed by some discretion in the matter,¹ and whether or not there are statutes providing that instructions shall not be modified by interlineations or erasures, such a method of modification will not be ground to reverse if no harm resulted therefrom,² especially where no exception is saved.³

d. REVIEW ON APPEAL. — In order to bring before an appellate court a ruling modifying an instruction, it is necessary to show affirmatively in what respect the court modified it.⁴

7. Manner of Complying with Request Properly Framed — a. RULE THAT INSTRUCTIONS ASKED MAY BE GIVEN IN COURT'S OWN LANGUAGE — (1) Statement of Rule. — In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, it is a rule of almost universal application that the court is not bound to charge the jury in the exact language of the request, but may embody the principles of law covered thereby and essential to a correct determination of the case in language of its own choosing.⁵ The judge, in charging others from the court, with the words prefixed, "qualification by the court," it was held that all those words should have been omitted; still the insertion of them was not so calculated to influence the verdict as to make it material error. Manrose v. Parker, 90 Ill. 581.

1. Campbell v. Fuller, 25 Kan. 723.

Thus a modification may be only in change of a word. Campbell v. Fuller, 25 Kan. 723.

2. Daly v. Bernstein, 6 N. Mex. 380; Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 3 N. Mex. 109 (under statutes forbidding modifications by erasures or interlineations); Gerhauser v. North British, etc., Ins. Co., 7 Nev. 193; Allison v. Hagan, 12 Nev. 38; Union R., etc., Co. v. Kallagher, 114 Ill. 325 (apparently decided without reference to any statutory provision.)

Illustration. — Where an instruction was modified by rejecting a portion, and such rejection was indicated by passing through the rejected words a stroke of the pen, leaving them still legible, in which state the instruction was handed to the jury, it was held that unless the attention of the court had been called to the fact, and it had refused to allow the instruction to be rewritten, no complaint of the jury having been misled thereby could be entertained. Gerhauser v. North British, etc., Ins. Co., 7 Nev. 174.

Modification by Cutting Off Portion of Sheet on Which Instruction Is Written. — Under the Wisconsin statute (Code, § 2785), providing that alterations or modifications shall not be by erasures or interlineations, "but shall be well defined, and shall follow some such characterizing words as 'changed thus,' which words shall themselves indicate that the same was refused as demanded," modifications of instructions asked may be made by cutting off a part of the sheet on which the instruction is written. Ham v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 61 Iowa 720.

Presumptions on Appeal. — Where an instruction is refused by the court in the form asked, but, as the record shows, was given with an explanation, though it is not shown what the explanation was, it must be presumed that the court eliminated whatever was erroneous, and correctly applied the law to the case. Clampitt v. Kerr, 1 Utah 246.

2. Illustrations. — Where counsel asked an instruction that the jury must believe that the defendant "signed the order, or was present and advised another to sign it," it is sufficient to instruct that they must believe that the defendant "wrote and signed" it. Jackson v. Com., (Ky. 1896) 34 S. W. Rep. 15. So an instruction that certain disputed facts must be proven "affirmatively and directly," is a sufficient compliance with the request that they should be proven "affirmatively and distinctly." Cornelius v. Brawley, 109 N. Car. 542.

A request to charge that it would be not only illegal but disgraceful for the jury to be swayed by any outside influence, is sufficiently covered by an instruction that the jury should not decide the case by sympathy with the plaintiff or ill feeling against railroads, but according to the law charged and the evidence heard. Hay v. Carolina Midland R. Co., 41 S. Car. 542.

In an action on a contract of hire a request to charge that if the plaintiff had some other employment at lower wages, and had abandoned it, he could only recover the difference between the amount sued for and the amount he would have earned under the lower contract, is sufficiently covered by an instruction that he is bound to obtain other employment if he can, and that what he would earn at it must be deducted from the amount of his recovery, even if he had relinquished the other employment. Champlain v. Detroit Stamping Co., 68 Mich. 238.

The court substituted, in the defendant's seventh prayer, for the words "they [the jury] must be satisfied and convinced by the evidence," the words "they must find from the evidence;" and in the eighth prayer, for the words "unless they are convinced by the evidence," the words "unless they find from the evidence." It was said: "An instruction to the jury that they must 'find' a fact as to which there is conflicting testimony means, by common acceptance, that they must be satisfied of it to that degree of certainty which

(3) Requirement that All Proper Points of Request Be Covered.—It is necessary, however, that the charge as given shall cover all the points of the request essential to a full and clear presentation of the case to the jury.¹ An instruction granted by the court after rejecting the prayer offered by counsel is defective, unless it declares the law upon the points raised by counsel, in terms explicit and intelligible.²

(4) Requirement that Request Be Not Materially Qualified.—And care must be taken not so to change the sense of the request or so to qualify it as to weaken its force.³ When a request for instructions, to which a party is entitled, is presented, its substance or meaning must be given unimpaired by any material qualification.⁴

(5) The Better Course to Follow in Complying with Request.—While, as already seen, it is not considered error for the court, where requests have been made, to charge in its own language, there is some diversity of opinion as to what is the better course. In some cases it has been said to be the better practice to put aside the case requires, that is, in a criminal case, as to a fact necessary to constitute the crime beyond a reasonable doubt; in a civil case, by such preponderance of evidence as satisfies the mind. The word 'find' had been several times used in this sense in the judge's charge and in the instructions granted at the defendant's request. The court had used the words 'to find,' 'to be convinced,' 'to reach the conclusion,' in a way that could leave no doubt as to what was intended. That the court adhered to the word already used to express the same meaning is not error." Southern Bell Telephone, etc., Co. v. Watts, 25 U. S. App. 214.

"While the judge is not required to give an instruction in the very words in which it is prayed, even when correct in law, and certainly not when in any particular erroneous, yet it is to be expected that he shall declare the law as applicable to the facts in proof and any reasonable inferences that may be drawn from them, in order to an intelligent and rightful determination of the issues before the jury." Rencher v. Wynne, 86 N. Car. 272, quoted in McDonald v. Carson, 94 N. Car. 507.

Necessity for Exceptions.—The court has the clear right to prepare and give instructions to the jury in lieu of those asked by a party, and if those so given do not contain the substance of those asked by the party, he must except to the ruling of the court if he desires to assign the same for error. *Bromley v. all instructions asked by counsel, and to cover the whole ground of the controversy in a methodical and corrected charge, without regard to the peculiar form or structure of the request;¹ and so far as this view relates to cases in which the requests of counsel are in any manner defective, it is unquestionably correct, for in such case it would not only be the right but the duty of the court to correct the instruction.² There are, however, decisions which take the view that it is always better to instruct in the language of the request, if possible,³ and this view is a reasonable one if the instructions asked are correct and so formulated as to be easily understood by the jury.⁴

(6) Presumptions on Appeal.—If the record does not show affirmatively that requests for instructions refused were presented in writing, it will be presumed that they were not, and the action of the trial court in refusing them will be sustained.⁵ If, on the

"One of the evils that has crept into our practice of written instructions arises from the fact that instructions may be so drawn as to embody a correct rule of law, and yet contain by suggestion or innuendo that which amounts to an intimation, if not to an argument, on the facts. The instruction handed up comes to the judge from a partisan hand, and it has been drawn as carefully as the skill of the lawyer can accomplish it, to present a partisan view, or to convey a hint, suggestion, or intimation of advantage to his client. The same legal rule may be stated in a differently arranged combination of words by the judge, and be, as it is very likely to be, coldly impartial and entirely colorless in its statement of the facts on which it is based. The practice of the judge's refusing all instructions asked and giving a written instruction or charge to the jury, covering all the questions in the case, is not only not in violation of the statute or the rights of litigants, but is in our opinion a wise and commendable course, and one most likely to reach just results." *Chicago v. 4. "A party has the right to have the law of his case go to the jury in its plainest, simplest form; and if it is properly embodied in a request in that form, prepared by counsel, and furnished to the court, it ought to be thus given, and the request should not be ignored by the court. We have had occasion to allude to this subject before, and when the court declines to give such requests it must appear that the substance of them has been as well given by the court in its own language, or the omission will be error." Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

Presumptions on Appeal.—If the record shows that the court refused to give a correct and pertinent instruction "in the language and form" requested, it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the charge was substantially given in another form. Bolen v. State, 26 Ohio St. 371.

b. RULE THAT COURT MUST FOLLOW LANGUAGE OF REQUEST. — In some jurisdictions, by virtue of statutes,² and in others where there appear to be no statutory provisions on the subject,³ the rule is that instruction must be given in the language of the request. In one state it is held that the charge must be given or refused in the very terms in which it is asked, and that the error of its refusal would be ground to reverse, though the proposition be embodied in instructions already or thereafter given to the jury.⁴ It is held, however, that the statute does not prohibit the giving of additional explanatory charges in order to relieve the instruction asked from involvement or obscurity, or to

"We regard the statute as introductory and affirmatory of the original rule of practice which was announced and observed in this court, and intended to secure to the parties the unqualified right to charges requested, when they affirm correct legal propositions, not abstract, and not misleading, in the terms in which they are expressed." Eiland v. State, 52 Ala. 322.

The View Taken is that the right which the statute secures cannot be diminished by the giving of a charge as requested, and then by qualification so limiting, restricting, and modifying as to weaken its force; and that if it needs limitation, restriction, or modification, it should be refused. Eiland v. State, 52 Ala. 322.

make plain and interpret the terms employed.¹ Nor does the statute prohibit the giving of a charge asked "in connection with the general charge."²

In Other Jurisdictions the Doctrine of Error Without Injury Applies, and when it is apparent that no injury could result because of the refusal to charge in the exact language of the request,³ or because of the qualification of a request, the judgment will not be reversed.⁴

VII. WRITTEN INSTRUCTIONS — 1. Necessity for Instructing in Writing — a. AT COMMON LAW. — At common law it is entirely within the discretion of the trial judge whether instructions to the jury shall be in writing. In the absence of statutes providing otherwise the whole charge may be delivered orally, and the action of the trial judge in so doing will not be reviewable on appeal or error.⁵

b. UNDER STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS — (1) Statement of Rule. — But in nearly all jurisdictions there are statutory provisions which have changed the common-law rule. Some of these statutes provide that the instructions shall be in writing when a request for instructions in writing is made by the parties, and under other statutes no request that the instructions shall be

Sawyer v. Lorillard, 48 Ala. 333. In this case, after the general charge had been given, the court gave an instruction requested, with the statement that it was given "with the qualifications contained in the first charge."

Presumptions on Appeal. — Charges which the record fails to show were moved for in writing will be presumed to have been asked orally, and it is not error to refuse such charges, as asked, without qualification, and then to give them with a qualification by reference to a charge already given and not objected to. Milner v. Wilson, 45 Ala. 478.

Where the instruction is definite and contains sound views of the law applicable to the case and intelligible to the jury, it can make no essential difference whether it is communicated to them in writing or orally.

It is true that in the trial of causes and the exposition of the law to the jury, the reduction of the instruction to writing is certainly more formal, less liable to hasty error, and may enable the court the better to mature its views, and more distinctly and formally to express them to the jury, as a general rule; but still the law may be sufficiently expounded to the jury through oral instructions. No doubt the court would not hesitate, where it was requested, and was deemed by the counsel to be material, to embody its views in writing, in advance of any oral communication to the jury. This matter, however, is left to the sound discretion of the court below, and is not the subject of review by this court. Smith v. Crichton, 33 Md. 103.

written is necessary. These statutes are not directory but mandatory, and must be strictly complied with. It is almost uniformly held that when the parties are entitled to written instructions, either because the statute leaves the court no discretion in the matter or because a timely request therefor has been made, oral instructions in whole or in part are erroneous, and are sufficient cause for setting aside the judgment and ordering a new trial.¹

Contra — Texas — Civil Cases. — In Texas the weight of authority is that in civil cases the statute requiring instructions to the jury to be in writing is directory merely, and that a violation thereof cannot be assigned as error, Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Dunlavy, 56 Tex. 256; Reid v. Reid, 11 Tex. 586; Boone v. Thompson, 17 Tex. 605; Chapman v. Sneed, 17 Tex. 428; Parker v. Chancellor, 78 Tex. 527; Toby v. Heidenheimer, 1 Tex. In Absence of Request. — Where, however, a request for written instructions is necessary, it is not error to charge orally in the absence of such request.¹

Harmless Error. — It has also been held that a failure to charge in writing although required by statute to do so, even though it be erroneous is no ground for reversal where no prejudice could have resulted to the appellant therefrom;² although there is one

Pennsylvania. — While the Act of March 24, 1877, makes it the duty of a judge to reduce to writing the answers to the several points presented and read them to the jury before they retire to consider their verdict, an omission to do so is not error for which the judgment will be reversed. Scheuing v. Yard, 88 Pa. St. 286; Patterson v. Kountz, 63 Pa. St. 246. See also Morberger v. Hackenberg, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 26.

North Carolina. — Recapitulation of Evidence. — Under the North Carolina statute it is not necessary to put the recapitulation of the evidence in writing. Jenkins v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 110 N. Car. 442.

Instance. — Where there was a request for written instructions, it was held error to charge the jury orally that "if the state has failed to make out a case against this defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, or if the defendant by his evidence has raised a reasonable doubt, then your verdict will be as follows" (reading form of verdict for defendant). Stephenson v. State, 110 Ind. 358.

Rule Applicable to Further Instructions Given on Return of Jury. — Where a cause is submitted and the court recalls the jury and gives further oral instructions in reference to the law of the case, and verbal explanations of the written instructions that have already been given, it is error, and, upon proper exceptions, sufficient to compel a reversal. State v. Stoffel, 48 Kan. 364; Willis v. State, 89 Ga. 188.

Comments on Request to Charge must be in writing if requested. City Bank v. Kent, 57 Ga. 285.

Withdrawal of Request. — Where the plaintiff requested the court to put charges in writing, and afterwards, when too late for the defendant to make such a request, withdrew it, it was held no error, especially where the record did not show that any oral instructions were given or that the defendant was injured. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 39 Ind. 475.

Certificate that Instructions Were in Writing—What Sufficient. — The judge's certificate, in the bill of exceptions, that the reporter stated that he had taken down the charge in writing and had lost it, is not a sufficient certificate that the charge was so taken down. Penberthy v. Lee, 51 Wis. 261.

Lack of Time to Put Whole Charge in Writing—Effect. — The fact that "it was impracticable to put the whole charge in writing in the time within which it was necessary to conclude the trial," does not cure a failure to observe the requirement of the statute. If there was not time to do so the court should, in its discretion, have made a mistrial. Jenkins v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 110 N. Car. 442.

What Record Must Show on Appeal. — To render the refusal of a request available error the record must affirmatively show that the court was requested to give such instructions before the argument, and that its refusal to do so was a subject of an exception. Monroeville v. Root, 54 Ohio St. 523.

2. Greathouse v. Summerfield, 25 Ill. App. 296; Walsh v. St. Louis Drayage Co., 40 Mo. App. 339; Com. v. Barry, 11 Allen (Mass.) 263.

It is not the province of the defendant to assert or maintain a rule of law where the omission to observe it has been the cause of no injustice to him. Com. v. Barry, 11 Allen (Mass.) 263.

In Hogel v. Lindell, 10 Mo. 484, it was said that "if oral instructions should be given and it could not be ascertained what they were, under the late law it would be a cause for reversing the judgment. But if they are preserved in the bill of exceptions, and decision to the contrary.¹ It would seem, though, that an error of this sort should not be allowed to deprive the appellee of the fruits of his verdict.

(2) What Are Instructions Within the Rule.—The statutory requirement that instructions shall be in writing applies to special instructions asked by the parties as well as to instructions in chief.² About this principle there is no dispute, but during the course of a trial oral communications not infrequently pass between the court and jury, and it is not always easy to decide whether these communications are instructions within the meaning of the statutes just mentioned.³ The charge or instruction required by law to be reduced to writing is only that which the court may have to say to the jury in regard to the principles of law applicable to the case and the evidence.⁴ Instructions proper are directions in regard to the law of the case.⁵ It follows then that every statement or remark made by the court during the

it appears that they were favorable to the party complaining, or did not at all affect his rights as a suitor, it would be difficult to find a ground on which to place such a construction of the statute as would overturn the judgment. The instructions may have been given without the solicitation of the party obtaining the verdict, and even against his consent, and yet to deprive him of his ascertained rights, and to subject him to the payment of costs, merely because the judge has wilfully violated a statute in a way that did not at all conduce to the attainment of his verdict, would seem to be the greatest injustice."

1. In Indiana it has been held that the judgment should be reversed, although the instruction was favorable to the appellant. Widner v. State, 28 Ind. 394. See also Shafer v. Stinson, 76 Ind. 374.

2. Stratton v. Paul, 10 Iowa 139.

5. Lawler v. McPheeters, 73 Ind. 579; Dodd v. Moore, 91 Ind. 522; Stanley v. Sutherland, 54 Ind. 339.

Where an exception is taken to a charge and the court says in reply: "I have not attempted to state what the facts are, but simply what is claimed," such a statement is not part of the charge and need not be in writing. Malachi v. State, 89 Ala. 134.

Remarks Held to Be Instructions.—The admission by the court to the jury that "the defendant's attorney had let down the fence and that all is now before the jury," is an oral instruction and erroneous. Coppage v. Com., 3 Bush (Ky.) 532.

A statement to the jury that "this idea of an accident, which has been urged by the defense, amounts to nothing and is not tenable; there is no evidence to show it was an accident; on the contrary, it shows there was a scuffle, and that the defendant persisted in holding on to the pistol," is an instruction within the meaning of the statute requiring instructions to be in writing, and is also vicious as being upon the weight of evidence. People v. Bonds, 1 Nev. 33.

Harmless Error.—Where a stipulation in another case was introduced in evidence during the progress of a trial, and the court said, in the presence of the jury: "I shall hold that by that stipulation defendants acknowledged that there was twelve hundred dollars and interest due the said railroad company that has not been paid," it was held that as the remark was not addressed to the jury, and as there was no conflict in the evidence as to the fact that the amount named was in fact due the railroad company, and the question of indebtedness was fairly submitted to the jury, no prejudice could have resulted from the remark. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Cowan, 77 Iowa 535.

time consumed in delivering its charge to the jury is not necessarily a part of its instructions,¹ and that the mere fact that an oral communication has passed from the court to the jury is no proof that the statute has been disregarded.²

Particular Oral Communications. — In view of these principles it has been uniformly held that the court may properly make oral statements to the jury in reference to the form of the verdict,³ or state that certain instructions were given at the request of one of the parties.⁴ And directions to counsel confining their arguments to such points of law as the court supposed controlled the case, and stating what those points were;⁵ or remarks in relation to the jury agreeing on a verdict,⁶ or in relation to the admissibility of evidence,⁷ or the purpose for which evidence is introduced;⁸ or directing the jury not to consider evidence;⁹ or limiting the effect of evidence;¹⁰ or withdrawing, or directing the jury not to

1. McCallister v. Mount, 73 Ind. 559.

2. State v. Potter, 15 Kan. 302.

A remark of the court, not designed as an instruction to the jury, nor addressed to them, nor of a nature to be considered while they were deliberating upon their verdict, will not be presumed to have influenced their verdict. Cormac v. Western White Bronze Co., 77 Iowa 32.

3. State v. Potter, 15 Kan. 302; People v. Bonney, 19 Cal. 427; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 149 Ill. 525; Lehman v. Hawks, 121 Ind. 541; Bradway v. Waddell, 95 Ind. 170; McCallister v. Mount, 73 Ind. 559; State v. Glass, 50 Wis. 219.

Thus an oral statement to the jury that they should find one of three written verdicts submitted to them by the court with the defendant's consent, and that they should sign the verdict as found, was held no part of the charge which the statute required to be in writing. State v. Glass, 50 Wis. 219.

So where the jury returned with an informal verdict, and the court orally directed them to retire and bring in a verdict covering the issues in the case, it was held that such direction was not an instruction. Lehman v. Hawks, 121 Ind. 541.

4. Scott v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 360; Sample v. State, 104 Ind. 289.

Where it has been demanded that the instructions to the jury shall be in writing, it is not error to state orally to the jury that "the plaintiff has requested me to give you some instructions which are in writing, and I will read them first, and I read them as the law."

Such a statement is not the annunciation of any principle of law, nor is it a direction to guide the jury in arriving at a verdict. It is no more than a declaration that the court had not instructed, but was about to instruct, as to the law of the case. Dodd v. Moore, 91 Ind. 522.

5. O'Hara v. King, 52 Ill. 304.

6. State v. McLafferty, 47 Kan. 140.

As, for instance, an admonition as to the importance of finding a verdict. Strepey v. Stark, 7 Colo. 614. Or an oral statement that as the trial had occasioned great expense, and a large venire had been exhausted, and much time taken up, and it was doubtful whether another jury could be procured, the court would give an instruction upon the point upon which the jury had been in doubt the night before, and it might aid them in finding a verdict. State v. Jones, 7 Nev. 408.

7. Meinaka v. State, 55 Ala. 47; Fruchey v. Eagleson, 15 Ind. App. 88.

8. Green v. Com., (Ky. 1895) 33 S. W. Rep. 100.

9. State v. Good, 132 Mo. 114; Bradway v. Waddell, 95 Ind. 170.

Such remarks are customarily made by courts in the trial of causes and are not regarded as instructions. State v. Good, 132 Mo. 114.

10. State v. Becton, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 139; Stanley v. Sutherland, 54 Ind. 339.

Remarks made at the time the evidence was given, stating for what purpose it was admitted and to enable the jury to give it the intended application, are not instructions. Farmer v. Thrift, 94 Iowa 374.

consider, an erroneous instruction given;¹ or directing the jury to answer interrogatories,² or to further consider their verdict;³ or admonishing jurors in regard to their duty as such;⁴ or repeating admissions made by parties;⁵ or explaining what facts will or will not disqualify jurors;⁶ or directing a verdict;⁷ or refusing instructions — are not instructions.⁸ So the court may comment orally on the manner in which the trial has been conducted, or the behavior of the jury, or counsel, or parties,⁹ and may direct them to refrain from talking among themselves or with others,¹⁰ or may state that he cannot instruct them as to matters of fact.¹¹ So also apologies made by the court for impatience shown because of the length of the trial are not considered instructions.¹²

In Conclusion it may be stated that nothing short of a positive direction as to the law applicable to the case will be considered an instruction within the meaning of the statutes.

(3) What Is a Sufficient Compliance with the Rule — (a) Generally. — A requirement that instructions shall be in writing is

1. Edwards v. Smith, 63 Mo. 119; Wall v. State, 18 Tex. 682.

Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Stansberry, 132 Ind. 533. In this case the defendant requested the court to reduce its instructions to writing, which was done, but during the reading of the same to the jury, and after reading one of its instructions, the court stopped and said: "That is not correct; I'll read that again," and thereupon reread the instruction.

3. Judge v. Jordan, 81 Iowa 519; Johnson v. Rider, 84 Iowa 50. In this case the jury having returned a verdict, the judge stated to them that it was not in accordance with the charge, and directed them to retire and return a verdict in accordance with the charge.

4. Sargent v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 325; Duggan v. State, 9 Fla. 516; Moore v. Platteville, 78 Wis. 644. In this case the court, before reading the charge, directed the jury to pay particular and careful attention to each word and sentence thereof, so that they might be advised as to the law of the case. Compare Equitable F. Ins. Co. v. C. P. Church, 91 Tenn. 135, where it was held that oral statements by the judge before delivering his written charge, as to the duty of the jury to try the cause on the sworn testimony, constituted an instruction within the meaning of a statute (Code 1884, § 3672), requiring the judge, on the request of either party, to reduce every word in his charge to writing.

Contra. — Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Raab, 11 Ill. App. 636.

8. Sullivan v. Collins, 18 Iowa 228, in which case, the jury having sent questions to the judge, he told them orally that their questions had nothing to do with the case and that it was their duty to determine it under the evidence and instructions given. To the same effect see Seymour v. Colburn, 43 Wis. 71, where the court, in answer to an irrelevant question, told the jury that it was irrelevant; and People v. Jackson, 57 Cal. 316, where the court, in answer to a request from the jury to know what was the least punishment for the offense charged, directed them orally that they had nothing to do with that matter.

sufficiently complied with when such instructions are written in pencil,¹ or printed,² or when written in English and orally translated into the language understood by the jury.³

(b) Subsequent Reduction of Oral Charge to Writing. — There is some conflict of opinion as to whether an oral charge, subsequently reduced to writing, satisfies a requirement that an instruction shall be in writing. In *Arkansas*⁴ and *Ohio*⁵ this practice is permissible. In Indiana,⁶ Florida,⁷ Kentucky,⁸ and *Iowa*⁹ it is not, and it makes no difference whether the writing contains merely the substance of the charge,¹⁰ or is a verbatim copy of it.¹¹

Having Charge Taken Down by Stenographer. — In California and Wisconsin, by express provision of statute,¹² the court may charge orally when the charge is taken down by the stenographer.¹³ It is, however, erroneous to deliver an oral charge in the absence of the stenographer.¹⁴ In Idaho the practice is the same, although

1. Harvey v. Tama County, 53 Iowa 228.

2. State v. Fooks, 65 Iowa 196; State v. Kelly, 73 Mo. 608. In this case it was said that an objection that part of the instructions were in print was too frivolous for comment.

3. Territory v. Romine, 2 N. Mex. 114.

4. National Lumber Co. v. Snell, 47 Ark. 407; Barkman v. State, 13 Ark. 705 (under Mans. Dig., § 5131, providing that instructions shall be reduced to writing on request of either party).

5. Powers v. Hazleton, etc., R. Co., 33 Ohio St. 429.

6. Rising-Sun, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Conway, 7 Ind. 187; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Daniels, 21 Ind. 256; Widner v. State, 28 Ind. 394.

7. Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 650. It was held, however, in Southern Express Co. v. Van Meter, 17 Fla. 794, that where a judge, having refused to give instructions asked for by the defendant and having given oral instructions, subsequently, and before the jury retired, gave the written instructions offered by the plaintiff, saying to the jury that the written instructions thus given were substantially the same as the oral instructions he had given, and that he adopted them as instructions of the court, this was a sufficient compliance with the statute (Laws 1877, c. 2096) requiring charges to be wholly in writing.

8. Payne v. Com., 1 Metc. (Ky.) 370.

9. State v. Harding, 81 Iowa 599. In this case it was held that the fact that the court detained the jury until the further instructions asked were written out and sent in to them, and that they then voted upon and adhered to their former verdict, did not cure the defect.

10. Rising-Sun, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Conway, 7 Ind. 187.

11. Widner v. State, 28 Ind. 394.

12. Penal Code Cal., § 1093; Wis. Laws 1871, c. 89. (This statute effectually amends Laws 1868, c. 106, notwithstanding a clerical error in the latter act by which the amended act is described as of the year 1869.) Pemberthy v. Lee, 51 Wis. 261.

13. People v. Curtis, 76 Cal. 57; Pemberthy v. Lee, 51 Wis. 261.

14. People v. Carrillo, 70 Cal. 643; People v. Hersey, 53 Cal. 575; People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 500.

In delivering an oral charge in the absence of the stenographer, the court, by its own act, makes it impossible that the defendant shall be secured in his rights, and this is necessarily an error of the court. People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 500.

The object of the statute in requiring the instructions of the court, if not in writing, to be taken down by the stenographer, is to insure to the defendant the means of getting a correct statement of the charge really given, and this object would be completely frustrated if the judge, who has orally charged the jury in the absence of the stenographer, could cure the error by putting into the bill of exceptions a correct charge. People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 500.

Failure of Stenographer to Take Down Whole Charge. — If the stenographer is present but fails to take down the whole there is no express statutory authority therefor,¹ and possibly it would be permissible in Nebraska.² In Indiana,³ Colorado,⁴ Kansas,⁵ and Georgia,⁶ the giving of oral instructions and having them taken down by a stenographer will not be sufficient.

(c) Oral Explanations, Modifications, or Additions.—Where a statute requires the court to instruct in writing on request or without request, it is error to accompany the written instructions given, by oral explanations, modifications, additions, or illustrations. The court has no power to affect or change the law as stated in written instructions, by any statement not in writing,⁷ but, of charge the court may nevertheless put into the bill of exceptions what was actually said; and if the bill of exceptions shows that the language not taken down by the reporter did not affect nor in any way qualify the charge which was taken down, there is no such error as will warrant a reversal. People v. Cox, 76 Cal. 281. See also People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 500.

2. See Yates v. Kinney, 23 Neb. 648, in which the court said that the Act of 1875, relating to instructions to juries, requires all instructions to be in writing and filed with the clerk before being given to the jury, unless the writing is waived, etc. Even if delivered orally, the statutes seem to require them to be reduced to writing and filed with the clerk before the case is finally submitted, in order that exceptions may be taken by either party, if desired, and that the jury may have the benefit of such instructions in considering their verdict.

tions to be given to the jury, such instructions shall be reduced to writing, numbered, and signed by the party or his attorney asking the same, and delivered to the court. The court shall give general instructions to the jury which shall be in writing, and be numbered and signed by the judge, if required by either party. * * * All instructions given by the court must be signed by the judge and filed, together with those asked for by the parties, as a part of the record").

course, this may be done by consent of counsel. It surely is no hardship to require the court to do exactly what the law commands and the parties request. A line or two more costs but little labor, and prevents confusion, wrong, and error.¹ To take advantage of such error, however, an exception must be saved at the time it is committed.²

(d) Reading from Books and Papers as Part of the Charge. (See also infra, IX. 2. Reading Decisions, Text-books, or Statutes.)—There is considerable conflict of opinion as to whether this practice violates a statutory requirement that instructions shall be in writing, and decisions, even in the same states, are not always harmonious. This conflict is due, in a measure at least, to the difference in the provisions and wording of the various statutes. In Arkansas,³ Louisiana,⁴ Kansas,⁵ and *Nevada*⁶ it has been held no violation of the statutes to read the law applicable to the case from the Ohio. — Householder v. Granby, 40 Ohio St. 430.

Texas. — McMahon v. State, 1 Tex. App. 102.

"The propositions embodied in the writing must stand in their assumed form, not added to or diminished by any contemporary and extraneous words falling from the lips of the judge. The jury must gather the meaning of the instruction solely from the written words in which it is conveyed, as must the revising court in passing upon its correctness in law." Currie v. Clark, 90 N. Car. 355.

Instances.—An oral substitution of the word "fairly" for the word "strictly." Provines v. Heaston, 67 Ind. 482.

An additional oral instruction upon the subject of nominal damages. Bradway v. Waddell, 95 Ind. 170.

An additional oral instruction as to fixing the punishment after a written charge in which nothing was said about punishment. Ellis v. People, 159 Ill. 337.

An oral recapitulation of the substance of a testimony. McClay v. State, 1 Ind. 385.

Immateriality of Explanation or Modification.—There is some conflict of authority as to whether error in giving oral explanations, additions, or modifications of a written charge will operate to reverse where such explanations, additions, and modifications are immaterial. According to one decision it makes no difference that an oral modification made was immaterial. Ray v. Wooters, 19 Ill. 82.

But another decision holds that where it appears from the record that an oral explanation could not and did not modify the charge, it will not be treated as error. It is further said in this case, however, that the record must affirmatively show that the oral explanation did not modify the charge or the cause will be reversed. O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 369. To the same effect is Currie v. Clark, 90 N. Car. 361.

A decision similar to this is Fry v. Shehee, 55 Ga. 208, in which the court said that in all cases where an oral addition to a written charge was given a new trial would be granted, unless it plainly appeared from the record that such new trial would not change the verdict. Continental Nat. Bank v. Folsom, 67 Ga. 624.

Subsequent Reduction to Writing.—An error in giving an oral explanation or modification is not cured by subsequently reducing it to writing. Payne v. Com., 1 Metc. (Ky.) 377.

codes and statutes without copying it into the charge, and the same view has been taken by the Michigan courts.¹ In Indiana,² Iowa,³ and *Utah*⁴ the contrary doctrine is maintained. Although there is an earlier decision to the contrary,⁵ it is not now permissible to read from the code in charging in cases of felony in Tennessee.⁶ On the other hand, the first decision on this question in California denied the propriety of reading from the statutes as a part of the charge,⁷ but the courts of the state now maintain the

1. Swartout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 Mich. 389, in which the court said: "The spirit of the statute appears to me to have been complied with in this case. The party is as fully protected as if the statute had been copied into the charge. If the jury were to take the charge with them to their rooms, it might be different; but when it is only to be filed, and there is proper reference in it to any statute read, I think it sufficient. Had something besides a general law of the state been thus referred to, perhaps the conclusion should have been different; but it appears to me that in this the judge committed no error."

In Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 306, the judge, without passing upon the question whether it was objectionable for the judge in charging the jury to read a passage from a text-book without embodying it beforehand in the written charge, held that it was too late to raise the objection after verdict.

2. Bottorff v. Shelton, 79 Ind. 98; Smurr v. State, 88 Ind. 504; Bradway v. Waddell, 95 Ind. 170; Sellers v. Greencastle, 134 Ind. 645.

"Where the request to instruct in writing is made, it is not complied with by reading from the statutes of the state or from other law books. This is not reducing the charge to writing as required by the statute. It is proper, of course, for the court to make extracts which are law and applicable to the case from any law book, and to copy the same in its written charge, and to read the charge containing such extracts to the jury. The extracts from books given in this way to the jury become part of the court's written charge; the identity of the charge is secured. But if the court may, in charging the jury, where there is a request to instruct in writing, read from law books, reading a few lines here and a few there, omitting occasionally a word or a sentence not deemed applicable to the case, a party would be put to much and perhaps fruitless effort in collecting together the court's charge." Smurr v. State, 88 Ind. 509.

3. State v. Birmingham, 74 Iowa 407, where it was held erroneous to read from the indictment for the purpose of stating the issues to the jury without setting out in the instructions the part of the indictment thus read.

When Error Held Harmless. — While it is error to read a pleading as a part of the charge, such error is not harmful where the charge contains full instructions as to the issues. Hall v. Carter, 74 Iowa 364.

4. Hopt v. People, 104 U. S. 631, where it was held erroneous to give an instruction not reduced to writing otherwise than by a reference to a certain page of a law magazine, under a statute requiring instructions to be reduced to writing before being given and providing that they should form part of the record and be subjects of appeal. The reasoning of the court in support of this conclusion was as follows: "If the book was not given to the jury when they retired for deliberation, they did not have with them the whole of the instructions of the judge, as the statute contemplated. If they were permitted to take the book with them without the defendant's consent, that would of itself be ground of exception."

5. Logston v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 414.

6. Manier v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 595 (under a statute [Act of 1873, c. 57] which provides that every word of the charge in a felony case must be in writing and that the jury must take it with them into the jury-room on retiring).

7. People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29 (decided under a statute providing that all charges shall be reduced to writing before being given, and that in no case shall any charge be given otherwise than in writing, unless by mutual consent). The court further held in this case that the defendant's consent to such a charge could not be presumed opposite view.¹ So in Texas, a decision by the Supreme Court holding it error to read from the statutes as a part of an instruction required to be in writing² has been disapproved by a decision of the court of appeals which maintains the contrary view.³

2. Time of Presenting and Answering Requests for Written Instructions. — Where the court is not bound to deliver its charge in writing in the absence of a request, a request should be made in time to give the court an opportunity to reduce its instructions to writing. A request should usually be made at or before the close of the evidence and before the commencement of the argument.⁴ If not made until after the argument of the case is concluded, and at a time when the court is about to give oral instructions to the jury, it comes too late and is not available.⁵ But a rule of court requiring a request for written instructions to be made at the commencement of a trial is unreasonable, and will not be enforced.⁶

from his presence and his failure to make objection.

1. People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 262 (by divided court); People v. Brown, 59 Cal. 345; People v. Lewis, 64 Cal. 401. These cases were decided under a statute (Penal Code, § 1093), providing that if the charge be not given in writing it must be taken down by the phonographic reporter, and Penal Code, § 7, providing that writing includes printing.

Time of Answering Request for Written Charge. — Where a charge in writing is requested it has been held that the judge is not bound to give it at once, but may adjourn over to another day to prepare it. Head v. Bridges, 67 Ga. 227.

5. Newton v. Newton, 12 Ind. 527; Boggs v. Clifton, 17 Ind. 217; Ollam v. Shaw, 27 Ind. 388; McCalment v. State, 77 Ind. 250; Cortner v. Amick, 13 Ind. 463; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin, 23 Kan. 74; Connor v. Wilkie, 1 Kan. App. 492; Union St. R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83.

Where a request for written instructions was delayed until within a few minutes of the close of the evidence, and was made at a time when the granting of such request would necessarily detain the business of the court while the instructions were being prepared and reduced to writing, it was held that such request was not in time and that it was properly refused. Connor v. Wilkie, 1 Kan. App. 492.

Reason for Rule. — "While it imposes no hardship upon either the parties or the counsel, a different rule might impose great hardship or great inconvenience upon both the court and parties in other cases waiting for their cases to be heard. If counsel may wait until the close of the argument before making the request it would necessarily cause great delay in the proceedings of the court, and materially increase costs and expenses. Generally, it would require an adjournment of the court to enable the judge to prepare his written instructions." Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin, 23 Kan. 74.

Party Not Bound to Write Out Instructions. — Where a party, after the introduction of the evidence, requested the court to charge the jury in writing, and thereupon the court requested said party to write out any instructions he desired to have given, which he refused to do, and thereupon the court refused to charge the jury in writing, the court committed reversible error. Jenkins v. Levis, 23 Kan. 255.

What Record Must Show on Appeal. — An objection that the court erred in refusing to instruct in writing as requested will not avail on appeal where it does not affirmatively appear by the record that the request was made before the commencement of the argument in the cause. Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71.

6. Laseille v. Wells, 17 Ind. 33; Connor v. Wilkie, 1 Kan. App. 492.

3. Waiver of Written Instructions — a. BY EXPRESS AGREEMENT. — It is perfectly competent for parties to waive written instructions by express agreement to that effect, although the statute requires the court to instruct in writing, and the parties will be estopped from afterwards objecting.¹ If the rule were otherwise it would enable parties to induce such consent, and if the findings should be adverse then assign error and reverse the judgment; the parties having consented must be held to their act.²

Contra. — State v. Cooper, 45 Mo. 66, in which the court said: "The provisions of the law are express and positive. They were enacted for wise and beneficial purposes, and neither courts nor parties are to be allowed to treat the law as naught, and construe it into a dead letter, and substitute a different arrangement in its stead. Establish the practice pursued in the court below and it will happen that at the end of a wearisome trial, when the court and bar are anxious to terminate their labors, propositions will be made by the respective counsel to forego the work of drafting written instructions and let the court deliver an oral charge. If the proposition comes from the prosecuting officer the defendant dare not withhold his consent without creating prejudice before an impatient and exhausted jury — the very thing which of all others he is most anxious to avoid. The jury are liable to misapprehend the language of the court; a full, perfect, and satisfactory bill of exceptions is unattainable; and thus a man's rights are invaded and frittered away through a violation of law which was made for his protection."

2. Bates v. Ball, 72 Ill. 112.

"When it appears the prisoner, by his counsel, has voluntarily and freely waived a written charge, and this led the judge to give a verbal charge, thereby assenting to what is done and inducing such action, * * * he cannot be heard to assign it for error in this court. It is a long-established principle of our laws that has ripened into a maxim, that 'that to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury.'" State v. Bungardner, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 163.

Instances of Waiver by Consent. — A statement in the record, that "said charge or giving of instructions to the jury in writing was waived by the counsel for the respective parties in open court, before the giving of oral instructions," sufficiently shows a waiver of the right to written instructions. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 16 Neb. 413.

An entry in the minutes of the court in a criminal case, that "the court charge the jury orally, * * * a written charge being expressly waived," is a "mutual consent" to an oral charge. People v. Kearney, 43 Cal. 383.

By Whom Waiver Made. — The defendant, either by himself or by his attorney, may consent to a verbal charge. State v. Bungardner, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 163.

Waiver by Withdrawing Request. — Where a party withdraws a request for written instructions after the judge has announced his readiness to grant the request, the party thereby waives all objections to an oral instruction on the requested point. State v. Hopkins, 33 La. Ann. 34; Continental Nat. Bank v. Folsom, 67 Ga. 624. But it would seem that if the judge exhibited any unwillingness to comply with the request for

b. BY PRESENTING REQUESTS FOR WRITTEN INSTRUCTIONS TOO LATE. — So the right may be waived by failure to present a request for written instructions in apt time.¹

c. BY FAILURE TO EXCEPT TO ORAL CHARGE. — The right may also be waived by not excepting to the action of the court in charging orally, where a timely request for written instructions has been made,² or where the court is required to deliver all instructions in writing whether requested to do so or not.³ There is some conflict of authority as to whether this last rule is applicable under statutes providing that oral charges shall be given only by "mutual consent" of the parties. In *Mississippi*⁴ and *Texas*⁵ the rule has been held to apply. In California and Nevada a contrary view is taken,⁶ and it has been held that the consent of a party to an oral instruction cannot be presumed from his presence and failure to make objections when the oral instruc-written instructions, or if he said or did anything tending to throw upon counsel any blame for any inconvenience to which the jury might be subjected, the withdrawal of a request for written instructions would probably not operate as a waiver of the right thereto. State v. Hopkins, 33 La. Ann. 34, criticising State v. Swayze, 30 La. Ann. 1323.

Compare Shafer v. Stinson, 76 Ind. 374, where the court disregarded a properly made request to instruct in writing, and caused its stenographer to take down its oral instructions; a failure to object to this mode of preserving the evidence of the instructions did not waive the request, nor did such mode satisfy the statute. Under such a request the instructions must be written and given as written.

If a party sits by with the knowledge that the statute requiring instructions to be in writing is not being complied with, and takes no exception to the oral charge, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain. Head v. Langworthy, 15 Iowa 235.

Rule Applicable to Instructions Given After Retirement of Jury. — Upon the return of the jury to the court-room the trial judge, not noticing the temporary absence of the reporter, gave additional instructions and explanations orally; the appellant's counsel noticed the absence of the reporter, but did not call the attention of the court to it because he intended to take advantage of the error. The error was held to have been waived by the appellant. Stringham v. Cook, 75 Wis. 590.

Review of Order Granting New Trial. — If the judge erroneously gives an oral instruction, but grants a new trial for that reason on the motion of the party aggrieved, the Supreme Court will not interfere with its discretion in this regard. Head v. Langworthy, 15 Iowa 235.

tion is given.¹ So the courts of Nebraska and Arizona take directly opposite views as to the applicability of this rule under statutes which are very similar.²

Who May Take Advantage of Error. — A party who has made no request that the instructions be given in writing cannot take advantage of an erroneous refusal of the court to charge in writing, as requested by his adversary.³

4. Loss of Written Instructions. — The loss of written instructions before the decision of a motion for new trial affords no ground for a new trial. The appellate court will not presume that any error was committed in giving or refusing them, but on the contrary will presume that the court decided correctly.⁴

5. Taking Instructions to Jury-room. — See article JURIES.

1. People v. Chares, 26 Cal. 78; People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29; People v. Prospero, 44 Cal. 186.

Where the record on appeal discloses that oral instructions were given, but fails to show the consent of the defendant thereto, judgment will be reversed. People v. Trim, 37 Cal. 274.

On Return of Jury for Further Instructions. — In criminal cases it is reversible error for the court to charge orally without the defendant's consent, whether in the first instance or after the jury has returned into court for further instructions. People v. Woppner, 14 Cal. 437.

2. Nebraska. — Under Consol. Stat. of Neb., 1893, § 1071, providing that in all cases, both civil and criminal, judges shall reduce their instructions or charge to writing unless written instructions are waived by counsel in open court, and it is so entered in the record of the case, it has been held that error in giving oral instructions is waived unless excepted to at the time. Horbach v. Miller, 4 Neb. 43; Republican Valley v. Arnold, 13 Neb. 485.

In reaching this conclusion the court argued as follows: "It is, however, contended that by statutory provision it shall be error and sufficient cause for the reversal of the judgment if any charge or instruction, or any portion thereof, be given to the jury by the court without first having reduced the same to writing. This is true, and it is equally true that the admission of illegal or incompetent evidence on the trial of a cause, or the refusal to give an instruction, or the giving of an instruction to the jury, may be sufficient cause for the reversal of a judgment, yet under the rule as settled, if the point is not made in the motion for a new trial it will be considered as waived.

Why should a small portion of a charge, orally given to the jury, be made an exception to this rule? We have heard no good reason why it should be, and we think it would be unjust to the court below to make such an exception to the rule." Horbach v. Miller, 4 Neb. 43.

Arizona. — Compiled Laws of Arizona, § 368, provides that the charge shall be in writing, signed by the judge, and filed with the papers in the cause, unless the defendant consents in open court that the charges be given orally; and conviction for felony will be set aside unless the record shows that the charges were in writing and read to the jury, or that the defendant consented in open court that the charge should be given orally. Territory v. Gertrude, 1 Arizona 74; Territory v. Kennedy, 1 Arizona 505; Territory v. Duffield, 1 Arizona 58.

3. Jaqua v. Cordesman, etc., Co., 106 Ind. 141.

4. Addems v. Suver, 89 Ill. 482, in which it was said: "We are unable to comprehend how that should render a new trial necessary. We presume no one could conceive the idea that the loss of the summons, the declaration, the pleas, a deposition, or the minutes of evidence taken by either party on the trial, could form ground for a new trial. It would be ground for granting leave to restore any of them except the minutes of evidence. If appellant desired to embody the instructions in a record for this court he should have taken the necessary steps to have them restored. It was not the duty of the court to do so, but of counsel on either side to proceed for the purpose."

6. Presumptions on Appeal or Error. — Unless the record shows to the contrary it will be presumed on appeal that instructions were in writing,¹ or that a written charge was waived,² as the presumption of law is in favor of the regularity of the action of the trial court.³ So if the record does not show to the contrary, it will be presumed that oral remarks to the jury were not instructions within the rule requiring instructions to be in writing.⁴

VIII. MARKING "GIVEN" OR "REFUSED," NUMBERING AND SIGNING INSTRUCTIONS — 1. Marking Instructions "Given" or "Refused."

— In the absence of a statute requiring it, it is apprehended that it is not necessary to mark instructions "given" or "refused,"⁵ but in a number of jurisdictions there are statutory provisions requiring that each requested instruction be marked "given" or "refused." In construing these statutes it has been held sufficient, where several instructions written on separate sheets are attached, to write "given" or "refused" at the beginning of the first sheet,⁶ or to write "the foregoing are all refused" at the bottom of the last sheet.⁷

Necessity for Exceptions. — The failure of the court to mark "given"

Presumption that Stenographer Took Down Charge. — Unless the record shows affirmatively to the contrary it will be presumed on appeal that the charge delivered by the court was taken down in writing by the stenographer. People v. Ferris, 56 Cal. 442; People v. Bumberger, 45 Cal. 650; State v. Preston, (Idaho 1894) 38 Pac. 694.

Reading from Decisions — Presumption. — Where the record recites that an instruction was given "in which the court read to the jury an extract from the opinion of" the court in a certain case, from a certain law periodical, setting out the extract, it will be presumed that such extract was transcribed in the written instructions given. Citizens' F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Short, 62 Ind. 316.

Presumption as to Refusal of Instructions. — Where the record shows the indorsement of the court in writing "refused" on written instructions requested, together with the date and name of the judge, it will be held, nothing to the contrary appearing, that the court conformed to the law in declaring "in writing to the jury his ruling thereon," and presenting and pronouncing the same to the jury as given or refused. Jones v. State, 18 Fla. 889.

Presumption as to Correctness of Verbal Charge. — Where a verbal charge was given it will be presumed to be correct; otherwise if given in writing. Newton v. State, 3 Tex. App. 245.

5. See People v. Samsels, 66 Cal. 99, in which it was held that the charge of the court to the jury, given of its own motion, need not be marked by the judge.

Stating Ground of Refusal Unnecessary. — Where an instruction refused because already given is merely marked "refused," without stating the reason therefor, there is no available error. People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1. See also People v. Ramirez, 56 Cal. 533.

Presumptions on Appeal. — It is not necessary that the record shall affirmatively show that charges given on request, or refused, were indorsed as required by the statute; in the absence of a recital to the contrary, and exception duly reserved on account of it, the court will presume that the charges were properly so indorsed. Allen v. State, 74 Ala. 557.

7. Territory v. Baker, 4 N. Mex. 117. Instructions Given by the Court on Its Own Motion. — An instruction or series of instructions headed "Instructions or "refused" on the instructions, as required by statute, is a right which the reviewing court will regard as waived unless the failure to do so is excepted to at the time the charge is given,¹ and it makes no difference whether the statute is regarded as directory or mandatory.² So it has been held that a failure to indorse "given" on the instructions requested and given to the jury is not error of which advantage can be taken on motion in arrest of judgment.³ In some jurisdictions the objection must be renewed on a motion for new trial.⁴

Where Instructions Are Shown to Have Been Given. — A failure to comply with a statute requiring instructions to be marked "given" or "refused" will not operate to reverse if the instructions are shown by the record to have been given,⁵ nor is a failure to mark "refused" on instructions which the record shows the court declined giving ground for reversal.⁶ Unless an instruction is marked "given" or "refused" it cannot be assigned that there was error, in giving or refusing such instruction.⁷ Nor can error be assigned to a failure to mark "given" on an instruction where it cannot be given by the court on its own motion," and so placed in the record as to be clearly separate and distinguishable from the instructions presented by the parties, is a sufficient compliance with the terms of the statute. Gillen v. Riley, 27 Neb. 158.

Hansen*, 32 Neb. 449; Fry v. Tilton, 11 Neb. 456; Tyree v. Parham, 66 Ala. 424; Barnewall v. Murrell, 108 Ala. 366; Allen v. State, 74 Ala. 557; Fish v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 81 Iowa 280; Knight v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 81 Iowa 310.

2. In Alabama the statute is regarded as mandatory. See Tyree v. Parham, 66 Ala. 424. In other states it is considered directory merely. See cases cited in the preceding note.

3. Holley v. State, 75 Ala. 20.

4. Tagg v. Miller, 10 Neb. 442.

5. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hawkins, 39 Ill. App. 406; Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 550; Tobin v. People, 101 Ill. 123; Frame v. Murphy, 56 Ill. App. 555; McKenzie v. Remington, 79 Ill. 388; Harrigan v. Turner, 65 Ill. App. 470.

Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 550, where the court, in arriving at this conclusion, said: "As to those which the court neglected to mark as given or refused, as the statute requires, we have to say, this statute is directory to the court, and should be obeyed; but if, in the hurry of business, it should not be, a party who is not in fault should not be prejudiced by it if the record shows what was done with the instructions. If the law is correctly laid down in them, we do not think a court would be justified in reversing a judgment because they were not marked 'given.'" So in Harrigan v. Turner, 65 Ill. App. 470, it is said that "the failure to mark instructions 'given' or 'refused' is not ground for reversal when it can be ascertained which were given and which refused."

6. McDonald v. Fairbanks, 161 Ill. 124; Washington v. State, 106 Ala. 58.

7. Cadwallader v. Blair, 18 Iowa 420; Jones v. Buzzard, 2 Ark. 415; Little v. State, 58 Ala. 265; Thompson v. Chumney, 8 Tex. 394.

Recital in Transcript. — In Jones v. Buzzard, 2 Ark. 415, it is said: "It is true that the clerk has copied into the transcript certain instructions, and has marked them 'filed,' and has written upon the margin opposite to each instruction the word 'given' or 'refused.' These entries are mere clerical memoranda, made without any order or authority of the court, and consequently they cannot be regarded as forming any part of the record in the case." And in Cadwallader v. Blair, 18 Iowa 420, it is said that a recital in the clerk's transcript that an instruction was "given" is not sufficient.

2. Numbering Instructions. — In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that instructions to the jury shall be numbered, but a failure to comply with this requirement is not a ground for reversal unless excepted to at the time the instructions were given. Unless the aggrieved party objects in apt time he cannot be heard afterwards to complain of the omission.² The objection cannot be made for the first time on a motion for new trial.³ So a failure of the court to number its instructions in compliance with a statute requiring it⁴ will not be ground for reversal where no prejudice resulted therefrom.⁵ Where instructions given at a trial are not numbered or so designated that they can be distinguished, a general exception to the giving of them will not be noticed on appeal.⁶

3. Signing Instructions — a. SIGNATURE OF PARTIES OR COUNSEL. — Whether or not instructions shall be signed by parties or counsel, is largely a matter of statutory regulation. If there is no statutory provision on the subject, the signature of parties or counsel, it is apprehended, will be unnecessary, but when a statute requires such signature, the court will be justified in refusing requests for instructions if the statute is not complied with.⁷

Object of Requirement. — The object in requiring prayers to be numbered and signed is not for the information and guidance of the jury, but for the convenience of the court and the protection of the parties litigant in the matter of preserving their objections and exceptions. Moffatt v. Tenney, 17 Colo. 189.

Modifications of Instructions — How Numbered. — Where it is found necessary to modify an instruction it is proper to give the modification another number. Columbia, etc., R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 3 Wash. Ter. 353.

Error in Refusing Request Waived by Counsel's Failure to Number Request. — Where counsel are required by statute to number requests for instructions, it has been held that error cannot be assigned to a refusal of requested instructions unless they have been distinctly numbered. *Coryell v. The court may, however, give an unsigned instruction if it sees fit to do so.¹

b. SIGNATURE OF COURT. — In the absence of a statute requiring the charge to be signed by the court, no objection can be taken to the charge for want of its signature.² In some jurisdictions the judge is required by statute to sign the charge, and in Alabama and Florida the statute is considered mandatory, and it is held that a noncompliance with the requirement is a good ground for reversal if proper exceptions are saved,³ but that a failure to save exceptions constitutes a waiver of the error.⁴ In Iowa the statute is considered merely directory, and it is held that a noncompliance therewith is no ground for reversal unless the defendant was prejudiced thereby.⁵ And the same view is taken in Texas with regard to the signing of instructions in civil cases,⁶ but in criminal cases of the grade of felony the latter court holds that the statute is mandatory.⁷

Preserving Instructions for Review on Appeal. — Instructions asked for by a party, whether given or refused, must be signed either by the party or his attorney, otherwise they will not be noticed or considered on appeal although they may have been copied into the record. Sutherland v. Hankins, 56 Ind. 353.

What Is a Sufficient Compliance. — The following language, written at the foot of an instruction asked; "Refused as it charges on the evidence. E. K. Foster, Judge of the Seventh Judicial Circuit. To which ruling of the court the defendant then and there excepted. E. K. Foster, Judge Seventh Judicial Circuit. [L. S.]:" is a sufficient signing and sealing under Acts of 1877, c. 2096, § 3. Carter v. State, 22 Fla. 553.

The official signature of the judge to the charge of the court is a full compliance with the statute requiring such charge to be certified by the judge. Roberts v. State, 5 Tex. App. 141; Hubbard v. State, 2 Tex. App. 506; Henderson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 140.

Signing Nunc Pro Tunc. — Where a charge not signed by the judge is not signed by the clerk, and is thereby made a record in the case, and its identity placed beyond doubt, the judge may properly sign it nunc pro tunc when his attention is called to the omission by motion for new trial, but it is unnecessary so to sign it. Parker v. Chancellor, 78 Tex. 528.

The Rule in Kansas. — In Kansas it is provided by statute that "the judge must charge the jury in writing, and the charge shall be filed among the papers of the cause." Gen. Stat., p. 858, § 236. Under this statute it has been held that in a prosecution for murder, where the court did not sign the instructions, but the same were handed to the clerk, and became a part of the files of the court, and where no one requested that the instructions should be signed, or that the paper containing them should be given to the jury, no material error was committed, the court saying that the statute does not in terms, if it does at all, require that the judge should sign instructions given in criminal cases. State v. Davis, 48 Kan. 1.

Assignments of Error. — Unless instructions are signed by the judge and filed as a part of the record, or embodied in a bill of exceptions, the court cannot consider assignments of error to such instructions.¹

IX. METHOD OF PRESENTING INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY — 1. In General. — It has been held sufficient to read a requested instruction to the jury and tell them that the court gives it in charge,² or that it is the law,³ or to express approval of it without using the ordinary phrase, "I so charge you."⁴ So if counsel read a requested charge distinctly, in the presence of the jury, it has been held sufficient for the court without repeating it to tell the jury that such is the law.⁵

2. Reading Decisions, Text-books, or Statutes — Opinions and Decisions. — If there be no statute or rule of court prohibiting it, the court may read legal decisions or extracts therefrom containing propositions of law applicable to the case at bar, as a part or the whole of the charge,⁶ or may read decisions in support of a

Robertson*, 44 Ga. 50, where it was held that when counsel for either party reads written requests to charge in the presence and hearing of the jury, the court should either give or refuse to give such charges. If a request is a legal and pertinent charge which ought to be given, then the court should give it in the language of the request, by reading the same to the jury. To hold up the paper containing the requests to charge, after the same has been read and handed to the court, and say, "Gentlemen, I give you all these in charge as requested," is not a proper mode of instructing the jury.

It is sufficient if the law is given in charge so plainly that the jury can have no difficulty in understanding it, whether it is repeated in their hearing by the judge himself or read by another and sanctioned and charged by him as read. Dillon v. McRae, 40 Ga. 107.

Rule Under the Nebraska Statute. — The statutes of Nebraska (Comp. Stat. Neb., c. 19, § 54) require the court to read over all the instructions which it intends to give, and none others, to the jury. Under this statute it has been held reversible error for the court to refuse or fail to read to the jury instructions which it announces as given and files as such. McDuffie v. Bently, 27 Neb. 380. To the same effect is Veneman v. McCurtain, 33 Neb. 643, where it was held reversible error to hand instructions to the jury without reading them.

proposition of law which he has announced.¹ It is error, however, to read a part of a decision which, standing alone, announces a different proposition from that contained in the entire opinion.² There should be nothing in the remainder of the opinion qualifying the part read,³ and it is, of course, necessary that the decision read be applicable to the facts of the case.⁴ So if a cause has been reversed on questions of evidence, it has been held error to read to the jury, on the next trial, the opinion of the Supreme Court and to submit the case thereon.⁵

Text-book. — It has also been held that the court may properly read an extract from a text-book as a part of the charge.⁶

Statutes. — The court may also read a statute as a part of the charge, provided it is relevant and applicable.⁷

Pennsylvania. — Hood v. Hood, 25 Pa. St. 417.

It is not error for the court to read to the jury an opinion of the Supreme Court without a special statement of the facts on which the opinion was rendered, when he charges the law as applicable to the facts before him. Riggins v. Brown, 12 Ga. 271.

Reading Decisions on Former Trial. — In charging the jury it is not error to read to them the language used by the Supreme Court in disposing of the same case on a former trial, if the language read merely lays down a rule of law which is as applicable to one case as to the other. Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107; to the same effect see Kirby v. Wilson, 98 Ill. 240. It would probably be erroneous, though, if anything read showed the result of the previous trial. Panama R. Co. v. Johnson, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 629, 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 382.

Explaining Language of Opinion. — When the trial court in charging adopts the language of the Supreme Court, it is perfectly proper to add such consistent explanations as may be necessary to adapt it to the facts of the case in hand. Freeman v. Weeks, 48 Mich. 255.

Practice Not to Be Commended in Criminal Cases. — It is said that the practice of reading opinions in other cases to the jury as a part of the charge of the court in a criminal case is a dangerous one, and not to be commended. People v. McNabb, 79 Cal. 419.

Williams*, 36 Fla. 136, where it was held error for the trial judge to read in the hearing of a jury a reported case and state that the facts of the case read from were similar to the one then before the court, and that he adopted the decision in the case read as the law on the subject. In no more effective way could a judge intimate his opinion as to the effect of the evidence before the jury than by saying that it was similar to that of an adjudged case in which the testimony was commented on as being sufficient to sustain a finding thereon.

6. Bronnenburg v. Charman, 80 Ind. 475; People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 606.

In Bronnenburg v. Charman, 80 Ind. 475, it was held that reading to the jury an extract from "Story on Bailments" was not an improper method of stating the law of mandate.

Former Charge. — A judge's written charge may embrace extracts from a former charge of another judge, shown by a transcript made at the time such charge was given. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Sauer, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 466.

Schultz*, 74 Mich. 75. Compare Lane v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 35 Mo. App. 567.

Where Part of Statute Is Irrelevant. — Where the court, in charging, reads the whole of a section, a part only of which is relevant, the judgment will not be disturbed if it is not apparent that some substantial right of the accused was affected. People v. Burns, 63 Cal. 614; Needham v. People, 98 Ill. 275.

3. Remarks Tending to Weaken or Strengthen Effect of Instructions. — In presenting requested instructions to the jury the court should refrain from making remarks the tendency of which will be to weaken their force and effect,¹ but, of course, this will not be ground for reversal unless it operates to the prejudice of the party complaining.² On the other hand, nothing should be said which will lead the jury to attach more importance to them than to other instructions given.³ If instructions are taken to the jury-room it is not a proper practice to underscore any of them,⁴ nor should the court make marginal citations thereon to decisions or to other legal authorities.⁵ So in charging the jury, the trial

1. Horton v. Williams, 21 Minn. 187; Watson v. Union Iron, etc., Co., 15 Ill. App. 509; Stevenson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 94 Iowa 719; Wilson v. White, 71 Ga. 506; Head v. Bridges, 67 Ga. 227.

It is erroneous to give a requested instruction, and say, "Yes, if the defendant's papers are all right, and the plaintiff all wrong, then this is so, and I so charge the jury." Horton v. Williams, 21 Minn. 187. So where eleven instructions were given for the defendant, most of them stating accurately and tersely the rules of law applicable to the case upon the defendant's theory as to the facts, and the court, after reading these instructions, read one prepared by himself in which he commenced by saying that the plaintiff had asked no instructions, and that such of those asked by the defendant as he had thought to be correct and had read to the jury by no means covered the case which they had to decide, and that he thought he ought not to let the case go in this loose way, it was held that this introductory clause was open to grave criticism. Watson v. Union Iron, etc., Co., 15 Ill. App. 509. On the other hand, it has been held that when the judge correctly states the law to the jury the defendant cannot complain that he also said that he gave the instruction with some hesitation as to its correctness. Evans v. Foss, 49 N. H. 490. [This ruling cannot be defended on principle.]

Telling Jury at Whose Instance Instruction Given. — It is the better practice not to tell the jury at whose instance the instruction is given, Stevenson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 94 Iowa 719; or at whose instance the charge was reduced to writing, Head v. Bridges, 67 Ga. 227; Wilson v. White, 71 Ga. 506; but to do so is not ground for reversal.

3. Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 40; Martin v. State, 104 Ala. 71.

In Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 40, it was held proper to refuse an instruction that a requested instruction was entitled to as much importance as any other instruction; and in Martin v. State, 104 Ala. 71, it was held proper to refuse a charge that "it is their [the jury's] duty to carefully read and consider these written charges, and * * * apply the law as set forth in the written charges as well as that in the oral charge," on the ground that it would give undue influence to the written charge. On the other hand, in Dixon v. State, 46 Neb. 298, it was held that the court might properly instruct that a requested instruction is entitled to as much weight as an instruction given by the court of its own motion.

Harmless Error. — A marginal citation of authorities on an instruction will not be ground for reversal unless it is shown that the complaining party was prejudiced thereby. Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Neb. 578.

Prejudice will not be presumed from the mere citation, on an instruction, of a volume and page of the reports. Herzog v. Campbell, 47 Neb. 370. And it is not a ground for new trial unless it appears that the jury had the books in the room, or knew what they decided. Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Neb. 578.

judge may as well dispense with adverse comments to the jury on the justice of the law as expounded by him.¹

4. Manner and Emphasis in Delivering Instructions. — While it is undoubtedly true that the trial judge may, by the manner in which he delivers his charge, and the emphasis he places on certain portions of it, seriously prejudice the rights of one of the parties, it is very generally held that this is an error which cannot be remedied.² The reviewing court can concern itself with the manner of the trial judge in instructing the jury, only so far as it can measure it by the language employed.³ The reason for this is obvious. There is no method by which the manner and emphasis of a trial judge in instructing can be reflected on appeal, or its influence estimated.⁴

5. Necessity of Delivering Instructions in Open Court — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — It is a fundamental principle, to which there are some few exceptions, that when the cause has been submitted to the jury by the charge of the court, all further instructions of whatever nature should be delivered in open court.⁵

Compare Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 357, in which it was said: "It is very unusual to have exception taken on writ of error to the manner and deportment of the trial judge in the conduct of the trial, and under ordinary circumstances a court of review would not scrutinize very closely his methods when no error in his rulings was alleged. Still, it is possible for a judge to deprive a party of a fair trial, even without intending to do so, by the manner in which he conducts the case, and by a plain exhibition to the jury of his own opinions in respect to the parties, or to their case."

Going in Person to Jury-room.—It is not permissible for the trial judge to go into the jury-room to give further instructions.¹ And it has been held in a recent criminal case that where the judge, at the request of the jury, goes to the jury-room and stands in the doorway, with the door partially open, he is guilty of such misconduct as will necessitate a reversal, and that the prevailing party cannot be permitted to show that the judge said nothing to the jury.²

The Rule in New Hampshire and South Carolina.—In New Hampshire the rule seems to be settled otherwise. It is there held that the judge may, during a recess of court, at the request of the jury, send them written instructions. Shapley v. White, 6 N. H. 172; School Dist. No. 1 v. Bragdon, 23 N. H. 517; Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 28 N. H. 438. And during the session of court the judge may send written instructions to the jury on their request, after their return. Allen v. Aldrich, 29 N. H. 63.

The rule that no communication whatever ought to take place between the judge and the jury after the cause has been committed to them, unless in open court, is not recognized in New Hampshire. School Dist. No. 1 v. Bragdon, 23 N. H. 517.

So, in South Carolina it is no ground for new trial that the judge answered an inquiry of the foreman, which he came in to make after the jury had retired for consultation, without communicating its purport to the parties or their counsel. Goldsmith v. Solomons, 2 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 296. This last decision seems to be based upon the preposterous theory that the intercourse between the jury and the bench is so confidential that often communications from the jury ought not to be disclosed to the bar.

2. State v. Wroth, 15 Wash. 621. The reasoning of the court was as follows: "In the discharge of his official duty, the place for the judge is on the bench. As to him the law has closed the portals of the jury-room, and he may not enter. The appellant was not obliged to follow the judge to the jury-room in order to protect his legal rights, or to see that the jury was not influenced by the presence of the judge; and the state cannot be permitted to show what occurred between the judge and the jury at a place where the judge had no right to be, and in regard to which no official record could be made. But learned counsel for the state insist that the judge said nothing to the jury, and hence his conduct could not have been prejudicial to the defendant. But the law does not subject parties litigant to the disadvantage of being required to accept the statement of even the judge as to what occurs between himself and the jury at a place where the judge has no right to be, and where litigants cannot be required to attend. 'It is the lawful right of a party to have his cause tried in open court, with opportunity to be present and heard in respect to everything transacted. It is his right to be present and attended by counsel whenever it is found necessary or desirable for the court to communicate with the jury, and he is not required to depend upon the memory or sense of fairness of the judge as to what occurs between the judge and jury at any time or place when he has no lawful right to be present."

Illustrations. — Where, after the jury had been sent out, the officer in charge informed the justice that they desired to know whether a certain judgment introduced in evidence should be considered by them, to which inquiry the justice answered through the officer that he had been ordered to discharge the judgment, it was held error to send such a message. Snyder v. Wilson, 65 Mich. 336.

In a case where the issue was whether there was a sale of a horse or not, one of the jury wrote a note, after they had retired, to this effect: "In this case would the mode of payment affect the validity of the sale?" The court replied, "It would not," without the knowledge or consent of the parties. The judgment was reversed, a statute providing that when the jury wish further instructions upon a point of law, "the information required shall be given in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or their counsel." Goode v. Campbell, 14 Bush (Ky.) 75.

Withdrawing Instructions Equivalent to Giving Further Instructions. — Where the instructions are in writing and are taken into the jury-room, the court cannot send the bailiff out to withdraw such as may be erroneous; such an act is tantamount to sending another instruction to the jury that previous instructions were erroneous, without giving in their place such as might be correct. Hall v. State, 8 Ind. 444.

What Are Not Further Instructions to the Jury. — Where the jury send an officer into court with questions, the court may indorse on a paper containing the questions that he has no further charge to make than is already charged, and return the paper so indorsed to the jury. Horrman v. Neuman, 15 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. City Ct.) 449; Bunn v. Croul, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 239.

So also in a larceny case, where the jury, after retiring, ask for further instructions, and the court tells them that he cannot give them further instructions without sending for counsel, but allows a portion of the charge to be re-read, no error is committed. People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709.

So the judge may, without the consent of the parties, without calling the jury into court, send them word to seal their verdict. Green v. Bliss, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 428.

Sending Copy of Statutes into Jury-room. — If the judge, in the trial of a civil cause, at the request of the jury and without the knowledge of the parties, allows them to have a copy of the general statutes in the jury-room while deliberating on their verdict, such verdict should be set aside. Merrill v. Nary, 10 Allen (Mass.) 416; State v. Smith, 6 R. I. 33; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 316.

In Burrows v. Unwin, 3 C. & P. 310, 14 E. C. L. 322, the jury, after retiring, sent a message to the court asking that Selwyn's Nisi Prius might be sent to them. In this case the court refused the request, even though counsel for both parties consented.

The Judge Has No More Right to Communicate with the Jury after its retirement than any other person.¹ The jury, after it retires, must remain untrammelled and uninfluenced by any advice which the judge may honestly give in regard to their verdict without the consent of the parties.²

b. WAIVER OF REQUIREMENT — (1) By Express Agreement. — Of course the requirement that all instructions be given in open court may be waived,³ and the judge may go into the jury-room to give further instructions by consent.⁴ There is some conflict of opinion as to what will constitute a waiver. According to some decisions a waiver must be express,⁵ and should affirmatively appear,⁶ and the mere fact that counsel or parties knew that the judge was going into the jury-room and did not object or except does not constitute a waiver.⁷

(2) By Failure to Make Timely Objections. — According to other decisions the right to instructions in open court may be waived by not making timely objections.⁸

c. NECESSITY OF SHOWING PREJUDICE IN ORDER TO REVERSE. — On this question also the decisions are conflicting. According to some decisions, where instructions are not delivered in open court it is not incumbent upon the appellant to show error in order to entitle him to a reversal,⁹ and it has been held that it makes no difference what the motive of the judge may be,

"It seems to be well settled in this state, that no communication whatever ought to take place between the judge or justice and the jury after the case has been submitted, unless it is in open court, and where practicable in the presence of the counsel; that where there has been an infraction of this rule the judgment should be reversed, and that the court will not stop to inquire whether the information given by the judge or justice was material, or had any influence upon the verdict of the jury." Kehrley v. Shafer, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 196.

Even though the judge said nothing, "but remained in the room listening to the discussion of the jury, and they simply acted under the surveillance of the justice, can it be said that his presence did not affect the decision of the jury? If the justice could stay there with propriety, so could all the other people who attended the trial. The affidavits of jurors cannot be read to impeach their verdict after it has been rendered, so that it may be impossible to show in any given case whether or not an intruder in the jury-room did converse with the jury, or what he said. It is a great deal safer to condemn such an intrusion by the magistrate as tending to affect the ultimate result, and or how harmless the communication.¹ The principle upon which this rule rests is that such communications are so dangerous and impolitic that they will be conclusively presumed to have influenced the jury improperly. The source of danger is the secret nature of the communication.² According to other decisions, if the error could not have worked to the prejudice of the parties it will not be ground to set aside the verdict.³

6. Necessity of Presence of Counsel—a. VIEW THAT COUNSEL MUST BE PRESENT OR ATTEMPT MADE TO NOTIFY THEM.—The rule in the greater number of jurisdictions is that after the retirement of the jury, all further instructions or communications should be made in the presence of counsel,⁴ or if counsel is absent create a good ground for review." Gibbons v. Van Alstyne, (Supreme Ct.) 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 463.

Subsequent Assent by Counsel.—Where the judge, after the jury have retired, goes into their room and instructs them as to matter of law in the absence of parties to the cause or counsel, the verdict will be set aside, and that too although the certificate of the judge states that after the jury were dismissed he submitted the instruction to the counsel of both parties, and that it was correct. Read v. Cambridge, 124 Mass. 567.

3. Galloway v. Corbitt, 52 Mich. 461; Mosely v. Washburn, 165 Mass. 417. See also Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

Instances.—After the jury retired they sent to the judge, by the officer having them in charge, a note, signed by the foreman, as follows: "Shall the jury compute interest from" a day named? The judge thereupon directed the officer to bring the execution from the jury-room, which he did. The judge then pointed out to the officer on the execution the date which had been pointed out to the jury, and directed him to return the execution to the foreman and to point out to him the date which had been thus indicated. The officer did as he had been directed, and the jury found for the plaintiff with interest computed according to their instructions. The defendant thereupon moved for a new trial. It was held that while the practice adopted by the judge was not to be commended, the irregularity was not such as to require the verdict to be set aside, especially as the instructions had no influence upon the decision of the jury. Moseley v. Washburn, 165 Mass. 417.

In Galloway v. Corbitt, 52 Mich. 461, the court, without the consent of counsel, entered the jury-room and advised the jury during their deliberations upon the law and evidence in the case. The court said: "It was highly improper for the justice to enter the jury-room, whether requested to do so by the jury or not, alone, without consent of the parties or attorneys, after the jury had retired to deliberate. But whether it was such an error as calls for a reversal of the judgment upon certiorari, is quite another question. We have here, from the justice's return, a statement of all that occurred, and in passing upon this question we must take his return as true. We cannot say that it was an error that prejudiced the rights of the defendant."

that an attempt be made to notify him that further instructions will be given. If this is done, the court may then proceed to give the further instructions, even though counsel be not present.¹

The Reason for the Rule that courts should not instruct juries in the absence of counsel, if this can be avoided, is that the counsel are deprived of the opportunity to except to such charges,² and in

What Is Sufficient Notice. — It has been held that it would be sufficient notice to call counsel at the court-house door, or any other place where witnesses and other persons are usually called. McNeil v. State, 47 Ala. 498; Dobson v. State, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 277; Preston v. Bowers, 13 Ohio St. 1.

So it has been held that where the jury retired and the court, being about to take a recess for dinner, announces in open court, and in the hearing of the accused, who is at large on bail, and his counsel, that in case the jury shall agree on a verdict during the recess the court-house bell will be rung, and that the court will, on that signal, convene and receive the verdict, and on the occurrence of such contingency, and the giving such signal, the court does convene, makes inquiry for counsel and accused, and waits for them over twenty minutes, it is not error to receive the verdict in the presence of the accused and in the absence of his counsel. Crusen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 259.

Whether Error Will Always Operate to Reverse. — While it is improper for the court to instruct the jury in the absence of a party's counsel, thereby depriving him of the opportunity to except or to ask for qualification of the instruction, yet the court holds that where it can clearly be seen that no injury has been done to the party by the instruction given, in a case of such slight departure, no reversal can be had. Wade v. Ordway, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 229; Collins v. State, 33 Ala. 435. Contra, Feibelman v. Manchester F. Assur. Co., 108 Ala. 180, where it was held that instructions given in the absence of counsel will be conclusively presumed prejudicial, though there is nothing to submit to the jury but the credibility of undisputed evidence.

New Hampshire — How Exceptions Taken. — In New Hampshire, when instructions are given in the absence of counsel, they are to be returned with the verdict, and are open to exception to the same extent as if given in open court. School Dist. No. 1 v. Bragdon, 23 N. H. 507; Allen v. Aldrich, 29 N. H. 63; Leighton v. Sargent, 31 N. H. 120; Shapley v. White, 6 N. H. 172. [This is necessarily a very ineffective method of excepting to erroneous instructions; for while it saves errors in giving the instructions for review in the jurisdictions where it is permissible to ask additional charges where the court gives further instructions, after the retirement of the jury, counsel also loses the opportunity to ask additional charges in explanation or modification, or to except to their refusal.¹

b. VIEW THAT PRESENCE OF COUNSEL IS UNNECESSARY. — In some jurisdictions the trial judge may further instruct the jury in open court though counsel and parties are not present, and is under no obligation to send for them or make any attempt to secure their presence.² It is conceded by some of these decisions that it is the better practice for the court to make an attempt to procure the attendance of absent parties and counsel, but they recognize no obligation on the part of the court to do so,³ taking the view that the giving of notice is merely a matter of grace or favor, and not a legal obligation.⁴

The Principle on Which This Practice Is Based is that such a rule is necessary for the proper dispatch of business,⁵ that the trial is not concluded until after a verdict has been rendered or the jury discharged from the further consideration of the cause,⁶ and that it is the duty of parties and counsel to be present in court when any proceedings are taken in their causes.⁷

7. Chapman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 26 Wis. 306; Hudson v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 44 Minn. 52.

In support of this doctrine a strong argument is given in Chapman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 26 Wis. 306. The reasoning of the court is as follows: "Was it the duty of the court to have dispatched a messenger for them [parties and counsel], and to have suspended proceedings until their arrival? It is urged that this was the duty, and that it was irregular and incompetent for the court to proceed without doing so. In support of this view, the generally prevailing custom in our courts, to send for attorneys and counsel under such circumstances, is cited. We know this custom or practice, and are far from wishing to discourage it. We think it a beneficial custom, and one that should be observed in all cases where the business or convenience of the court will allow it. We are sorry it was not observed in this case, though the lateness of the hour, and the fact that it was well known to the defendants and their counsel that the court was to convene at that time, may have been regarded as a good excuse. It is

7. Necessity of Presence of Accused.—It is a rule of universal application, that the accused is entitled to be present when the court gives any further instructions to the jury.¹ If he is not, this is in itself ground of reversal. The reviewing court will not inquire whether the additional instructions given were correct or not. It will be presumed that the accused was injured thereby.²

Waiver of Right.—It makes no difference that counsel was present and failed to make objections. The right of the accused to be present cannot be thus waived,³ although it seems that this right may be waived by the accused himself.⁴

the constant custom of this court, whenever it is known that counsel are within reach. But notwithstanding this custom, and our approval of it, and desire to encourage it, we are by no means prepared to affirm as matter of law that it is the duty of the court at any time to send for absent counsel or suitors, or to await their arrival, before proceeding in causes in which they are interested. On the contrary, we think the duty, the strict obligation of law, is the very opposite. It is the duty of counsel and suitors to be present in court when their causes are moved or any proceedings taken in them; and if they are not it is at their own risk, and not at the risk of the other party, if the court sees fit not to notify them. The rights of the other party will not be affected, nor the proceedings set aside, on account of such mere omission. The giving of the notice is a matter of grace or favor on the part of the court, and not of legal obligation or duty. The court may proceed without it, subject to the power of opening the proceedings where sufficient cause of absence is shown, and it appears that injustice has been done. The idea that the court cannot proceed without causing the notice to be given, or that it is error to do so, and that it must await the motion and presence of counsel or their clients, would be intolerable; for then no business could be done and no proceedings taken except by the favor of counsel or of litigants."

Enforced Absence of Accused.—The rule is especially applicable when the accused is absent because in confinement. Jones v. State, 26 Ohio St. 208; Bonner v. State, 67 Ga. 510.

Restating Evidence.—It is reversible error for the court, on the trial of a criminal cause, after the jury have retired to their room, to call them back into the court-room, and read over to them the evidence taken down by the court, without the consent of the prisoner's counsel, and in the absence of the prisoner himself. *Wade v. If the judge, after adjournment of court, sends from his lodging a message to the jury of a character that will probably operate to the prejudice of the accused, the fact that the counsel of the accused consented to it in the latter's absence would not, in a capital case, cure the error. Yet if by no possibility could it work injury to the accused, it ought not to vitiate the verdict. Rafferty v. People, 72 Ill. 37.

X. INSTRUCTIONS AFTER RETIREMENT OF JURY — 1. On Court's Own Motion. — It is competent for the trial court of its own motion to give the jury further instructions after they have retired, if essential to the furtherance of justice.¹ In this regard it is vested with large discretion, and its action in so doing is not reviewable unless it appears that some legal right of the party has been invaded, under his objection, and that such invasion may have resulted in injury.² The court may recall the jury purposely, to give further instructions,³ or may give them of its own motion

1. See cases cited in subsequent notes of this section.

The Rule in Mississippi differs from that of other states, because of special statutory provisions. In this state the court cannot, after the jury have retired, give them further instructions on its own motion or at the request of the jury. Thus where the jury bring in a verdict properly worded, and in effect acquitting the defendant, it is error for the court, without request of the parties, to charge them as to the law and send them back to find a second verdict. Duncan v. State, 49 Miss. 331. If the judge, after the jury retire, in the absence of the parties and without their consent, at the request of the jury, give them a charge on a point of law about which they say they differ, it will be error. The judge has no right to charge the jury except in the mode pointed out by statute, namely, in writing and at the request of one or both parties. Taylor v. Manley, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 305. Such irregularity, however, is no ground for reversal, though excepted to at the time, if the instruction given be correct. Randolph v. Govan, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 9.

"It is a familiar practice to recall a jury after they have been in deliberation for any length of time, for the purpose of ascertaining what difficulties they have in the consideration of the case, and of making proper efforts to assist them in the solution of those difficulties. It would be startling to have such action held to be error, and error sufficient to reverse a judgment. The time at which such a recall shall be made, if at all, must be left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and there is nothing in the record to show that the court, in the case at bar, abused this discretion or failed to wait a reasonable time for the consideration of the case by the jury under the charge as already given." Allis v. U. S., 155 U. S. 123.

It may happen that the judge himself may find on recollection that he has left some part obscure in his charge, after the jury have returned into court stating that they cannot agree.¹ In such case no request on the part of the jury is necessary,² and further instructions may be given even though the jury when asked if they desired instructions stated that they did not.³ Further instructions may be given at any stage of the jury's deliberations,⁴ or after the jury have returned into court with their verdict, but before the reception of the same.⁵

2. At Request of Jury.—The court may also give the jury further instructions on their own request,⁶ and it is not only the right but the duty of the court to reinstruct on any question of law arising from the facts proven on which they say they are in especially if prayers for further instructions are presented to him by counsel after his charge has been given, and when the jury are about to retire, and he has been obliged to consider the subject of these prayers hastily. A little reflection may convince him that the matter needs further explanation. The propriety of his recalling the jury and explaining the matter further is hardly open to reasonable doubt, and we think his discretion extends to that matter. Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. The discretion of the court in giving farther instructions should extend to the time of rendering their verdict. Even after that time there may be a plain and palpable error which the proper administration of justice would correct. injuriously upon one of the parties. Florence Sewing Mach. Co. v. Grover, etc., Sewing Mach. Co., 110 Mass. 70.

doubt.¹ The practice is to be commended, since its results tend to a correct and rapid administration of justice.²

3. At Request of Parties. — While, as already shown,³ the court may, after the retirement of the jury, give additional instructions of its own motion or at the request of the jury, it is not as a general rule bound to give further instructions on motion of the parties.⁴ The practice in *Georgia*⁵ and *Tennessee*⁶ forms an exception to this rule. So a party has no right to further instructions after the jury has returned to have instructions repeated.⁷ There is some conflict of opinion as to whether or not a party is entitled to further instructions where the court has given further instructions at the request of the jury. But the weight of authority is to the effect that under such circumstances the party is entitled to additional instructions by way of explanation or modification.⁸ Massachusetts seems to be the only state in which the right is flatly denied.⁹

Reversible Error Not to Instruct. — On a murder trial, the jury having requested a further charge, it was held reversible error for the court to refuse it and to send word that the case was "too plain," unless the case was in fact too plain and the verdict supported by the evidence. 6. Buck v. Buck, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 392, where it was held not error to recall the jury at the instance of the defendant to give further and fuller instructions. The court will not, however, allow the recall of the jury for a further or additional charge upon the bare request of counsel without grounds. It is said that "under such a rule the ingenious lawyer would always have it in his power to have emphasized to the jury by the court any proposition he might choose to submit, and have the jury believe the court attached great weight to the matter about which it had been recalled for instructions." Bowling v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 15 Lea (Tenn.) 122.

But in all other respects it is a transaction between the judge and jury. The situation is a delicate one. The jurors are presumed to have discussed the case, and to have formed or be on the point of forming opinions. Any further discussion, either of the evidence or the law, in presence of the jury, might be eminently prejudicial. At all events, it is for the judge himself, at his discretion, to determine whether to permit such discussion or not."

4. What Instructions May Be Given — a. IN GENERAL. — The court may recall the jury to give instructions omitted,¹ or to give instructions erroneously refused,² or to correct an erroneous instruction given.³ So it may correct an erroneous instruction where the jury request a repetition of the charge,⁴ and in some jurisdictions may restate the evidence.⁵ It may give any additional instructions at the request of the jury which may be necessary to meet the difficulty in their minds,⁶ and whenever additional instructions are given they may be excepted to for

In Louisiana it was held that "the refusal of the judge to allow the prisoner's counsel to state new points and propositions in the hearing of the jury, when they came in and asked fresh instructions from the court," was not "such error as would authorize a reversal of the judgment." *State v. Where the court has inadvertently neglected to charge as to the form of the verdict, the jury may properly be recalled and instructed as to that matter. Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65.

Upon an application by the jury for further instructions both parties consented that they might take the minutes of all the testimony upon the disputed point. Through an inadvertence the court failed at the time to give them a portion of such testimony, but afterwards recalled them and read the omitted portion. This was held not to be error. *Coit v. The counsel for the accused, while addressing the jury and endeavoring to show them that his clients should not be convicted of a higher crime than murder in the second degree, was interrupted by the judge with the declaration that the instructions would not warrant a verdict of murder in the second degree; that under the instructions it was murder in the first degree or nothing. After the jury had retired to consider their verdict, the judge, at their request, had them recalled, and, in open court and in the presence of the accused and their counsel and of the state's attorney, gave them correct instructions in relation to murder in the second degree, and the accused were found guilty of that offense. It was held that no error had been committed. The accused could not have been prejudiced, and the Supreme Court is inclined to encourage trial courts to correct errors committed in the progress of the trial rather than to force them to persist in them after they are discovered. State v. Williams, 69 Mo. 110.

b. REPETITION OF CHARGE. — It is proper for the court, on the request of the jury,² or on its own motion,³ to call them in and read the charge to them a second time, in order to satisfy one or all of them as to the state of the law on the issues before them.⁴

All or Portion of Charge. — As a general rule, it is not necessary to repeat the whole charge when the jury ask to have a portion of the charge restated to them,⁵ and this rule, it seems, applies to a restatement of the evidence in jurisdictions where the practice of summing up obtains,⁶ especially where the jury is admonished that there was other testimony than that restated, and to give such evidence as careful consideration as the evidence which was restated.⁷ It may well be conceived, however, that circumstances might arise under which a repetition of a portion of the charge might unduly influence the jury.⁸ And in any event, it

In this case, after retiring for deliberation, the jury returned into court and asked instructions upon a particular point. The court directed them to follow the instructions already given. The plaintiff thereupon requested the court to read the particular instruction covering the matter. The court refused so to do, but expressed a willingness to read the entire instructions if the jury so desired. The foreman of the jury thereupon stated that they had no such desire. It was held that the failure to read the particular instruction was not error.

"We do not understand that when instructions are asked upon particular questions, it is the duty of the court to repeat its entire charge as previously given. Such a practice might lead to confusion, and would certainly protract proceedings needlessly. All that is necessary is that the charge should fully present both aspects of the case, and 'should call' the attention of the jury to that view of the facts consistent with innocence, as well as the one suggesting guilt.'" Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 197.

Stat., c. 118, § 31) authorizing the judge to "state anew the evidence, or any part of it," to a jury disagreeing, no exception lies to his refusal to restate that in favor of one party after restating that of the other.

(Tenn.) 202, where it was held that when a jury merely disagree as to the result, after weighing the testimony and considering the charge, it is error in the court to repeat or recharge disjointed portions of his charge. In support of this conclusion the court said: "In such instance the jury very well may, and we think always will, conclude that the court means to have them understand that the matter or question thus disjointedly charged upon is controlling in the case." See also Granberry v. Frierson, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 326, in which it was held reversible error to would not only be proper but highly commendable for the court to admonish the jury not to overlook those parts of the charge not restated.

c. QUESTIONS NOT PRESENTED BY JURY. — Unless there is a statute providing otherwise, as in Texas,¹ the court is not confined strictly to the point presented by the jury.² It is not restricted to categorical answers, but may and should give such further instructions as may be necessary to keep the issues before their minds.³

Cannot Change Tenor of Charge. — It is not proper, however, for the court to give another full, complete, and different charge on nearly all or even some of the material questions involved in the issue of the case. It is not right to change the tenor of the charge already given.⁴ Nor can it give such instructions to the jury after they have returned a valid verdict as shall result in a change or modification of the verdict.⁵

XI. REPETITION OF INSTRUCTIONS — POINTS ALREADY COVERED —

1. Propriety of Refusing to Repeat Instructions Already Given —

a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — Instructions on points which have been sufficiently covered by other instructions may properly be refused, although they are correctly drawn and applicable to the evidence. This is so whether the instruction requested is covered by the general charge or by special instructions granted at the request of either party, or whether the mode of expression is the same or different.⁶ The duty of the court is fully discharged if recall the jury and repeat a portion of the charge, the jury not asking and the losing party objecting. The court considered that this case was strictly within the rule laid down in Swaggerty v. Caton, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 199.

1. The Rule in Texas. — Pasch. Dig., art. 3079, provides that the jury, after retiring, may ask further instructions of the judge touching matters of law, which shall be given them in writing, but no charge shall be given except upon the particular point upon which it was asked. The Texas courts have enforced this statute to the letter. In consideration it has been held that the judge must confine himself strictly to the point presented. Garza v. State, 3 Tex. App. 293; Chamberlain v. State, 2 Tex. App. 451; Hannahan v. State, 7 Tex. App. 610; Wharton v. State, 45 Tex. 2, furnishes a good illustration of this principle. The jury returned into court and asked: "Can we judge a witness just by what he says on the stand, and not by what we know of him privately?" To this question the court did not reply, but proceeded to give them rules governing juries in weighing testimony. The reviewing court held that this was erroneous; that the court could not do more than answer the question and inform them that they should decide the case upon the evidence adduced at the trial.

3. Paine v. Hutchins, 49 Vt. 314; Edmunds v. Wiggin, 24 Me. 509.

In Edmunds v. Wiggin, 24 Me. 509, the court said: "That the words 'if proposed to him,' contained in Rev. Stat., c. 115, § 67, were not designed to limit the power of the judge to the explanation of such questions of law only as should be voluntarily proposed by the jury, will be obvious, when it is considered that a discretion is therein confided to him to restate any particular testimony, and to send them out, before they have agreed, more than once."

the defendant.¹ The court should simplify its directions to the jury and make every effort to render them as free from complexity as possible.²

b. REASON FOR RULE. — The reason for this is obvious. Repetition tends to encumber the record,³ and to confuse and embarrass the minds of the jury,⁴ and it is also liable to give undue prominence to the proposition repeated.⁵

c. APPLICATIONS OF RULE. — The decisions set out in the notes will serve to show the application of the rule stated.⁶

6. On a trial of the right of property taken under execution there is no error in refusing to charge that the claimant must make out his title by "abundant proof," especially after the court has already charged that the burden of proof is upon the claimant. Swinney v. Booth, 28 Tex. 113.

The refusal of an instruction calling attention to the effect of impeaching evidence upon the credibility of any particular witness is not erroneous where a general instruction on that subject has already been given. State v. Curran, 51 Iowa 112.

An instruction to the effect that the defendant had a right to use such force in expelling the plaintiff from his premises as an ordinarily prudent and cautious man would have done under the circumstances, may properly be refused when by another instruction the jury have been told that the defendant had a right to use such force as was reasonably necessary; as the instruction given contained, in substance, all that was embraced in the one refused. Jones v. Jones, 71 Ill. 562.

An instruction that only compensatory damages are recoverable is properly refused where the jury have already been told that compensation for actual injuries is the measure of damages. Best Brewing Co. v. Dunlevy, 157 Ill. 141.

Where the jury has once been instructed upon the effect of false testimony given knowingly and wilfully, the court may properly refuse an instruction as to the effect of particular testimony claimed to be contradictory and false. Bernstein v. Smith, 10 Kan. 60.

In an action for rent the court may properly refuse to instruct that if the husband of the lessor was acting for his wife such part of the rent could not be recovered, where the court had stated to the jury in another instruction that she would be bound by such arrangement if it was authorized by her. Trulock v. Donahue, 85 Iowa 748.

An instruction having been given that the burden of proof is on the plain-

d. LIMITATIONS AND QUALIFICATIONS OF RULE. — The rule as stated is subject to some limitations and qualifications.

Application of Principle to Facts. — Thus it is erroneous to refuse an instruction applying a principle of law to the facts in the case, even though the same principle be stated abstractly in other instructions. It is better practice to charge the law as applied to the respective theories contended for than to announce principles in the abstract.¹

tiff to show the negligent construction of an embankment, a further instruction that "if upon the whole evidence your minds are evenly balanced, and you are unable to say that the preponderance of evidence is in favor of the plaintiff, then you will find for the defendant," is properly refused. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Locker, 78 Tex. 279.

Where, in an action for obtaining money by false pretenses, the court instructs the jury that such false pretenses must have been made with the intent to defraud, it may properly omit to charge as to intent in subsequent instructions. State v. Chase, 89 Iowa 38.

In an action for use and occupation of the plaintiff's lands, a requested charge as to the defendant's liability in case the lands are occupied by stock, only part of which belonged to the defendant, is properly refused where the court had already charged that the plaintiff could not recover unless the defendant had the exclusive use and occupation of the plaintiff's land. Lazarus v. Phelps, 156 U. S. 202.

A charge that expert evidence should be received with much caution and scrutiny is properly refused where the court instructed that such evidence is not conclusive, and was only intended to supplement the general knowledge and experience of the jury, and that they should exercise their own judgment upon the facts, independently of such evidence. McLean v. Crow, 88 Cal. 644.

In an action for malicious prosecution, an instruction that the plaintiff cannot recover unless the defendant instituted the suit without grounds, and solely with an intent to injure the plaintiff, is properly refused where a charge had been given that the plaintiff must show that the prosecution was begun by the defendants through malice and also without probable cause. Keesling v. Doyle, 8 Ind. App. 43.

Where the court has charged that the plaintiff cannot recover exemplary damages, it may properly refuse a charge that the jury can give no exemplary damages in an action for libel unless they find actual malice on the part of the defendant, and that actual malice is a wilful intent to injure the plaintiff. Van Ingen v. Mail, etc., Pub. Co., 14 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 326.

In an action to recover for the death of a person struck by a railroad train, an instruction that the defendant is not liable unless it was done at a public crossing renders it unnecessary farther to instruct on behalf of the company as to the rule of liability for injuries to trespassers. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Stanley, 158 Ill. 396.

In an action for the death of a person killed at a railroad crossing, after charging that the deceased was bound to use all precautions which the surrounding circumstances would permit, the court may properly refuse a subsequent request to charge that it was the duty of the deceased to wait until there were no obstructions to interfere with his view before trying to cross the track. Puff v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 71 Hun (N. Y.) 577.

An instruction applying the law to a theory of facts constituting a perfect defense for the accused, but which only authorizes an acquittal if the jury believes these facts in connection with other facts stated, is not a substitute for an instruction which only requires the jury, in order to acquit, to believe facts necessary to the defense set up. Gerdine v. State, 64 Miss. 798.

A charge giving a rule for computing damages, followed by a detailed illustration for the application of the rule, is not subject to the objection of unnecessary repetition. McAuley v. Harris, 71 Tex. 631.

1. Gerdine v. State, 64 Miss. 798; Lamar v. State, 64 Miss. 428; Aldridge v. State, 59 Miss. 250; Muldrow v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39 Iowa 615; Parkhill v. Brighton, 61 Iowa 103; Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 692;

Clear Language. — So it is erroneous to refuse a request where the charge given does not state the requested point in clear and unmistakable language, and where the language of the request will be more readily understood by the jury.¹

Criminal Trials. — So in many jurisdictions it is said to be better practice in criminal trials to give every instruction asked by the defendant, unless it is manifestly not the law of the case, although the requested instruction has already been given in the main charge.²

2. Repetition Usually Not a Ground for Reversal. — It must be understood, however, that the repetition of instructions is no ground for reversal unless it appears that such repetition gave undue prominence to some phase of the case, and unless the jury were misled thereby, or unless the instruction requested is erroneous and objectionable in form.³

3. Stating Grounds of Refusal to Jury. — Whether the court, in refusing instructions already given, should state the grounds of refusal to the jury, must depend on the manner in which the request

1. Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 32 Iowa 180.

Charge Liable to Be Misunderstood. — If the general charge, though correct in point of law, is liable to be misunderstood by persons not possessed of legal training, it is error to refuse a special charge clearly presenting the law. Willis v. McNeill, 57 Tex. 465; Parkhill v. Brighton, 61 Iowa 103; Manuel v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 56 Iowa 655; Haines v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 41 Iowa 227.

It is error for the court to refuse special charges containing a more specific definition and a fuller and more particular explanation than are contained in the general charge. Martin Brown Co. v. Wainscott, 66 Tex. 131.

Disconnected General Charge. — It is also error to refuse to give instructions that correctly state the law applicable to the facts, unless such requests are covered by the general charge in a manner not so disconnected as to impair their force. Mynning v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 59 Mich. 257.

2. Banks v. State, 7 Tex. App. 591; People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151; People v. Murray, 41 Cal. 66; People v. King, 27 Cal. 515; People v. Ramirez, 13 Cal. 173. This last decision is based on the ground that by such refusal a pretext is afforded for an appeal which might not otherwise be taken.

3. Lawder v. Henderson, 36 Kan. 754; Seebrock v. Fedawa, 30 Neb. 424; Ratto v. Bluestein, 84 Tex. 57; International, etc., R. Co. v. Leak, 64 Tex. 654; Keeble v. Black, 4 Tex. 69; McBride v. Banguss, 65 Tex. 174; Moffatt v. Tenney, 17 Colo. 189.

In a damage suit against a railroad company, the court in its charge repeated several times that a great degree of care was required of the conductor in expelling an insane woman from a car. The court held that the repetition of the statement could do no harm unless it induced the jury to believe that the court thought there was evidence showing a want of requisite care, and that the repetition was not of a character thus to mislead the jury, and occurred only when it was necessary to qualify the principles applicable to the different phases of the case. International, etc., R. Co. v. Leak, 64 Tex. 654.

Unnecessary Instructions Do Not Necessarily Make a Charge Erroneous. — If no instructions are given that are erroneous or misleading the court must be held to have discharged its duty, and the judgment, if well founded in other respects, should not be disturbed, even though some unnecessary instructions have been given. To hold the trial courts to a stricter rule than this would practically result in overthrowing the judgment in nearly every contested case. Moffatt v. Tenney, 17 Colo. 189.

is preferred, that is, whether the jury are thereby made acquainted with the contents of the instruction refused. If the instructions are never seen or heard read by the jury, it is obvious that no prejudice can result from a failure of the court to explain that they are refused only because they have already been given.¹ A different question, however, presents itself when the jury know the contents of the instructions refused. In this case the court should distinctly and explicitly explain to the jury the grounds of its refusal, for otherwise the jury might be misled into believing that the instructions were refused on the merits.² There is, however, one decision which denies this doctrine,³ but it is against the weight of authority, and, it is believed, is wrong on principle.

4. Presumptions on Appeal. — If the instructions of the court, or a part of them, are omitted from the record, it will be presumed, on appeal, that instructions refused were properly covered by other instructions given.⁴ It is necessary that the instructions

1. State v. O'Connor, 11 Nev. 416; People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119, in which the court said that the jury is not misled by the refusal of instructions, since the requests are not read in their presence, but are submitted to the court in writing, and marked "refused" if they are rejected.

It is said, however, in State v. O'Connor, 11 Nev. 416; State v. Ferguson, 9 Nev. 118, that it would be well that the reason for refusing the instruction should be noted thereon.

"For a defendant might appeal without making any bill of exceptions, and in that case the charge of the judge would form no part of the record, whereas the instructions refused by him would come before us for review, and if we found that an instruction manifestly correct and applicable to the case had been refused, and had no means of knowing that an equivalent instruction had been given, we might be compelled to reverse the judgment for a reason that in fact did not exist." State v. O'Connor, 11 Nev. 427.

2. People v. Hurley, 8 Cal. 390; People v. Ramirez, 13 Cal. 172; People v. Hobson, 17 Cal. 424; People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 148 (the practice in California is now otherwise by rule of court, and it is not proper to read refused instructions in the presence of the jury); Waldie v. Doll, 29 Cal. 556; People v. Sears, 18 Cal. 635; Davis v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 30 S. Car. 613, 9 S. E. Rep. 105 (this case is not reported in full in the official reports); State v. O'Connor, 11 Nev. 426.

Qualification of Rule. — Although the Supreme Court will reverse a judgment in a criminal case where the court below refused an instruction asked by the defendant on the ground that the instruction had already been given in substance, without informing the jury that the refusal was for this cause, yet the rule is subject to the qualification that the language of the instruction asked be clear and explicit and leave no reason for doubt or misconstruction; in short, be free from objection. People v. Hobson, 17 Cal. 424.

3. Hopcraft v. Lachman, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 433, in which the court said: "If a party is not satisfied with a point clearly and squarely covered by the charge, he must take the effect upon the jury of a direct refusal to repeat the charge if he makes a request."

XII. DECLARATIONS OF LAW IN CAUSES TRIED WITHOUT A JURY —

1. In Chancery Cases. — In chancery cases, where no issues of fact are referred to a jury, instructions, or declarations of law, as they might more properly be termed, should not be given.² If asked they should be refused,³ and if given they will be disregarded by the reviewing court.⁴

2. In Actions at Law. — In some jurisdictions it is considered just as essential in actions at law, triable without a jury, that instructions should be given in order to enable the appellate court to review the action of the trial court, as in like cases tried with the aid of a jury.⁵ These decisions proceed on the view that unless this is done the reviewing court cannot tell on what

All the Presumptions Are in Favor of the Decision of the Court Below, and where a party claims on appeal or error that any of those decisions are erroneous, he must so save and present the erroneous decision, in the record, as to exclude every reasonable presumption in favor of such decision. Myers v. Murphy, 60 Ind. 286.

1. Malcom v. Hanson, 32 Neb. 50.

"In the absence of the instructions actually given by the court, we cannot possibly say that the court below erred in its refusal to give the jury the instructions asked for by the appellant. For even if it were conceded that the instructions asked for and refused were right and proper, and stated the law correctly, yet we do not know, and cannot know, from the record, that the court below did not give those instructions for the reason that their legal substance had been already given to the jury, by the court, in its own language." Myers v. Murphy, 60 Ind. 286.

Limitation of Rule. — While, generally, if the entire charge be not brought up in the record it will be presumed to have been correct, if, where a request containing a legal proposition pertinent to the case was refused, the court charged to the contrary, the presumption in favor of the general charge was overcome. Pace v. Payne, 73 Ga. 670.

2. Gill v. Clark, 54 Mo. 415; Freeman v. Wilkerson, 50 Mo. 554.

Reason for Rule. — An appeal in chancery cases brings up the whole record, and the cause is tried anew on the bill, answer, and proofs.

Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Robinson*, 74 Fed. Rep. 11. Contra, Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 681, in which it is held that under the Code of Civil Procedure there is no authority for the practice of presenting to the court propositions of law which the court is requested to declare as legal principles applicable to the facts of the case, and to render its decision in accordance therewith, and that the refusal of the court to do so cannot be assigned as error. In arriving at this conclusion the court decided that anything to the contrary appearing in certain California cases enumerated (Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150; Page's Estate, 57 Cal. 238; Wilson v. Wilson, 64 Cal. 92) was merely obiter dictum.

theory of law the trial court based its judgment,¹ and it is obvious that instructions can only be important as showing the theory of the trial court of the law applicable to the cases.² The rules governing these declarations of law differ from ordinary instructions to juries in no essential particular.³

XIII. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURIES TRYING ISSUES DIRECTED OUT OF CHANCERY. — See article ISSUES TO JURY.

XIV. INSTRUCTIONS IN CASES WHERE SPECIAL VERDICT IS DIRECTED. — Where the jury are directed to find a special verdict it is not proper to give general instructions as to the law of the case.⁴ The jury should be left entirely free to find the facts

1. Rogers v. Johnson, 125 Mo. 202; Krider v. Milner, 99 Mo. 149; Mead v. Spalding, 94 Mo. 47; Suddarth v. Robertson, 118 Mo. 286; Davis v. Scripps, 2 Mo. 187.

2. Weber v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 35 Mo. App. 521; Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 420; Methudy v. Ross, 10 Mo. App. 106; Gaty v. Clark, 28 Mo. App. 340.

3. Lyon v. George, 44 Md. 295.

On Weight of Evidence. — An instruction which comments on the weight of the evidence is bad even where the whole cause is tried by the judge without a jury. King v. Allemania F. Ins. Co., 37 Mo. App. 102; Lyon v. George, 44 Md. 295.

Evidence to Support. — If a requested instruction is supported by the evidence it is error to refuse it. Gage v. Averill, 57 Mo. App. 111. Otherwise where there is no evidence to support it. Cook v. Gill, 83 Md. 177; U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Robinson, 74 Fed. Rep. 10.

Technical Objections and Ambiguities. — The judgments of the trial court will not be reversed because instructions are subject to mere verbal criticisms or technical objections. Liberty v. Burns, 114 Mo. 426. Nor will a judgment be reversed because ambiguous declarations of law were given. It is the duty of the parties to ask such declarations as will enable the appellate court to determine upon what theory of the law the trial court's findings of fact were made. Gaff v. Stern, 12 Mo. App. 115; Methudy v. Ross, 10 Mo. App. 106.

Ignoring Testimony. — An instruction which entirely ignores the testimony of one of the parties is properly refused. Stocker v. Green, 94 Mo. 280.

Harmless Error. — Although a declaration of law given for the prevailing party is erroneous, yet if the judgment on the uncontroverted evidence is for the right party, it will not be reversed. Fairbanks v. Long, 91 Mo. 628.

Like Errors in Instructions of Both Parties. — A party cannot be heard to complain of an error in a declaration of law given for the other side when one given for him is similarly erroneous. Fairbanks v. Long, 91 Mo. 628.

Presumptions on Appeal. — The court will only consider declarations of law given and refused to determine the theory on which the court tried the case. Every presumption will be made in favor of the action of the trial court giving and refusing declarations of law. Stone v. Pennock, 31 Mo. App. 544.

If no declaration of law is asked or given the presumption is that the court sitting as a jury correctly assumes the law, and that its findings of fact are in accordance therewith. De Laureal v. Kemper, 9 Mo. App. 77.

Necessity for Requests. — Unless requested the court is not bound to give declarations of law. De Laureal v. Kemper, 9 Mo. App. 77. But when a proper request is made it is error to refuse it. Hisey v. Goodwin, 90 Mo. 366.

Thus it is proper to refuse a declaration of law that, under the evidence, the right of stoppage in transitu of the goods in controversy existed at the time of the institution of this suit, and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover. Klein v. Fischer, 30 Mo. App. 568.

material to the issues without instructions as to whether the law will declare one way or the other upon any fact or state of facts which may be found.¹ But a statement of the matters put in issue by the pleadings, and of the rules for weighing and reconciling testimony, with whatever else may be necessary to enable the jury clearly to comprehend the subjects to be covered by a verdict as to them, is proper.² If, however, general instructions as to the law of the case are given, available error can be predicated thereof.³

XV. INSTRUCTING JURORS TO APPLY PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE TO FACTS. — It was undoubtedly the ancient doctrine that jurors were to render their verdict as well upon the facts within their personal knowledge as upon those derived from the testimony of the witnesses duly sworn and testifying in the case, and accordingly they were usually taken from the vicinage.⁴ At the present time it is considered that the purposes of justice are better subserved by the selection of jurors who have no personal knowledge of anything connected with the case, and with this change as to the proper qualifications of a juror, it has now come to be well settled that a juror cannot give a verdict upon facts in his own private knowledge;⁵ and it will, therefore, usually be deemed erroneous for a court to instruct the jury that in making up their verdict they may take into consideration matters within their own personal knowledge.⁶

(Ind. App. 1897) 47 N. E. Rep. 941. Compare dictum in Burns v. North Chicago Rolling Mill Co., 60 Wis. 544, in which it was stated that "when the jury are called upon to render a special verdict, the trial court may, in its discretion, limit its instructions to such matters as are necessarily involved in the questions of fact submitted to them," and that instructions as to such matters should be given in connection with the questions and not as general instructions in the case.

Refusal Proper. — Where the jury are directed to find a special verdict, they find the facts entirely independent of their legal bearings. It is not a case, therefore, for general instructions as to the law of the case, and there is no error in refusing such instructions. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Bush, 101 Ind. 582.

the action and the issues, and as to the form of their special verdict and their general duty in relation thereto." Toler v. Keiher, 81 Ind. 388.

5. Orcutt v. Nelson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 536.

Matters Proved by Way of Illustration. — It is not a misdirection if the judge refers the jury to their own knowledge of any particular facts which have been proved as matter of illustration only, and not as matter of evidence. Rex v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532.

6. Chattanooga, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 90 Ga. 265; Pettyjohn v. Liebscher, 92 Ga. 149; Gibson v. Carreker, 91 Ga. 617; Douglass v. Trask, 77 Me. 35; Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co., 106 Mich. 582; Waite v. Teeters, 36 Kan. 604.

"Controversies are now determined, not wholly or in part by what the juries know of the facts, but solely by what

Personal Knowledge of Character of Witnesses. — According to the better view it is held erroneous to instruct the jury that they can act upon their own private and personal knowledge of the character of the witnesses who testify in the cause on trial, and that they can consider such character if they know it.¹

View by Jury. — In cases of view by jury the general rule has been much relaxed. See article VIEW BY JURY.

XVI. URGING OR COERCING JURY TO AGREE. — The Trial Judge is Vested with Large Discretion in the conduct of judicial proceedings,² and he may properly admonish the jury as to the desirability and importance of agreeing on a verdict, and may urge them to make every effort to do so consistent with their consciences.³

the evidence establishes." Chattanooga, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 90 Ga. 265.

Instances of Instructions Obnoxious to Rule. — An instruction that in ascertaining the value of land the jury may consider their own knowledge as to the value of land in the country, as well as the evidence, is erroneous. Gibson v. Carreker, 91 Ga. 617.

So where a question arose in the trial respecting the value of ripe and unharvested corn, which was alleged to have been wrongfully converted at a place remote from a general market, and no testimony was presented to the jury of the value of such corn at the time and place of the conversion, it was held error to direct the jury that they might use their general knowledge in determining its value. Waite v. Teeters, 36 Kan. 604.

Instances of Instructions Not Obnoxious to Rule. — It is not error to instruct the jury to take into account their experience among men in determining the credibility of witnesses. Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314. Or that they may call to their aid the knowledge and experience they possess in common with the generality of mankind. Sanford v. Gates, 38 Kan. 405; Rajnowski v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 74 Mich. 15. These charges are not objectionable as allowing the jury to resort to any knowledge peculiar to themselves of any material facts. Rajnowski v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 74 Mich. 15.

1. Chattanooga, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 90 Ga. 265 (overruling Anderson v. Tribune, 66 Ga. 584; Head v. Bridges, 67 Ga. 236; Howard v. State, 73 Ga. 84); *Pettyjohn v. Reason for Rule. — If the juror knows any particular fact material to the proper decision of the case, he ought to be sworn as a witness in open court and to be publicly examined, so that his evidence, like that of other witnesses, may first be scrutinized as to its competency and bearing upon the issue, and for the further reason that the court and the parties may know upon what evidence the verdict was rendered. Patterson v. Boston, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 166.

He may advise jurors to lay aside mere pride of judgment,¹ and not to adhere to an opinion regardless of what the other jurors say, merely through stubbornness;² to examine any existing difference in a spirit of fairness and candor;³ and to reason together and talk over such differences and harmonize them if this be possible.⁴ So also the court may urge as reasons for agreeing on a verdict the time and expense involved in the trial, and the time and expense which a new trial will entail.⁵ But it is not proper to give an instruction censuring jurors for not agreeing with the majority. In this connection it is thought proper to set out in the notes some instructions on this head which have either been approved or held not sufficient cause for reversal.⁶

6. Instructions Approved on This Head.—The following charges have been held not objectionable:

That this case had been troublesome and had cost much time and trouble to investigate it, and, therefore, there should be a verdict. Allen v. Woodson, 50 Ga. 63.

That the case had been twice tried, and that it was important that the jury should agree, if they should satisfy their minds as to the right of the case between the parties. Niles v. Sprague, 13 Iowa 198.

That it was important to the state and to the prisoner that the case should be determined; that it had been quite expensive to the state and that such expense ought not to be thrown away if it could be avoided; that the court had to have these considerations in mind when a jury asked to be discharged, and that the court thought the jury should also have them in mind. State v. Gorham, 67 Vt. 371.

That it was the duty of each juror to lay aside all pride of judgment and carefully review the ground of his opinion; that the case had been long pending and had now been exhaustively tried, and that a new trial would entail a large expense. Fransden v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa 378.

That it was the duty of the jury to agree; that no juror from mere pride of opinion, hastily expressed, should refuse to agree; nor, on the other hand, should he surrender any conscientious views founded on the evidence, and that it was the duty of each juror to reason with his fellows concerning the facts with an honest desire to arrive at the truth and with a view of arriving at a verdict. Warlick v. Plonk, 103 N. Car. 81.

That "it is the duty of each juror, while the jury are deliberating upon their verdict, to give careful consideration to the views his fellow jurymen may have to present upon the testimony in the case. He should not shut his ears and stubbornly stand upon the position he first takes, regardless of what may be said by the other jurymen. It should be the object of all of you to arrive at a common conclusion, and to that end you should deliberate together with calmness. It is your duty to agree upon a verdict if that is possible." Jackson v. State, 91 Wis. 253.

That the jury are as capable as any jury will ever be of arriving at a verdict, and that if they follow the rules laid down for their guidance they will have no trouble in agreeing. Parker v. Georgia Pac. R. Co., 83 Ga. 539.

That "you must get together upon a matter of this kind. No juror ought to remain entirely firm in his own conviction one way or another, until he has made up his mind, beyond all question, that he is necessarily right and the others are necessarily wrong." Cranston v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 103 N. Y. 614, reversing 39 Hun (N. Y.) 308.

Directing Compromise Verdict. — It is not to be understood from anything heretofore said that the court may direct the jury to bring in a compromise verdict.¹

Stating Time Jury Will Be Kept Out. — There is some contrariety of opinion as to what statement by the trial judge as to the length of time he will keep the jury together for the purpose of obtaining a verdict will operate to reverse. The decisions are collected in the notes.²

That "the fact that a juror finds his judgment opposed to the judgment of a majority of the panel ought to induce him, as a reasonable man, so far to doubt the correctness of his own views as to weigh carefully the opinions of his associates, and the arguments and reasons upon which they are founded; and if, upon due consideration, he is convinced they are probably right and he is in error, it is his duty to agree with them." Ahearn v. Mann, 60 N. H. 472; Whitman v. Morey, 63 N. H. 458.

1. Goodsell v. Seeley, 46 Mich. 623; Richardson v. Coleman, 131 Ind. 210; Boden v. Irwin, 92 Pa. St. 345.

While the law contemplates that the jury shall, by their discussions, harmonize their views if possible, it does not contemplate that they shall compromise for the mere purpose of an agreement. Goodsell v. Seeley, 46 Mich. 623. In this case it appeared that the jury returned into court and informed the judge that they had not agreed, but "stood eleven to one, and divided on $200." The trial judge told them: "If that is the only difference, it would be better for the county and the parties on both sides that one or both sides yield so as to come together. It would be unfortunate for all to have a disagreement when the difference is so small."

2. In one decision it was held not a ground for a new trial that the court, on the disagreement of the jury, announced its inflexible determination to keep them until an agreement was reached. State v. Green, 7 La. Ann. 518.

In another case it was held not a ground for new trial that the court told the jury that he would keep them together until the end of the term unless they sooner found a verdict. Hannon v. Grizzard, 89 N. Car. 115.

See also Osborne v. Wilkes, 108 N. Car. 651. In this case the jury came into court on Saturday of the first week of the term and announced that they could not agree as to the facts. The reviewing court held that it was not error for the judge to say that there were two more weeks of the term and he would give them plenty of time to consider, and then to direct the sheriff to provide comfortable accommodation for them.

On the other hand, it has been held reversible error to tell the jury that they will be kept together until after the term of court is over unless they agree. Taylor v. Jones, 2 Head (Tenn.) 565. See also Ingersoll v. Lansing, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 101, in which the court having adjourned for four days, on the retirement of the jury, without providing for their discharge except in case of agreement, and the judge having immediately departed to another county, it was held that this amounted to the coercion of a verdict, and was ground to set it aside. In Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154, the judge told the jury that he would keep the court open until they did agree; that they had nothing to do but to find the defendant guilty; that they were bound to find him guilty under the charge of the court, or they would be guilty of moral perjury. This was held to be a most unwarrantable interference and to constitute reversible error.

Directing Juror to Agree with Others — When Not Error. — If the evidence is of such a nature that the court may take the case from the jury and direct a verdict, it may properly, on disagreement of the jury, direct one of the jurors to agree with his fellows. It cannot be error for the court to direct one juror to do what it ought to have directed all of them to do before leaving their box. W. B. Grimes Dry-Goods Co. v. Malcolm, 58 Fed. Rep. 670.

Instruction Held Not to Amount to Improper Coercion. — A statement by the

XVII. WITHDRAWING INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE BY INSTRUCTIONS —

1. Efficiency of Remedy. — It is very generally settled that error in admitting illegal evidence may be cured by instructions directing the jury to disregard it,¹ although there are some decisions which flatly deny the doctrine that error may be thus cured. These court, in its instructions, of the effect of a disagreement at common law and the mitigation of the rule in the United States, coupled with the remark that they would have to remain together and not separate until they agreed upon a verdict and brought it into court, was held not objectionable as indicating a determination to keep them together until they should agree. State v. Saunders, 14 Oregon 300.

Coercion Combined with Other Errors. — Where the judge used such strong, emphatic language as to give additional force to the arguments of one side, and afterwards said that it was a plain case, and declared that if the jury did not sooner agree he would keep them until Saturday night, it was held that this was leading the jury to a conclusion in violation of the Act of 1796. *Nash v. England. — Tullidge v. Wade, 3 Wils. 18.

Instances. — While it is erroneous for the court to admit evidence of the unlawful conversion of property as a setoff, in an action of assumpsit, yet if it instructs the jury to reject the setoff and they find accordingly, the error is thereby cured. Conklin v. Parsons, 2 Pin. (Wis.) 264. The wife is not a competent witness to prove the nonaccess of her husband; nevertheless, if the court permitted her to be asked a question from which nonaccess may be inferred, as "When did you see your husband last?" and afterwards instructed the jury that they were not to consider any testimony of the wife as to nonaccess, the verdict cannot be disturbed on account of the question. Com. v. Shepherd, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 283. Error in the admission of testimony as to the loss, after suit brought, of the use to plaintiff of an article taken from her, was rendered nonprejudicial by the instruction directing the jury to find no damages for such loss. Blaisdell v. Scally, 84 Mich. 149. In an action for removing wood from land of which the ownership is disputed by the parties in consequence of a disagreement as to the boundary, rulings relating to the ownership of the land or of the wood, or excluding documentary proof of land contracts under which the defendant cases proceed upon the theory that the court cannot know to what extent the jury were influenced by the testimony improperly admitted and commented upon.¹ The authorities which hold the affirmative view are not entirely harmonious as to when this remedy will be effectual. According to some decisions the error is not cured unless the court can say affirmatively that the evidence worked no injury to the adverse party;² that it is not enough that the court sitting in review are of the opinion that the result may and probably would have been the same had the claimed, become immaterial under a charge that the plaintiff cannot recover if the boundary is where the defendant claims it to be. Beeman v. Black, 49 Mich. 598.

Trial by Court. — An objection that it is too late to exclude evidence after it has been heard by the triers of the facts is not available where the cause is tried by the court. "It is one of the inconveniences of trying cases before the court that the court becomes the judge of the law and the fact. It is frequently impossible to declare the law of evidence until the facts are first known. It frequently happens that the judge must hear the evidence before he can tell whether it is competent or incompetent, and the fact that he is trying the facts as well as the law does not change the case in this respect. Courts ought to use all proper caution not to let irrelevant and illegal evidence influence their judgment when they are trying the fact, but no rule can be laid down here determining when they may hear the evidence and when they may not, to determine its competency." State v. Schneider, 35 Mo. 533.

Evidence Withdrawn by the Party Offering It. — Where evidence offered by a defendant in a criminal case is withdrawn at his request, the court may properly instruct the jury to disregard it. State v. Stephens, 96 Mo. 637.

Evidence Offered but Not Admitted. — An instruction warning the jury against the consideration of evidence which has been offered but properly excluded is perfectly proper, McCoy v. Bateman, 8 Nev. 126; but the court need not give such instruction. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Horn, 41 Ind. 479; Pfaffenback v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 142 Ind. 246. See also Hooks v. Frick, 75 Ga. 715.

Missouri — Criminal Cases. — In Missouri it has been held that it is error in criminal cases to admit illegal evidence and afterwards exclude it by instructions—that the injury may be too deeply fixed in the minds of the jury to be easily eradicated. State v. Mix, 15 Mo. 153; State v. Wolff, 15 Mo. 168; State v. Marshall, 36 Mo. 400; State v. Thomas, 99 Mo. 235; State v. Kuehner, 93 Mo. 193.

2. State v. Meader, 54 Vt. 131; Connecticut, etc., Rivers R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805; Sterling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80; Boyd v. Readsboro, 1879, cited in State v. Meader, 54 Vt. 131; Coleman v. People, 58 N. Y. 555; Erben v. Lorillard, 19 N. Y. 299.

"It is now the settled law in this state that illegal evidence, if objected to, though admitted under an offer to so connect it with other proofs as to make it competent, will vitiate a verdict for the party offering it if proposed connection is not established, unless the court is able to say affirmatively that such evidence worked no injury to the adverse party. It is not apparent how any embarrassment can arise in the trial of cases under this rule. The party offering such evidence is simply compelled to take the risk of the experiment. If he fails, he, not his adversary, should be the loser. He has no more right to hold a verdict obtained by such evidence when offered in good faith than one when he offers the evidence in bad faith. The rights of the adversary are imperilled to the same extent in either case, and these are the rights calling for protection. The rule has a tendency to discourage bad faith in parties, in their offers of evidence, as they understand that such evidence cannot ultimately aid them. Chief Justice Pierpont laid down this rule in Connecticut, etc., Rivers R. Co. v. Baxter, 32 Vt. 805." State v. Meader, 54 Vt. 131.

objectionable evidence been excluded.¹ According to other decisions there must be reason to believe that the evidence improperly influenced the verdict,² and in one decision it has been held that before the judgment can be reversed it must be apparent that the evidence has affected the verdict.³ So some decisions take the view that when testimony is withdrawn it is no longer legally before the jury but out of the case, and that the jury being instructed to disregard it, it is to be presumed that they followed the instruction.⁴

Where Prejudice Apparent. — Of course, if it is apparent that prejudice must have resulted notwithstanding the instruction to disregard the evidence, the error is not thereby cured.⁵

2. What Instructions Sufficient. — Where illegal evidence has been admitted, it is undoubtedly the better practice for the court to withdraw the evidence by a positive direction to the jury to disregard it.⁶ It will not, in general, be sufficient to exclude it by implication only.⁷

Testimony Withdrawn to Remove Grounds of Exception. — The fact that testimony is withdrawn, not as incompetent but avowedly to remove all grounds for exception, does not alter the rule. The rule does not depend on the motives which influenced the withdrawal. "The question is, did the withdrawal take the testimony out of the case? If it did, it is to be considered as if it had never been admitted. We think the withdrawal being by consent of court is to be regarded as the act of the court, and that in contemplation of law it purged the case absolutely of the testimony." State v. Towler, 13 R. I. 665.

In a complaint against trustees of a mining corporation the first count alleged fraudulent representations by the defendants, by which the plaintiff was induced to make loans to the corporation; another count was based upon the provision of the act of incorporation declaring the officers of such a corporation who have made a false report liable for the debts of the corporation. Evidence was received of false representations on the part of an agent of the corporation. The court charged that the defendants were not liable for the agent's statements, to which they were not privy. It was held that the reception of the evidence was error, and was not cured by the charge. The evidence constituted the most important fact given, and must have made a serious impression, which the remark of the judge in his charge could not eradicate. Arthur v. Griswold, 55 N. Y. 400.

It is difficult to tell what effect evidence admitted may have upon the triers of fact, but the impression made by hearing what the court has declared to be competent testimony can hardly be removed by anything short of a flat direction that it must be disregarded. Henkle v. McClure, 32 Ohio St. 202.

Instance of Sufficient Instruction. — Where a letter which was incompetent was permitted to be put in evidence, it was held to be a sufficient withdrawal of it for the court to say: "Gentlemen,

3. Necessity of Objecting to Evidence. — The weight of authority is to the effect that if incompetent evidence is admitted without objection, the party injured thereby is not entitled to an instruction directing the jury to disregard such evidence.¹ Of course this rule does not apply where the objection is not apparent when the evidence is offered.²

4. Necessity of Requesting Instructions. — Where improper evidence has been admitted, the party aggrieved is entitled, on request, to have the jury instructed to disregard it,³ and the court may so instruct of its own motion,⁴ but it has been held that the court is under no obligation to withdraw such evidence unless requested so to do.⁵

you will not further consider the letter * * * the contents of which have been read to you." Wright v. Gillespie, 43 Mo. App. 244.

Instance of Insufficient Instruction. — Where improper evidence has been received, the mere fact that the judge in his charge is silent upon this evidence does not amount to a sufficient withdrawal thereof; such silence is by no means equivalent to a positive direction to the jury to disregard it. Castleman v. Griffin, 13 Wis. 539.

Young*, 9 Ga. 359; Maxwell v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 85 Mo. 106; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 77; Ann Berta Lodge No. 42 v. Leverton, 42 Tex. 22. Contra, Sperry v. Hellman, 20 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 226; Hamilton v. New York Cent. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 101, in which it is said that an omission to object to testimony is not an accession that it is competent.

Instance. — An expert, while testifying as to an injury received by the plaintiff, was permitted to testify without objection that the plaintiff assured him that he had never suffered with sore eyes or been injured in his eyes. It was held that it was proper to refuse a request to charge the jury not to consider symptoms of injury not testified to by the plaintiff, but stated by him to his physician, as the objection to the evidence was not in time. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 77.

Reason for Rule. — To allow a party to permit, without objection, the admission of evidence, and make his objection for the first time in instructions, would be intolerable practice. If he had an opportunity to interpose an objection, he cannot take the chances that the testimony will be favorable to him and when it turns out otherwise raise his objection, but he must be held to have waived it. Maxwell v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 85 Mo. 106. It is gross injustice to exclude evidence by a charge after it is too late to bring evidence which would warrant the admission of that sought to be excluded. Ann Berta Lodge No. 42 v. Leverton, 42 Tex. 22.

Criminal Cases. — If, on a criminal trial, incompetent evidence reaches the jury without objection made at the moment by the defendant's counsel, but he afterwards prays the court to withdraw it from their consideration by instruction, it is the duty of the court to grant the prayer. State v. Owens, 79 Mo. 619; State v. Cox, 65 Mo. 29.

2. State v. Lavin, 80 Iowa 555.

Evidence Is Frequently Admitted Which, from a Failure to Connect It with Other Evidence with which it had a necessary connection in order to be relevant, eventually turns out to be incompetent. The utmost caution cannot always prevent the introduction of evidence which in the course of the trial is discovered to be clearly inadmissible. Hamblett v. Hamblett, 6 N. H. 347.

Where evidence has been properly received, the party against whom it has been introduced has no absolute right to have it stricken out when its effect has been destroyed by other evidence.

Exclusion of Evidence.—The authorities are not agreed as to whether error in excluding competent evidence is cured by an instruction hypothecated on a state of facts which such evidence, if admitted, would tend to prove. This question has been ruled both ways.¹

XVIII. CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTIONS — 1. As to Credibility of Witnesses — a. IN GENERAL.—The credibility of witnesses and the weight and effect of their testimony is exclusively within the province of the jury,² and it is, of course, proper to so instruct.³

The proper practice, upon a jury trial, is to request the court to charge that such evidence is not to be considered by them, and in case of refusal he will have a good exception. Gawtry v. Doane, 51 N. Y. 84.

Depositions.—If depositions offered in evidence in a court of law contain matter supposed to be objectionable, the proper course is to point out the objectionable passages, and then move the court to instruct the jury to disregard them, otherwise error cannot be assigned. Buster v. Wallace, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 82.

Withdrawing Evidence Otherwise than by Instruction.—It has been held that a judgment will not be reversed on appeal on the ground that the trial judge overruled a motion to exclude illegal testimony which had been detailed to the jury. If, after its admission, the judge of his own motion informed the jury that the testimony had nothing to do with the case, a failure to again inform the jury that it was excluded was immaterial. Rollins v. O'Farrel, 77 Tex. 90.

In Brown v. Matthews, 79 Ga. 1, it was held that the court having formally withdrawn evidence, it might properly refuse to charge the jury not to consider it.

Martin v. McCray, 171 Pa. St. 575, is to the same effect; and in Russell v. Nall, 79 Tex. 664, it was held that where hearsay testimony after being given is excluded on objection, the court need not instruct the jury to disregard it, unless so requested; that if the defendant is apprehensive of the effect of the statement, notwithstanding its exclusion, he should request a special charge.

1. Exclusion of Evidence.—In State v. Mallon, 75 Mo. 355, the accused testified with respect to his having broken jail as follows: "I did not break jail because I feared a trial and conviction on this charge; the reason was, I was mistreated." The answer was objected to and the objection sustained. The court charged, however, that although the jury might believe from the evidence that the defendant did break jail while confined on this charge, yet if they did not believe that he did it from a motive to flee and avoid a trial on this charge, they should not consider it as an element in making up their verdict as to the defendant's guilt or innocence. The reviewing court held that the error was not cured. On the other hand, in Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204, a ruling excluding as immaterial evidence offered to prove a custom was held cured by a charge to the jury recognizing a general custom of the character sought to be proved, under limitations as favorable to the party complaining of the ruling as he was entitled to claim.

In Utah the court is required by statutes (Comp. Laws Utah, § 5033, subdiv. 6) to charge that the jury are the sole judges of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses. The words of the statute need not be precisely followed. It will be sufficient that the substance thereof is given in charge. People v. Chadwick, 7 Utah 134.

Uncontradicted Testimony.—It is erroneous to withdraw a question of fact from the jury, although the testimony of the only witness be uncontradicted.

The jury have the power to refuse their credit, and no action of the court should control the exercise of their admitted right to weigh the credibility of the testimony.¹

b. IMPEACHED WITNESSES. — Where a witness is impeached as being unworthy of credit, it is entirely within the province of the jury, as exclusive judges of the facts, to say what degree of weight or credibility shall be given to his testimony.² It would, therefore, seem to be error to instruct, as matter of law, that the jury cannot convict on the testimony of an impeached witness unless it is corroborated, and it has been so held,³ but there are decisions which maintain a contrary view.⁴ So it has been held erroneous to charge that an impeached witness is not to be believed,⁵ or that the impeaching evidence should "weigh heavily" against the witness, or that the jury must believe the witness for the state unless they believe that the contradicted witness is entitled to more weight and credit than said witness for the state,⁶ or that the jury are bound to believe an unimpeached witness,⁷ or that a party introducing a witness thereby indorses dicted; the question of his credibility is still before them. Madara v. Eversole, 62 Pa. St. 162; Dibble v. Northern Assur. Co., 70 Mich. 1.

An instruction that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony is proper, and is not objectionable on the ground that it may lead the jury to believe some of the witnesses unworthy of credit. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468.

Where testimony has been admitted without objection for the purpose of impeachment, it is for the jury to say whether it contradicted the witness, and not for the judge. People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 506.

Giving Undue Weight to Impeached Testimony.—An instruction which leads the jury to suppose that it may convict on the testimony of a witness who has been conclusively shown by impeaching evidence to be unworthy of belief, is erroneous. People v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215.

(This identical charge was held erroneous in Ray v. State, 50 Ala. 104), and see Jackson v. State, 64 Ga. 345, where the following instruction was sustained: "The corroboration [of the testimony of an impeached witness] ought to be sufficient to satisfy the jury of the truth of the evidence of the accomplice. If the jury are satisfied that he speaks the truth in some material part of his testimony, in which they see him confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, this may be a ground for their believing that he also speaks the truth in other parts as to which there may be no confirmation; but the corroboration ought to be as to some fact or facts connecting the prisoner with the offense, the truth or falsehood of which would go to prove or disprove the offense charged against the prisoner."

his credibility,¹ or that a witness may be impeached by a lack of intelligence, as well as by the positive testimony of other witnesses,² or by evidence of the witness's ill-will and unkind feelings toward the defendant;³ or to specify the modes in which a witness may be impeached where there is no evidence on which to base the charge;⁴ or to charge that a witness may impeach himself by confession to infamous conduct which, if true, would exclude him from respectable society.⁵ Where a correct instruction has been given as to how a witness may be impeached, the court may properly charge that it is neglect for the jurors arbitrarily to disregard the evidence of a witness;⁶ or that if a witness has made a statement out of court inconsistent with his testimony at the trial, the jury may look to such facts as "tending to impeach" the witness;⁷ or that the testimony of an impeached witness may be disregarded unless corroborated;⁸ or that evidence of contra-

6. State v. Sutfin, 22 W. Va. 771. See also McCasland v. Kimberlin, 100 Ind. 121, where it was held that when an attempt has been made to impeach a witness, the jury are properly told that if he gave a fair, candid, and honest statement they should not disregard his testimony.

7. Smith v. State, 142 Ind. 288; Harvis v. State, 96 Ala. 24.

In this last case the court said: "Evidence which goes to show that a witness has made statements out of court, or on a former investigation of the case before the coroner or a committing magistrate, which are inconsistent with his testimony as adduced at the trial, tends, as a matter of law, to impeach his veracity. This, indeed, is the sole ground upon which such evidence is admissible, and if it involved no such tendency it would not be competent. Notwithstanding such tendency, the jury may still believe the witness. Whether they do or not is a question for them alone. The court cannot say to them that the witness is or is not thereby impeached; to do so would be an invasion of their exclusive province. But to charge them merely that certain evidence tends to impeachment, or that certain other evidence tends to sustain the witness, or that there is evidence tending in both directions, where such is the case, is not an invasion of their prerogatives, and does not take away from them the right to reach any possible conclusion in the premises, but leaves them free to arrive at what they regard as a just result, after considering all the tendencies of the evidence bearing on the point, and adopting some of these tendencies as leading to the real facts, and discarding others which point away from the real facts as they find them to be upon the whole evidence."

In Miller v. People, 39 Ill. 463, the dictory statements made out of court to impeach a witness is regarded by the law as uncertain and somewhat unreliable.¹ Whether or not the court is bound to give a cautionary instruction as to this class of evidence, does not seem to be well settled. There are some decisions which hold that such an instruction should be given.² Others hold that it is not error for the court to instruct as to the effect of the impeaching evidence on the credibility of the witness where no instruction on that question is asked,³ while others hold that it would not be necessary or even proper for the court to give such a charge, unless under extraordinary or peculiar circumstances.⁴

following instruction was approved: "In determining the guilt or innocence of the defendants the jury are to consider the entire evidence in the case, but they are at liberty to disregard the statements of such witnesses (if any there be) as have been successfully impeached either by direct contradiction or by proof of general bad character, unless the statements of such witnesses have been corroborated by other evidence which has not been impeached."

Where a question was asked the defendant as to whether or not he was serving a term of imprisonment for petit larceny upon a certain day, simply to contradict his statement that he was working for his father on the day named, an instruction that "the defendant here admits that he has been convicted of petit larceny. As to how much credit such a man is entitled to, is for you to determine," is a violation of the rule that it is the exclusive province of the jury to weigh the evidence and find the facts; and of section 1847 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of a witness. People v. Murray, 86 Cal. 31.

1. State v. Roberts, 63 Vt. 139.

2. In State v. Davis, 78 N. Car. 433, it was held that where a witness is impeached it is the duty of the court to guide the minds of the jury to the application of the impeaching evidence.

In Henderson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 433, it was held that where a verdict depends upon the evidence of the prosecuting witness alone, and he is proved to have made different statements out of court, the jury should be instructed as to the nature and application of the evidence as a part of the law.

In Wolfé v. State, 25 Tex. App. 709, it was held that under the peculiar facts of the case, a charge which in enumerating the matters and things to which the jury might look in passing upon the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight to be given to their evidence, omitted any reference to the effect of impeachment, was erroneous.

3. Smith v. Page, 72 Ga. 539; Stevens v. Central R., etc., Co., 80 Ga. 19; Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank v. Masonic Hall, 62 Ga. 272; Thomas v. State, 95 Ga. 484; Sullivan v. State, 75 Wis. 650; State v. Kirkpatrick, 63 Iowa 554. In the last case it was said that the impeachment of a witness does not constitute a defense, but merely relates to the credibility to be given to the testimony, and a failure to instruct as to the effect of an effort to impeach does not constitute a failure to state the issues in the case.

Modes of Impeachment. — Where the court charges correctly as to how the jury shall deal with evidence tending to impeach witnesses, and as to the effect of the same, failure to charge the statutory methods of impeachment, in the absence of request, will not operate to reverse. Lewis v. State, 91 Ga. 168.

4. Thurmond v. State, 27 Tex. App. 371, in which the court further says that the rule announced in Henderson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 432, "has never been enforced indiscriminately, and its correctness as a general one is, to say the least of it, questioned in Rider v. State, 26 Tex. App. 334." In the last mentioned case we find this statement: "There was no such impeachment of the witness as required of the court an instruction upon that matter. If such charge is required it is only in those cases where the witness has been properly impeached as to his truth and veracity. Henderson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 432. There was but one of the state's witnesses thus attempted to be impeached, and he was attempted to be

c. INTEREST, RELATIONSHIP, ETC. — (1) In General. — It is proper to instruct that the accused is a competent witness for himself, and that the jury must consider his testimony¹ and give it such weight as they believe it is entitled to,² and no more;³ that the jury are under no legal obligations to believe the testimony of the accused, but may disregard it if not convinced of its truth;⁴ and that the jury may take into consideration the fact that the defendant's testimony has been contradicted.⁵ So the accused is entitled to an instruction that the fact that he is the defendant is not of itself sufficient to impeach his testimony as evidence.⁶

(2) Instructions that Jury "May" Take This into Consideration. — Except in two states⁷ it is well settled that the trial court may, in both civil and criminal cases, instruct the jury that they are authorized to take into consideration the interest of the party or the relationship of the witness testifying to the party in interest, in determining his credibility.⁸

impeached by one single witness only, which is not sufficient nor satisfactory for such a purpose."

6. State v. Metcalf, 17 Mont. 417.

7. In Kentucky and Mississippi such an instruction would probably not be authorized, at least in a criminal case. In Kentucky it has been held that "the court had no right to direct attention to the interest of any witnesses in the result or character of statements made by them, the jury being the sole judges of the weight of the evidence and of the credibility of the witnesses." Wright v. Com., 85 Ky. 123.

In Mississippi it has been held error to instruct the jury that in weighing the defendant's testimony they "should consider the interest he has in the result of the same, and they may disregard it altogether." In this case the court said: "A defendant has the right to submit his testimony to the jury to be judged of by it, uninfluenced by any suggestions of its probable falsity or an authorization to the jury to throw it aside as unworthy of belief because of the strong temptation to the defendant to swear falsely. There is little danger that juries will be unduly influenced by the testimony of defendants in criminal cases. They do not need any cautioning against too ready credence to the exculpation furnished by one on trial for a felony. The accused should be allowed to exercise his right to testify, unimpaired by any suggestions calculated to detract from its value in the estimation of the jury." Buckley v. State, 62 Miss. 707.

In Woods v. State, 67 Miss. 575, an instruction practically the same as the above was condemned. In Townsend v. State, (Miss. 1892), 12 So. Rep. 209, the report does not show what the instructions given were, but the court says: "The two instructions for the state are clearly erroneous. They fall squarely under the condemnation of this court pronounced in Buckley v. State, 62 Miss. 705, on a similar instruction." In the two first cases the court, in directing attention to the interest of the defendant, said that the court "should" instead of "may" consider the interest of the defendant in determining his credibility; but it seems clearly apparent from the quotation from Buckley v. State, supra, that the instructions would have been condemned if the word "may" instead of "should" had been used.

Not a Violation of Rule Against Singling Out Witness. — Such an instruction does not violate the rule against singling out witnesses for comment; ¹ but it is not proper to give instructions as to the interest of a witness on one side without also applying the same test to interested witnesses on the other side. This would be obnoxious to the rule mentioned. ²

In Criminal Cases. — The following instructions in criminal cases have been approved: "In case of the defendant you have the right to take into consideration the great interest he has in your verdict." State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 35. That the defendants, having become witnesses in their own behalf, are subject to the same rules as other witnesses, and that their interest and the contradiction of their testimony by other witnesses may be taken into consideration in determining their credibility. Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571. "The fact that such witness is specially interested in the result of the action, or of your deliberations, may be taken into account by you." Faulkner v. Territory, 6 N. Mex. 464. That their [the defendants'] interest in the result of the trial is a matter proper to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining what weight ought to be given to their testimony. Haines v. Territory, 3 Wyoming 167. That "the jury are instructed that by the statutes of this state the defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf, but the fact that he is a witness testifying in his own behalf may be considered by the jury in determining the credibility of his testimony." State v. Maguire, 69 Mo. 197. That the jury, in weighing the testimony of the defendant's wife, may take her relationship to the defendant into consideration. State v. Parker, 39 Mo. App. 116.

In Civil Cases. — "It is said that some of these witnesses are interested in or in the employ of the boom company, and you are to consider that circumstance in weighing your testimony. You have a right to do that, gentlemen, and if you think any circumstance of that kind has operated upon their judgment, so that they have not been able to form an impartial judgment, you must consider their testimony for what it is worth." McDonnell v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 Mich. 61.

Instructing that Jury May Disbelieve on That Ground Alone. — It has been held error to refuse an instruction that the jury "have the right to disbelieve the evidence of any interested witness, upon no other ground than the fact of interest." Hunter v. State, 29 Fla. 486.

(3) Instructions that Jury "Should" Take This into Consideration — (a) Jurisdictions Where Practice Approved. — The next question which arises in this connection is not so well settled. It is this: Is it competent for the trial judge to use the word "should" instead of "may" in giving such an instruction? The weight of authority, it is believed, both in civil and criminal cases, holds that it is not objectionable for the trial court to charge that the jury "should" take into consideration the interest in the result of the trial of the person testifying, in determining what weight shall be given to his testimony.¹

said that the instruction asked by the appellant "to the effect that the jury might take into consideration the plaintiff's interest in the result of the suit was properly refused, because, in directing the jury to apply the test of interest in weighing the testimony, it singled out the plaintiff, whereas the same test was applicable to other witnesses in the case."

In State v. Cook, 84 Mo. 40, the court by Martin, C., adverts to the common-law disqualification of witnesses in criminal cases from testifying, and states the provisions of the Missouri statutes removing this disqualification, and prohibiting comments on the defendant's failure to testify. In alluding to these statutes the court says: "They unquestionably regard the accused on trial as occupying an attitude materially different from that of all other witnesses in the case; in disabling the state from calling him as a witness. * * * If the attitude of the accused when he takes the witness stand is in truth different from that of all other witnesses, according to our laws, I am at a loss to perceive any error in the court so treating him, and in reminding the jury of such undoubted fact. This, I conceive, the court can do without subjecting itself to the criticism of singling out a witness in its instructions for the purpose of throwing distrust upon his testimony. * * *

The fact of which the jury is thus reminded is one which they ought to consider. * * * The instructions approved in the foregoing cases constitute nothing more than a prudent reminder of this duty. It is upon no other construction they can be interpreted as having any point or meaning, for they assert in words merely that the jury is at liberty to consider a certain fact which in its nature and tendency bears upon the credibility of the accused when testifying in his own behalf. Why should the court refer to this important and material fact, distinguishing the accused from all other witnesses, unless it intended that they should not overlook but remember it in their deliberations? The instruction complained of in this case only performs

(b) Jurisdictions Where Practice Condemned. — There are, however, jurisdictions in which this form of instruction has been condemned, and it is held that as to the credibility of all classes of witnesses other than those to whom an artificial credibility is fixed by statute, and as to the weight of every species of evidence except such as by law is given a special weight, the jury are to be the judges, and the exclusive judges, and the court should not by its charge, to any extent, interfere with their prerogative.¹

the same office in language slightly changed. In other words, the object and import of the instructions heretofore approved by this court will be found clearly expressed in the instruction complained of. It certainly does not, any more than the previous instructions, assume to declare how the fact shall be considered, whether favorably or unfavorably to the accused. It simply declares to them that they should consider it as bearing on the credibility of the accused. As it is a fact which in our laws, as well as in the nature of things, bears upon his credibility, I see no error in telling the jury that they should consider it thus, in its true tendency and light."

The Accused in Criminal Cases. — An instruction that the jury "shall" instead of "may" take into consideration the interest of the accused as affecting his credibility, is not erroneous. State v. Renfrow, 111 Mo. 589.

So it has been held proper to charge: "Above all, you are to take into consideration the fact that he is the accused in the case; and, taking those facts into consideration, you are to give to his statements in court, or any statements made by him out of court, such effect and such force as you think they justly should have." State v. Fiske, 63 Conn. 392. So the following instruction, or one substantially equivalent, has been approved in a number of cases: That "in addition to noticing his manner and the probability of his statements, taken in connection with the evidence in the cause, you should consider his relation and situation under which he gives his testimony, the consequences to him relating from the result of this trial, and all the inducements and temptations which would ordinarily influence a person in his situation." * * * If convincing, and carrying with it a belief in its truth, act upon it; if not, you have a right to reject it." People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 192; People

v. Morrow, 60 Cal. 142; People v. Wheeler, 65 Cal. 77; State v. Streeter, 20 Nev. 403.

Testimony of Relation. — It is proper to charge the jury to take into consideration the fact that a person testifying in the defendant's behalf is his wife. State v. Young, 99 Mo. 666; State v. Lingle, 128 Mo. 537. So it is proper to charge that "the jury should consider and decide whether such relationship [of any of the witnesses to the complaining witness or defendant] acted upon the witnesses, or either of them, to make false statements in their evidence, or whether such relationship influenced said witnesses and swerved them from the truth." State v. Hogard, 12 Minn. 293. See also Rogers v. King, 12 Ga. 229.

Testimony of Prosecuting Witness. — A charge may caution the jury to consider the relation the prosecuting witness bore to the accused in determining what weight to give the testimony of such witness. People v. Herrick, 59 Mich. 563.

Testimony of Agents or Employees. — An instruction that if the jury find it necessary to consider the testimony given by the agents or employees of railroad companies they "should bear in mind the interest" such agents or employees have in protecting their company and themselves, was held erroneous as suggesting that suspicion attached to their testimony. "We think it is not within the province of a court to instruct a jury, or suggest to them, that any suspicion attaches to the testimony of agents or servants of a corporation or individual by reason of their employment, or that they have any such interest as requires them to be dealt with differently from other witnesses." Marquette, etc., R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 53.

(4) Instructions Tending to Discredit Witness. — A trial judge must not make hostile comments on the testimony of the accused,¹ or intimate that he does not think the testimony of the accused is entitled to much weight.² So it is not proper to instruct that the weight to be given to the testimony of the parties depends upon the interest each may have in the result of the suit;³ or that the testimony of an interested witness must be

Whitsitt, 67 Tex. 673; Unruh v. State, 105 Ind. 118; Woollen v. Whitacre, 91 Ind. 502.

The Rule in Indiana. — In Indiana there seems to be considerable conflict of authority on this question. In Unruh v. State, 105 Ind. 118, it was held that an instruction that the jury "should" consider the interest of parties and other witnesses in relationship to the parties in weighing their testimony was erroneous as invading the province of the jury, and as indicating to them as matter of law that the testimony of such witnesses was entitled to less weight than that of others. To the same effect is Woollen v. Whitacre, 91 Ind. 502; Lynch v. Bates, 139 Ind. 210; Bird v. State, 107 Ind. 154; Hartford v. State, 96 Ind. 46.

On the other hand, the decision of Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467, is clearly in conflict with the above decisions. In this case the following instruction was approved: "In determining the weight to be given the testimony of the different witnesses, you should take into account the interest or want of interest they have in the case, their manner on the stand, the probability or improbability of their testimony, with all other circumstances before you which can aid you in weighing their testimony. The defendant has testified as a witness, and you should weigh his testimony as you weigh that of any other witness. Consider his interest in the result of the case, his manner, and the probability or improbability of his testimony."

To the same effect is Deal v. State, 140 Ind. 354. This seems to be the latest decision on this question. In attempting to distinguish this case from Unruh v. State, 105 Ind. 118, the court says: "The instruction condemned in Unruh v. State, 105 Ind. 117, related to certain admissions of the parties which had been put in evidence. The court told the jury, in substance, that admissions of a certain described character would be entitled to very great weight; and, on the other hand, that certain other described admissions should have but little reliance placed upon them. Such an instruction was held to be an invasion of the jury's exclusive right to judge of the credibility and weight of evidence." It is true that the court in such decision condemned the instruction mentioned, but it also condemned the following instruction: "The relatrix and defendant have testified, and they are both interested in the event of the suit. This fact should be considered in weighing their evidence, in connection with the other facts and circumstances which I have indicated apply to witnesses generally." In this case the court said: "We think that this instruction is also erroneous. It very clearly discredits the parties named, because they are interested in the event of the suit." The decision of Deal v. State, 140 Ind. 354, seems to show that the court is somewhat lacking in candor. It is a palpable attempt to evade the force of the earlier decisions, for it is impossible that they could have overlooked this point.

When Harmless Error. — An instruction that "the credit and weight that should be attached to the testimony of a witness depends upon his * * * disinterestedness in the result of the suit and his freedom from bias or prejudice" will not operate to reverse unless it is shown to be more prejudicial to one party than to the other. Hess v. Lowrey, 122 Ind. 225.

disregarded unless corroborated,¹ or may be believed or disbelieved according as it is or is not corroborated;² or that the evidence of parties and their relations is not entitled to so much weight as that of disinterested witnesses;³ or that the jury may disregard the testimony of the accused, because he is the accused, if they consider that reason sufficient;⁴ or that an important witness was "apparently interested;"⁵ or that a witness's interest "does" affect his credit;⁶ or that "one interested will not, usually, be as honest and candid as one not so;"⁷ or that if witnesses are otherwise equally credible the testimony of the one having the greater interest would be entitled to the lesser weight;⁸ or that the testimony of a witness is to be distrusted because of his interest in the result.⁹ But it has been held (erroneously) it

In this case it is said: "Such testimony, just as any other, must be submitted to the jury, and it is for that body to say how far the interest of the witnesses giving it shall affect its credibility." To the same effect is Coloritype Co. v. Williams, 78 Fed. Rep. 450.

"To Leave Parties as It Finds Them." — Where the plaintiff testifies one way and the defendant another, it is error to charge the jury to leave the parties as it finds them unless other evidence corroborates the one or the other. The jury have a right to believe one and discredit the other. McLean v. Clark, 47 Ga. 24.

Contradictory Statements by Accused. — The court may instruct that if the jury believe that the defendant has made statements as to material matters, at other times and places, at variance with what he stated upon the witness stand, "then you are instructed that these facts tend to impeach either the recollection or truthfulness of the witness, and you should consider these facts in estimating the weight which ought to be given to his testimony." *Faulkner v. It is error to charge that "the jury have the right, and may take the liberty, of disregarding the witnesses of the defendant if they consider them interested, even though they be not contradicted or impeached." Berzevitz v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 19 N. Y. App. Div. 309.

"If the proposition be true, it is not a legal presumption, but matter of fact, of which the jury were the exclusive judges, and concerning which the court could not, without going out of its province, undertake to instruct them." Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420.

Interest of Expert Witness. — An attempt in an instruction to cast discredit upon a medical witness because he had attended the trial from a neighboring state to testify in behalf of a defendant, with the expectation that his expenses would be paid by the defendant or others for him, the defendant being a stranger to such witness, is improper. *Bradley v. is believed) that it is proper to charge that "the law regards with suspicion the testimony of near relations." ¹

Test as to the Credibility of Interested and Disinterested Witnesses Not the Same. — While an instruction that the testimony of an interested witness is subject to the same test as the testimony of any other witness has been permitted to pass unchallenged,² and an instruction that the jury are not bound to treat the testimony of the defendant the same as that of other witnesses has been condemned,³ it has been held proper to refuse an instruction that it is the duty of the jury to weigh, examine, and take the defendant's testimony into consideration "the same as it does the testimony of all the other witnesses in the case," ⁴ and an instruction that the jury must give the defendant's testimony the same consideration they would that of any other witness.⁵ So an instruc-

1. State v. Nash, 8 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 35. To the same effect is State v. Byers, 100 N. Car. 512, where it was held that where a prisoner and his relatives, or an associate in the crime, testify on behalf of the prisoner, the law directs the jury to scrutinize their testimony carefully, because of their interest in the result, and the judge may so caution the jury. But in Wiseman v. Cornish, 8 Jones L. (N. Car.) 218, a failure of the court to do so was held not assignable as error.

Transactions with a Deceased Party. — The court may instruct the jury that they should receive with circumspection and caution testimony by a party to the suit as to conversations and transactions with one deceased, because of the impossibility of producing negative testimony. Meyer v. Blake-more, 54 Miss. 575.

2. People v. Petmecky, 99 N. Y. 415. See also State v. Sterrett, 71 Iowa 388.

3. Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 412. The reasoning of the court on this question was as follows: "The language of the statute is: 'No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any criminal case or proceeding by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his having been convicted of any crime,' thus expressly placing the defendant and all other witnesses, as respects competency, on an equality; 'but,' the statute proceeds, 'such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility;' so, also, in this respect as in others, subjecting his evidence to like tests, for the purpose of determining the amount of reliance to be placed upon it, as those to which the evidence of other witnesses is subject; for, in all cases, the interest or bias which may sway a witness to pervert the truth is to be taken into consideration, for the purpose of determining what credit shall be given his evidence. * * * It cannot, therefore, be true that the evidence given by the defendant charged with crime is not to be treated the same as the evidence of other witnesses. It could not even be true, as a universal proposition, that, as matter of law, it is not to have the same effect as the evidence of other witnesses. Many times it certainly cannot have that effect, but there are times when it can and should, and of this the jury are made the judges."

4. People v. Cowgill, 93 Cal. 596. See also McKee v. State, 82 Ala. 32, where it was held proper to refuse an instruction that the jury must give the defendant's testimony the same consideration they would give to that of any other witnesses.

5. People v. Calvin, 60 Mich. 114; McKee v. State, 82 Ala. 33, on the ground that it is for the jury to decide what weight they will give to the testimony of any witness. To the same effect, see Childress v. State, 86 Ala. 77. See also Bulliner v. People, 95 Ill. 406. In this case the defendants asked an instruction that "under the law the evidence of the defendants is just as proper for your consideration in determining their guilt or innocence as the evidence of other witnesses." The court modified the instruction by striking out the words, "as the evidence of other witnesses," and adding, "and should receive such weight as you think tion that the accused does "not stand in the same position as a witness who is entirely disinterested" has been held not erroneous.¹

Conclusion Deducible from Authorities. — The conclusion which may be drawn from these decisions is that the weight of authority and of reason is against placing the testimony of interested and disinterested witnesses on the same footing in giving instructions.

(5) Unsworn Statement of Accused. — The unsworn statement of the accused of matters of defense which some statutes authorize, if not technically evidence in the broadest acceptation of the word, is "in the nature of evidence," and is to be weighed in connection with all the evidence in determining the issue of guilt or innocence;² and in instructing as to such statement the court should lay down no arbitrary or artificial rule by which to estimate the credit to which it is due.³ Accordingly it is error to charge that the jury should not receive such statement unless corroborated,⁴ or that such statement would warrant them in setting aside unimpeached sworn evidence.⁵ So it is error to charge that the defendant's statement, to avail him, must be in those parts that are in conflict with the evidence in material matters.⁶ On the other hand a charge that the defendant's statement "is to be given no less credence on account of its not being made under oath" is properly refused,⁷ for this would be an unwarranted invasion of the province of the jury. It is, of course, proper to charge that the statement of the prisoner is entitled to such weight as the jury should think it worthy.⁸ And it is proper to charge that the jury may believe the defendant's statement in it entitled to." The reviewing court held that this was entirely unobjectionable.

1. People v. Ferry, 84 Cal. 31. In this case the court, in charging as to interested witnesses, said: "They have a right to be heard, and have their testimony submitted to the consideration of twelve men, who are supposed, from their experience in the affairs of mankind, to give it proper weight and no more; but they do not stand in the same position as a witness who is entirely disinterested. The time has not yet come when men who confess themselves guilty of crime are to stand alongside of and made equal to men who have lived upright and honest lives. But the value of their testimony is to be entirely estimated by you." The court held that though this charge was not erroneous, it was on the verge of error. See also opinion of Martin, C., in State v. Cook, 84 Mo. 40, in which a very strong argument is made against placing the testimony of interested and disinterested witnesses on the same footing.

preference to the sworn testimony in the case, if the jury believe it to be entitled to more weight;¹ or to call the jury's attention to the fact that the statement is not made under oath and that no penalty attaches to the accused for not telling the truth.²

d. MANNER IN TESTIFYING, BIAS, ETC. — The court may properly instruct the jury that they may consider the demeanor of the witnesses in testifying on the stand,³ but a failure to give such an instruction is not error in the absence of a request for a charge to that effect.⁴ There is some conflict of authority as to whether it is proper to instruct that the jury may consider

v. People, 22 Mich. 226; Poppell v. State, 71 Ga. 277.

1. People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 216; Poppell v. State, 71 Ga. 277; Harrison v. State, 83 Ga. 129.

The jury are not precluded from considering the prisoner's statement throughout by instructing them that the statute allows them to believe it on material matters in preference to the sworn testimony; such an instruction is not objectionable on the ground that it instructs the jury that the prisoner's statement could not avail him unless in conflict with the sworn testimony, and as denying him the benefit of his statement if sustained or corroborated by the witnesses. Harrison v. State, 83 Ga. 129.

2. Poppell v. State, 71 Ga. 276.

In charging the jury on the effect of the prisoner's statement, nothing is better to be used than the language of the statute. The statute says that the statement is to have such force only as the jury think proper to give it. Doubtless the object of the statement is to enable the jury better to understand the testimony; still, the effect which they think proper to give it is the effect it is to have. Of course the jury should not lose sight of the terms of their oath. They swear to give a true verdict "according to the evidence," and this they should do. Where the evidence and the statement conflict, the latter should yield to the former. As a general rule, sworn evidence must be more trustworthy than the prisoner's bare word. Brown v. State, 60 Ga. 212.

"In connection with all the other proofs in the case, you have a right to take into consideration the statement of the prisoner, and give it such weight and credit as you think it entitled to, under all the facts and circumstances of the case. And you may even give it more weight than the sworn testimony of unimpeached witnesses, if, under all the facts and circumstances of the case, you honestly believe it entitled to such weight; but in order to find what weight you ought to give to his statement, you should consider whether it is consistent with the other facts which may have been proven to your satisfaction, and whether his statement is corroborated or not by other proofs, facts, or circumstances of the case.' Taken together, we think this charge is not open to the objection urged, and that it laid down no arbitrary or artificial rule by which to estimate the credit due to the prisoner's statement." People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 226.

Instances. — The following instructions have been approved: Where witnesses, upon a trial, exhibit bias, feeling, and partiality, the presiding judge may with propriety comment upon such deportment, and point it out as a circumstance calculated to affect their credit. State v. Nat, 6 Jones L. (N. Car.) 114. So it is proper to instruct that the jury may consider the apparent candor and intelligence of the witnesses and other matters of like character, so far as they are in evidence or observable from the demeanor of the witnesses upon the stand, Young v. Gentis, 7 Ind. App. 199; or that the jury may judge of the weight to be given to a witness's testimony from his manner of testifying, Brown v. Stacy, 5 Ark. 403.

the accused's conduct or demeanor while testifying. According to one decision this is proper.¹ According to another decision, where the defendant does not take the stand it is error to instruct the jury that they may consider his conduct and demeanor during the trial,² and a later decision in the same state extends this doctrine to cases where the defendant takes the stand in his own behalf.³

e. Accomplice Testimony — (1) Introductory Statement. — In a number of jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a conviction cannot be sustained on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.⁴ But in the absence of statutes the rule is well-nigh universal that a conviction on the testimony of an accomplice, uncorroborated, is legal.⁵ The rule requiring the Contra. — Shelly v. State, 95 Tenn. 152.

"No one can seriously doubt that a conviction is legal, though it proceed on the evidence of an accomplice only. Judges, in their discretion, will advise a jury not to believe an accomplice unless he is confirmed." Per Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Jones, 2 Campb. 131.

"It is not a rule of law that accomplices must be confirmed in order to render a conviction valid, and it is the duty of the judge to tell the jury that they may act on the unconfirmed testimony of an accomplice." Reg. v. Stubbs, 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 551.

The degree of credit to be given an accomplice is a matter exclusively within the province of the jury; they may, if they see fit, act upon his evidence, even in a capital case, without any confirmation of his statements." U. S. v. Neverson, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 154.

Instance of Instruction Held Proper Under This Rule. — The following instruction has been approved: "The court instructs the jury that it is competent to convict upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, if the jury, weighing the probability of his testimony, think him worthy of belief." Earl v. People, 73 Ill. 333.

evidence of an accomplice to be corroborated is one of practice, not of law.¹

(2) Instructing Jury to View with Caution — (a) Propriety of So Instructing. — Whether or not it is necessary, to sustain a conviction, that the testimony of an accomplice be corroborated, it is always proper to instruct that such evidence should be received with great caution and carefully scrutinized,² and that, too, although the evidence to show that the witness is an accomplice is very slight,³ and it is the almost universal custom so to receive it.⁴

(b) Necessity of So Instructing. — In some decisions it is said that it is the duty of the court so to instruct the jury.⁵ So in some

In a case where all the evidence against the prisoner was the uncorroborated testimony of accomplices, an instruction that such evidence is unsafe on account of its suspicious source, and that the jury had better acquit, but that the jury have the power to convict on such testimony, and if from the whole evidence they are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, their verdict should be guilty, is unexceptionable. Com. v. Price, 10 Gray (Mass.) 472, 71 Am. Dec. 668.

Exceptions — Rule in West Virginia. — In West Virginia it is improper for the court to give any instruction whatever to the jury as to the weight of accomplice testimony. State v. Betsall, 11 W. Va. 704.

Where Accomplice is Called by Defendant. — In a criminal prosecution an instruction that "the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust" was error where the accomplice had been called as a witness by the defendant and not by the prosecution. Such an instruction tends to discredit a witness for the defendant, and charges the jury with respect to matters of fact. People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171; People v. Bonney, 98 Cal. 278.

Charge that Jury Are Bound to Accept Testimony of Accomplice. — An instruction that the jury are bound to accept and credit testimony of an accomplice, either standing alone or more or less corroborated, should not be given. It is their province to determine whether he is to be credited at all, and if so, to what extent. Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 174.

5. State v. Dana, 59 Vt. 614; State v. Stebbins, 29 Conn. 473; U. S. v. Sykes, 58 Fed. Rep. 1004.

The source of this evidence is so corrupt that it is always looked upon with suspicion and jealousy, and is deemed unsafe to rely upon without confirmation, hence the courts have considered it their duty to advise a jury to acquit where there is no evidence other than the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 398; Rex v. Durham, 1 Leach C. C. 478.

jurisdictions a neglect to do so, especially when requested, has been held reversible error.¹ But in others it has been held that if this is error, it is not sufficient ground to reverse.² So in some jurisdictions error cannot be assigned of a failure to charge as to accomplice testimony in the absence of a request.³

Nothing to Show Witness Accomplice. — Of course, where there is no evidence tending to show that a witness is an accomplice, it is unnecessary to charge as to the law governing the testimony of accomplices.⁴

No Testimony by Accomplice. — So no instruction as to the effect of accomplice testimony should be given where the accomplice has not testified.⁵

(3) Advising Acquittal Where Testimony Is Uncorroborated —
(a) In General. — It is always proper to advise a jury to acquit

"It is a practice which deserves all the reverence of law, that judges have uniformly told juries that they ought not to pay any respect to the testimony of an accomplice, unless the accomplice is corroborated in some material circumstance." Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106, 34 E. C. L. 314.

1. State v. Woolard, 111 Mo. 248; State v. Patterson, 52 Kan. 335; Hoyt v. People, 140 Ill. 588. See also State v. Jones, 64 Mo. 394. In this case the defendant asked the following instruction: "The testimony of parties aiding, assisting, encouraging, and abetting the crime is admissible; yet their evidence, when not corroborated by the testimony of others not implicated in the crime, as to matters material to the issue, ought to be received with great caution by the jury, and they ought to be fully satisfied of its truth before they should convict defendant on such testimony." The court said that this instruction should have been given.

2. Cheatham v. State, 67 Miss. 335; Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48.

3. State v. McLane, 15 Nev. 345; Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527; State v. Rook, 42 Kan. 419.

Thus a defendant who claims that a witness against him was an accomplice, and must be corroborated, has the right to have the court instruct the jury what constitutes an accomplice; but if he fails to ask such an instruction he cannot complain of the court's failure to give it. Carroll v. State, 45 Ark. 539.

4. Pitner v. State, 23 Tex. App. 366; Lawrence v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 530; Kerrigan v. State, 21 Tex. App. 487; Brown v. State, 6 Tex. App. 286; Smith v. State, Effect of Knowledge or Silence on Necessity for Charge. — Mere knowledge on the part of a witness that the defendant committed the crime does not render such witness an accomplice so as to require corroboration of his testimony; and to require or warrant an instruction on accomplice testimony there must be some evidence of a witness's complicity in the crime for which the defendant is being tried. Smith v. State, 28 Tex. App. 315.

Where, on a murder trial, it appeared that certain eye-witnesses of the murder were foreigners who did not know the English language, and were several hundred miles away from their homes when the crime was committed, it was held that the mere fact that they remained silent as to the murder did not warrant an instruction on accomplice testimony. O'Connor v. State, 28 Tex. App. 288.

5. Wagoner v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 896.

Refusal to Charge that No Presumption Arises from Silence of Accomplice, Error. — It is error to refuse to instruct that the refusal of alleged conspirators to testify when placed on the witness stand should not be considered by the jury in determining the question of guilt or innocence, and that the jury should not presume therefrom that the testimony, if given, would be against the defendants. People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494.

where the testimony of an accomplice is not corroborated.¹ But while this is true, it is very generally held that it is not ground of reversal for the court to neglect or refuse so to do,² although some courts have said that it is the duty of the trial judge to give such an instruction.³ The majority of the decisions take the view that the giving of such an instruction is a rule of practice merely and not of law.

(b) Under Statutes Making Corroboration Necessary to Conviction. — In some jurisdictions, as before stated, a conviction cannot be based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and it is, of course, proper so to instruct;⁴ and a refusal to give an instruc-

In *State v. 3. McNealley v. State, (Wyoming 1894) 36 Pac. Rep. 827.

4. Bernhard v. State, 76 Ga. 613.

Defining Corroborating Testimony. — The charge need not define the term "corroborating testimony," as its meaning is plain and needs no definition. Hozier v. State, 6 Tex. App. 501.

What Corroboration Sufficient. — The following instruction has been approved: "The corroboration ought to be sufficient to satisfy the jury of the truth of the evidence of the accomplice. If the jury are satisfied that he speaks the truth in some material part of his testimony, in which they see him confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, this may be a ground for their believing that he also speaks the truth in other parts as to which there may be no confirmation; but the corroboration ought to be as to some fact or facts connecting the prisoner with the offense, the truth or falsehood of which would go to prove or disprove the offense charged against the prisoner." Jackson v. State, 64 Ga. 345.

An instruction on the law of accomplice testimony should tell the jury that the corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice should go so far as to tion to this effect,¹ or to charge that such testimony should be viewed with great caution and distrust,² has been held reversible error.

Whether or Not It Is Necessary So to Charge in the Absence of a Request is not so well settled. In some states it is necessary for the court to instruct as to the law governing the effect of accomplice testimony, whether or not any request for such instruction has been made.³

identify the person of the prisoner against whom the accomplice testified. State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395; State v. Pratt, 98 Mo. 482.

So an instruction in regard to the testimony of an accomplice is faulty which fails to explain to the jury what is meant by the words "matters material to the issue," where the jury were told that, as to such matters, there must be corroboration. State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395.

Declaration of Co-conspirator Made Before Trial.—Where the declarations of one conspirator not on trial, and made before trial, have been admitted in evidence, it is proper for the court to instruct the jury to disregard them unless the conspiracy is satisfactorily proved. *People v. Code of Civil Procedure, § 2016, providing that the court shall instruct the jury in a criminal prosecution, "on all proper occasions," that "the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust," does not require the court to charge the jury with respect to matters of fact. *People v. Unnecessary that Evidence Should Show Conclusively that Witness Is an Accomplice.—Although it is not conclusively shown that the witness was neither a principal, an accomplice, nor an accessory, if it does show a state of facts which tends strongly to prove that he was an accessory, and was endeavoring by his acts, declarations, and conduct after the homicide to screen and shield the defendant, and by assuming to be the guilty party himself, thereby enable the defendant to evade arrest or trial for the offense, the court should charge the law with regard to the necessity of corroboration. Hunnicut v. State, 18 Tex. App. 522. So one jointly indicted with a defendant on trial, and who testifies upon a condition that all prosecutions concerning the affair of which he is called to testify be dismissed, is considered an accomplice, and in such case the defendant is entitled to an instruction that the jury shall not convict upon the unsupported testimony of such accomplice; and it is so held although the defendant denies the fact of his guilt. Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260.

Evidence Sufficient to Warrant an Instruction as to Accomplice Testimony.—In a trial for attempting to produce an abortion, the female's father was a witness for the prosecution, and testified that the defendant informed him of his daughter's pregnancy, and suggested that he (the defendant) could give her a drug that would remove it, whereupon he (the witness) replied: "All right; anything to save my child." It was held that this evidence necessitated a proper instruction on the corroboration of his testimony required by the statute. Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 237.

What Charges as to Necessity for Corroboration Sufficient.—An instruction that the jury could not convict the de-

But in one state it has been held that a failure to charge that the defendant cannot be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not erroneous, unless a request has been made therefor;¹ and in another that the court need not so charge without request, where the state does not rely wholly on the accomplice testimony to convict.²

(4) Instructions as to Who Are Accomplices. — The question as to whether or not a witness is an accomplice should in general be left to the jury.³ But where a witness is admitted to testify solely in the character of an accomplice, his guilt is a conceded fact, and the court may properly assume in charging that he is an accomplice.⁴ Even under these circumstances it is not error to submit the question to the jury, but great care should be taken to instruct clearly and fully as to what constitutes an accomplice.⁵

f. EXPERT WITNESSES — (1) Weight to Be Given Testimony. — In giving cautionary instructions as to the weight to be given to expert testimony, the court must be careful not to disparage such testimony, and on the other hand, nothing should be said to lead the jury to attach undue weight to it.⁶ The evidence of expert fendant accused of receiving stolen goods upon the testimony of the thief, unless corroborated by other evidence, which, in itself, without the aid of the testimony of the thief, "tends to impute" to the defendant a knowledge that the goods were stolen, is not erroneous because of the expression "tends to impute," instead of "imputes." People v. Ribolsi, 89 Cal. 492. So it has been held that in charging on accomplice testimony it will be sufficient to charge in general terms as to the necessity of corroborating the evidence of an accomplice, where no instruction applying the law to the facts in the case is requested. Lockhart v. State, 29 Tex. App. 35.

1. State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 224.

2. Robinson v. State, 84 Ga. 674.

3. People v. Sansome, 98 Cal. 235; People v. Curlee, 53 Cal. 604.

If there is evidence which strongly tends to show that a witness is an accomplice, an instruction should be given as to the law governing accomplice testimony, and the question whether or not the witness is an accomplice be left to the jury. Ballew v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1896) 34 S. W. Rep. 616.

Improper Assumption. — It is not proper for the court, in a criminal case, to designate the evidence of a witness who is not an acknowledged accomplice, and caution the jury against giving credence to it. Rafferty v. People, 72 Ill. 37.

4. Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260; Zollicoffer v. State, 16 Tex. App. 316.

"When the witness * * * only consents to testify on condition of exemption from prosecution, and is promised that exemption by the representatives of the state, with the consent of the court, we think he is treated as an accomplice by those authorities, and himself consents to assume that character, and must be so regarded by the court in its charge." Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 264.

5. Zollicoffer v. State, 16 Tex. App. 312.

Explanatory Charges as to Who Are Accomplices. — A charge on the subject of accomplices should explain to the jury who are accomplices in the sense requiring corroboration. Myers v. State, 6 Tex. App. 1.

Instruction to Consider Dismissal of Indictment as to Accomplice. — Where the defendant and an accomplice are jointly indicted for murder, and the indictment against the accomplice is dismissed in order that he may testify for the state, it is error to charge the jury that this fact should not be taken into consideration in determining the credibility of the accomplice. Gill v. State, 59 Ark. 422.

witnesses is to be received and treated by the jury precisely as other testimony, and should be tested by the same general rules as the testimony of other witnesses in estimating its value, and such credit and weight should be given to it as the jury may deem it entitled to from all the circumstances, and no more.¹

(2) Instructions Disparaging Testimony. — Accordingly an instruction that expert testimony should be received and weighed with great caution,² or is usually of very little value,³ or that the opinion of experts is entitled to no weight, or to no greater weight than that of persons not allowed to give any opinion,⁴ or that the testimony of witnesses who had better opportunities for observation and acquisition of knowledge on the particular matter in issue is entitled to the greater weight,⁵ is erroneous.⁶

"The evidence of expert witnesses is to be received and treated by the jury precisely as other testimony. Its value may be very great or it may be of little worth. It may be conclusive, or it may be not even persuasive. Its weight will be determined by the character, the capacity, the skill, the opportunities for observation and the state of mind of the experts themselves, as seen and heard and estimated by the jury, and, it should be added, by the nature of the case and all its developed facts." *Louisville, etc., R. Instruction that Opinion Evidence Entitled to Little Weight Properly Refused.

— It is, of course, proper to refuse an instruction that "the expert testimony in this case was uncertain and unreliable, and that but little weight should be given to it." Rivard v. Rivard, (Mich. 1896) 66 N. W. Rep. 681.

6. Expressing Doubt that Expert Testimony Will Aid Jury's Conclusions. — In questions of insanity the knowledge and experience of medical experts is of great value, and where evidence has been given of their observation, experience, and skill, sufficient to enable them to form intelligent opinions, and they have testified to these opinions, it is error to charge the jury as follows: "We question very much whether you will realize much, if any, valuable aid from them in coming to a correct conclusion as regards the responsibility for crime by this prisoner." Pannell v. Com., 86 Pa. St. 260.

Stating that Experts Can Be Employed to Swear on Both Sides of Any Question is prejudicial error. People v. Webster, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 398.

Contrasting Expert Testimony with Textbook Statements. — For the judge to say that a book on farriery which had been read by counsel was entitled to as much authority as a witness who had been examined as an expert in the science of diseases of horses, was a clear violation of the statute forbidding an expression of opinion on the facts. Melvin v. Easley, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 386.

(3) Instructions Giving Undue Weight to Testimony. — On the other hand it is error to charge that the testimony of experts is supposed to be the best that can be furnished,¹ or that their opinions on questions involving science and skill are authoritative, and that in all doubtful cases in which such questions are involved such opinions should control the jury;² or to give an instruction assuming that the testimony of one party's expert witnesses³ is conclusive; or to give a charge which gives too much prominence to the mere skill of the expert, leaving out of view his credibility,⁴ or which gives too much prominence to the mere

Testamentary Capacity — Instructing that Opinion of Testator's Neighbors Was More Weighty than Expert Opinion. —

An instruction that in regard to testamentary capacity the opinions of the testator's neighbors, if they were persons of good common sense, were entitled to more weight than that of expert witnesses, is erroneous. Taylor v. Cox, 153 Ill. 220.

That Evidence of Eye-Witness Weightier than Expert Opinion Proper. —

In Bruner v. Wade, 84 Iowa 698, it was held that where the witness testified that he saw the defendant sign the note, it was not error to instruct that expert testimony as to the handwriting should not overcome the testimony of a credible witness who testified from personal knowledge. So in Buxly v. Buxton, 92 N. Car. 479, it was held proper for the judge to tell the jury that the evidence that the intestate had seen the bond, and admitted that he had executed it, if believed by the jury to be true, was entitled to more weight than the opinions of expert witnesses as to the genuineness of the signature, and that such opinions should be received with caution.

1. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Ryan, 49 Kan. 1. Compare Tinney v. New Jersey Steamboat Co., 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 3, where it was held error to refuse the following instruction: "Considering the extraordinary character of the injuries alleged in this case, and the great difficulty attendant upon their proper investigation, great weight should be given by the jury to the opinion of scientific witnesses accustomed to investigate the causes and effect of injuries to the eye, and a distinction should be made in favor of the opinion of those accustomed to use the most perfect instruments and processes, and who are acquainted with the most recent discoveries of science and most approved methods of treatment and investigation."

2. Humphries v. Johnson, 20 Ind. 190. See also Anthony v. Stinson, 4 Kan. 211, where it was held error for the court to charge that "such testimony [evidence of experts as to personal services] is the guide of the jury in finding the amount justly due, and in this case you must take the testimony of these witnesses and be governed by it."

That the Law Attaches Peculiar Importance to Expert Testimony. — An instruction that the law attaches peculiar importance to the opinion of medical men who have the opportunity of observation upon a question of mental capacity is not an invasion of the province of the jury. Flynt v. Bodenhamer, 80 N. Car. 205. See also State v. Owen, 72 N. Car. 605.

Contrasting Opinions of Experts. — In an action where the testator's mental capacity to make a will was involved, a charge that the opinion of experts who had treated him was entitled to more weight than the opinions of other experts based on hypothetical questions was properly refused. Bever v. Spangler, 93 Iowa 576.

3. Fox v. Peninsular White Lead, etc., Works, 84 Mich. 676.

A charge that experts testifying in the defendant's behalf were, by reason of their employment, entitled to little credit, and that the testimony of experts testifying for the state was entitled to greater weight, was erroneous. Persons v. State, 90 Tenn. 291.

4. Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463. In this case the court charged that "in weighing such testimony it will be proper for you to consider the degree of learning and skill possessed by such witnesses; their capacity to determine, as experts in that branch of knowledge, the probable or actual condition of the experience of the expert, leaving out his opportunities, his aptitude, his skill, and other possible qualifications.¹

Application of Same Rules as with Other Evidence. — It has, however, been held proper to charge that the opinions of medical experts should be considered in connection with all the other evidence, but that the jury are not bound to act upon them to the entire exclusion of other evidence; that the jury should apply the same general rules to the testimony of experts that are applicable to the testimony of other witnesses in determining its weight; that taking into consideration the opinions of experts, and giving them just weight, the jury should determine the matter in issue for themselves.²

(4) Other Instructions. — It is proper to instruct that the jury should not take for granted that the statements contained in the hypothetical questions which have been propounded to the witnesses are true.³ In the absence of a request, it is not error to testator's mind from the facts submitted."

1. Cuneo v. Bessoni, 63 Ind. 524.

Error Cured by Subsequent Instructions.

— "Although the preponderance of the evidence is not always determined by the number of witnesses, still, in a case where a question is to be determined by the testimony of men of great scientific attainments, other things being equal, the greater number would carry greater weight; that is, the testimony of eight or nine such witnesses would be entitled to greater weight than that of two. * * * But in this case it is your province to give such weight to the testimony of the experts, when viewed in connection with all the other evidence in the case, as you think and believe it should receive." This charge was held not to have been erroneous. Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 62 Wis. 443.

Where the Subject under Consideration Is Not One of General Knowledge and Observation, but one of science, upon which no witness not specially qualified as an expert can testify, it is error to instruct that in determining the issue the jury may infer what was the fact from the evidence of the experts, or from such personal knowledge as they may have in relation to matters of this kind. Douglass v. Trask, 77 Me. 36.

2. Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539. See also Guetic v. State, 66 Ind. 107, where the following charge was approved: "The opinions of medical experts are to be considered by you in connection with all the other evidence in the case; but you are not bound to act upon them to the entire exclusion of other testimony. Taking into consideration these opinions, and giving them just weight, you are to determine for yourselves, from the whole evidence, whether the accused was or was not of sound mind, yielding him the benefit of a reasonable doubt, if such arises from the evidence." An instruction in this identical language was given in Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550, and while it was upheld, the court said that it did not regard it as a model worthy of imitation.

3. Guetic v. State, 66 Ind. 107; Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550.

"You are not to take for granted that the statements contained in the hypothetical questions which have been propounded to the witnesses are true. Upon the contrary, you are to carefully scrutinize the evidence, and from that determine what, if any, are not true. Should you find from the evidence that some of the material statements therein contained are not correct, and that they are of such a character as to entirely destroy the reliability of opinions based upon the hypothesis stated, you may attach no weight whatever to the opinions based thereon. You are to determine, from all the evidence, what the real facts are, and whether they are correctly or not stated in the hypothetical question or questions. I need hardly remind you (for it will suggest itself to your own minds) that an opinion based upon an hypothesis wholly incorrectly assumed, or incorrect in its material facts, and to such an extent as

call special attention to the testimony of experts.¹

g. ADMISSIONS AND CONFESSIONS — (1) Instructions as to Admissions of Record. — Either party has a right to an instruction which shall tell the jury what facts are admitted of record.²

(2) View that Court Should Not Caution Against. — In regard to instructions as to verbal admissions and confessions, there is much conflict of authority, but the weight of authority, it is believed, is to the effect that the trial court should not make any statement which will tend to disparage the value of such evidence. Accordingly it has been held erroneous to charge in substance or effect the rule laid down by Greenleaf expressing the necessity for caution as to evidence of admissions of parties, and the reason for such caution.³ The view taken by these decisions is that the statements made by Mr. Greenleaf are to be regarded as matters to impair the value of the opinion, is of little or no weight. Upon the matters stated in these hypothetical questions, and which are involved in this investigation, you are to give the defendant the benefit of all reasonable doubt, if any there should be; and where there is a reasonable doubt as to the truth of any one of the material facts stated, resolve it in the defendant's favor." Instances of Instructions Held Erroneous. — That evidence of the admissions of a party is dangerous and liable to abuse. Castleman v. Sherry, 42 Tex. 59. That evidence of admissions should be received with great care, caution and allowance; that the jury should judge of the weight to be given to proof of this character; that much depends upon the accuracy of the memory of the witness, and the circumstances under which the admissions were made. Frizell v. Cole, 29 Ill. 465. That admissions of a party should be received with great caution, because a witness may not have correctly understood them or may not have correctly remembered and repeated them. Zenor v. Johnson, 107 Ind. 69. That an admission is a weak kind of evidence. Mauro v. Platt, 62 Ill. 450. That evidence of oral admissions should be scrutinized closely, because of the possibility that the party might not have expressed himself clearly, and that the witness might not hear or repeat correctly. Newman v. Hazelrigg, 96 Ind. 73; Garfield v. State, 74 Ind. 60. Or that as a general rule the statement of a witness as to verbal admissions should be received with caution, because that kind of evidence is subject to much imperfection and mistake. Knowles v. Nixon, 17 Mont. 473; Wastl v. Montana Union R. Co., 17 Mont. 213; Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269. That admissions if fully and deliberately made to a disinterested person are of weight, but that casual declarations made in idle conversation do not deserve much consideration. Johnson v. Stone, 69 Miss. 826.

of argument rather than rules of evidence having the force of law;¹ that while it is a matter of common knowledge that such evidence is liable to be erroneous, and for that reason it should be received with caution, yet such conclusion is only an inference of fact which must be made by the jury and not a presumption or a conclusion of law to be declared by the court.² It has been held, however, in a state where this view is taken, that it is proper to instruct that evidence of admissions may be subject to much imperfection and mistake.³

Criminal Cases. — Of course any statement by the trial court by way of disparagement of confessions and admissions in criminal cases, being in favor of the defendant, would not be a subject of appellate review, as the state is not entitled to an appeal or writ of error, but a request for an instruction that confessions should be received with caution should be refused.⁴

(3) View that Court May Caution Against. — On the other hand, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the court may caution the jury against evidence of verbal admissions and state

1. Castleman v. Sherry, 42 Tex. 59; Davis v. Hardy, 76 Ind. 272; Garfield v. State, 74 Ind. 60.

2. Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269.

"The reasons which are to be urged in favor of receiving such statements with caution are based upon human experience, and vary in strength and conclusiveness with the facts and circumstances of each case, and their sufficiency in any particular case is an inference which the reason of the jury makes from those facts and circumstances; but there is no rule of law which directs the jury to invariably make such an inference from the mere fact that the proof of the admission is by oral testimony. That deduction, called a presumption, which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts, is uniform, and not dependent upon the varying conditions and circumstances of individual cases. To weigh the evidence and find the facts in any case is the province of the jury, and that province is invaded by the court whenever it instructs them that any particular evidence which has been laid before them is or is not entitled to receive weight or consideration from them." Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269.

"It is not every statement of the law found in a text-book or opinion of a judge, however well and accurately put, which can properly be embodied in an instruction. * * * The instruction under consideration does not contain a single proposition of law, but only declarations of supposed facts, which common experience has perhaps established as true. The teachings of experience on questions of fact are not, however, doctrines of law, which may be announced as such from the bench. * * * They may well enter into the arguments of attorneys, * * * but the jury, not the judge, is the arbiter of such contentions. * * * The most that the judge may do, under our practice, which leaves questions of fact entirely to the jury, is to direct the attention of the jurors to such propositions and leave them, in the light of their experience, to say what credit should be given to any testimony on account of its alleged doubtful character." Garfield v. State, 74 Ind. 60.

3. Koerner v. State, 98 Ind. 20.

4. Collins v. State, 20 Tex. App. 400; Thuston v. State, 18 Tex. App. 26.

Compare Mercer v. State, 17 Ga. 146. In this case the judge was asked, generally, by the prisoner's counsel, as the jury were about retiring, to charge them "as to confessions;" whereupon he gave them in charge the general principles on this subject, in which he stated that confessions, when freely and voluntarily made, were the highest kind of evidence; but in the course of his remarks also told them that they must weigh such confessions as any other testimony. It was held that this charge, under the circumstances, was sufficiently correct.

the reasons therefor.¹ These decisions give Greenleaf's statement as to this class of evidence the effect of a rule of law.²

(4) Instructions Giving Undue Weight to. — The weight of authority is also against the propriety of instructing that, under certain circumstances, confessions³ or admissions⁴ are strong evidence, the view being taken that the statements of text-writers

1. Allen v. Kirk, 81 Iowa 658; Martin v. Algona, 40 Iowa 392; Stewart v. De Loach, 86 Ga. 729; Nash v. Hoxie, 59 Wis. 384; Dreher v. Fitchburg, 22 Wis. 680; Tozer v. Hershey, 15 Minn. 257; Botts v. Williams, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 697. See also Higgs v. Wilson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 338; Com. v. McCann, 97 Mass. 580. In this case the trial court instructed that "a free and voluntary confession by a defendant * * * is a kind of evidence peculiarly liable to mistake, and is to be received with caution, and scrutinized with care;" but that if, on the whole evidence, including that of the alleged confessions, they were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, their verdict should be that he was guilty. No exception was taken to this instruction, and the reviewing court affirmed the judgment.

That Admissions Are "the Weakest Kind of Evidence." — "It is further claimed that the court erred in telling the jury that admissions of a party were 'the weakest kind of evidence that could be produced.' But this language is not materially different from that generally used in elementary works and by courts, in regard to this class of evidence. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence, vol. 1, § 200, says it should be 'received with great caution,' and that it is 'subject to much imperfection and mistake.' Judge Redfield, in his edition of that work, in continuation of the same paragraph, after alluding to the various reasons which create a probability of error in this kind of evidence, says: 'We must conclude there is no substantial reliance upon this class of testimony.' It has often been characterized as the 'most unsatisfactory,' 'the most dangerous,' of all evidence. And it does not seem materially different to say it is the 'weakest kind of evidence.' This does not imply that an admission deliberately made, and clearly proved beyond mistake, would not have very great inherent force as evidence. But the weakness of this testimony consists in the uncertainty and liability to mistake on these preliminary questions." Dreher v. Fitchburg, 22 Wis. 680.

2. The Rule in North Carolina. — In this state it has been held not erroneous to refuse to charge that admissions are to be received with caution; the court may so charge or not, and in the exercise of a wise discretion should be guided by the circumstances of each particular case. State v. Hardee, 83 N. Car. 619.

South Carolina. — It has been held not erroneous for the court, after referring to Greenleaf's statement, to charge that the reasons stated therein constitute a strong argument, but that the jury are to determine the weight of the evidence according to their own views, and that Greenleaf's argument may or may not be adopted by the jury in passing upon the facts of the case. Moore v. Dickinson, 39 S. Car. 441.

3. Morrison v. State, 41 Tex. 516; Ledbetter v. State, 21 Tex. App. 344; Harris v. State, 1 Tex. App. 79; Hogsett v. State, 40 Miss. 522; Brown v. State, 32 Miss. 443.

Instances. — Thus it has been held error to instruct that "confessions made by a prisoner charged with an offense, when made voluntarily, and not obtained by force, fraud, or threats, are regarded by the law as the highest and most satisfactory character of proof," Brown v. State, 32 Miss. 433; or that "voluntary confessions * * * are to be regarded as the strongest proofs in the law," Morrison v. State, 41 Tex. 516; or that a confession is of the most weighty nature in law Ledbetter v. State, 21 Tex. App. 344.

4. Westbrook v. Howell, 34 Ill. App. 571; Baker v. Kelly, 41 Miss. 696. Contra, Buford v. McGetchie, 60 Iowa 298.

That Admissions Are to Be Taken as True. — That the admissions of the defendant against himself are to be taken as true is a charge on the weight of the evidence. Grant v. State, 2 Tex. App. 164. To the same effect see Ephland v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 57 Mo. App. 147, on this subject are to be regarded as persuasive rather than as authoritative rules of law.¹

(5) Miscellaneous. — It is improper for the court to characterize a statement as a confession,² or admission,³ when it is not; or to assume that the defendant has made an admission when such is not the case;⁴ or to intimate an opinion as to whether an admission was made seriously or not.⁵ The court may properly refuse to give in charge a request for instructions on the subject of confessions which finds no support in the evidence.⁶

On a Trial of Two or More defendants under a joint indictment it is proper,⁷ and, it would seem, even necessary, especially when requested,⁸ to point out to the jury that admissions of one defendant not made in the presence of the other are only evidence against him who made them.⁹

If the Evidence Presents Two Theories, under one of which the confession is admissible and under the other not, a refusal to charge that the confession should be disregarded if the jury believe the theory under which it was inadmissible is erroneous.¹⁰

A Failure to Charge in relation to confessions will not, in general, be ground for reversal.¹¹ where it was held error to instruct that testimony against interest is to be taken as true.

Implying that Silence May Be a "Confession of Guilt." — Evidence of admissions to be implied from silence should always be received with great caution, and should be weighed by the jury very carefully, if not distrustingly; and although the evidence in this case was properly received, a charge instructing the jury that "the fact that the person who is charged with the commission of a crime says nothing, but remains silent, is a circumstance to which the jury may look as a confession of guilt," was calculated to mislead them, and is a reversible error. Campbell v. State, 55 Ala. 80.

Covered by Instructions Already Given. — Where the court has instructed as to the declarations of the accused as a part of the res gestæ, and no objection is made, the court may properly refuse to give in charge the section of the Georgia Code (section 3792) providing that admissions and confessions should be received with caution, and that a conviction cannot be based on an uncorroborated confession. Artemus v. State, 79 Ga. 512.

6. Gentry v. State, 24 Tex. App. 80.

Instances. — Thus if there is other evidence against a prisoner besides his confessions, the court may properly refuse to charge that uncorroborated confessions will not warrant a conviction. *Com. v. 9. Statement of Abstract Proposition Insufficient. — It has been held that a mere general statement of this rule will not suffice; that the court must direct the attention of the jury to the specific statement or admission, and caution them against giving it any weight when determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant, who is not bound by it. State v. Oxendine, 107 N. Car. 783.

h. INSTRUCTIONS ON THE MAXIM "FALSUS IN UNO, FALSUS IN OMNIBUS" — (1) Propriety of Instructing as to This Maxim. — It is competent for the court to give instructions as to the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, as applied to the testimony of a witness who has wilfully and knowingly sworn falsely.

(2) Instructing that Jury "May" Disregard Evidence Proper. — Thus it is always proper to instruct that if the jury find that any witness has knowingly and wilfully testified falsely as to any material fact in controversy on the trial they are at liberty to reject all or any part of his testimony,¹ but that they are not bound to do so, but may give it such weight as they think it is entitled to.² In giving this instruction the court should not single out any particular witness and tell the jury to disregard his testimony if they think he has testified falsely in one particular.³ The maxim is not a conclusive presumption of law, but only an advisory suggestion which warns the jury to receive the testimony of such witness with caution, and warrants them in rejecting it altogether.⁴

a conviction could not be based upon an extrajudicial confession alone, but that the jury must look for corroboration as to the corpus delicti in the other evidence, was not erroneous; but in Paris v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 82, it was held that a failure to charge the jury to disregard a confession if they believed that it was not voluntary, was erroneous, the defendant having testified that it was not voluntary.

Violation of Rule, When Harmless. — An instruction that "the rule of law is that where a witness is false in one particular, he is false in all," when limited by the preceding statement that the jury should compare the witnesses one with the other, to see if there were any contradictions and to see if the witness was unreliable, in which event his testimony should have no weight, was held harmless error. *State v. (3) Instructing that Jury "Should" Disregard Evidence Improper. — Although there are some decisions to the contrary (most of which have been expressly overruled),¹ it is now well settled that it is erroneous to instruct the jury that if a witness has wilfully and knowingly sworn falsely to any material fact in controversy, they "should" disregard all his testimony.²

"It is true, as a general rule, that when a witness deliberately and knowingly swears falsely in regard to one material fact, the jury are not bound to believe him in any of his statements, unless he is corroborated. But it is wrong to say that the jury are not at liberty to believe him. The maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, does not operate to preclude the jury from believing the witness if they choose to do so. The jury may believe any competent witness, though in many instances they ought not. A jury ought not to convict upon the testimony of an accomplice uncorroborated, but all now agree that they may do so. It would have been correct for the court to give the jury general rules by which the credibility of the witnesses is to be judged, but it was not correct to tell them that they were not at liberty to believe the witness." Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645.

Reason for Rule. — Whether the jury should disregard the whole of the testimony of a witness in such a case is a matter resting entirely with them. They are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight of their testimony. They may wholly disregard the testimony of any witness if, from the evidence before them, they consider such witness as wholly unworthy of credit. Or they may disregard a portion of the testimony of any witness, and give to every other portion full faith, credit, and consideration. Or they may give to one portion of the testimony of any witness greater weight and credit than they give to some other portion of such testimony. The jury ought to be allowed to weigh every portion of the testimony of every witness, and to give each portion of the testimony just such consideration as it is entitled to, considering

(4) Instructing that Jury "May" or "Should" Disregard Evidence unless Corroborated. — According to some authorities it is not error for the court to charge that if a witness has wilfully sworn falsely to any material fact, they "should" give no weight to such testimony unless corroborated.¹ According to other decisions such an instruction is erroneous,² and on principle these decisions are clearly correct. So, in some jurisdictions, it has been held proper to instruct that the jury "may" disregard the testimony of a witness who has knowingly sworn falsely to a material matter, unless his testimony be corroborated;³ and an all the facts and circumstances of the case. It is within the common experience of all men that the different portions of the testimony of the same witness may differ vastly in value. A witness may, under great temptations, and in some isolated case, swear falsely, and yet, where the temptation is removed, where there is nothing to operate on his hopes and fears, his passions and prejudices, where he has no interest in the matter except to tell the truth, his testimony may be of great value. And this being so, no inflexible rule of law should be interposed between the witness and the jury, commanding the jury to take all, or to exclude all, of his testimony. Shellabarger v. Nafus, 15 Kan. 547.

Effect of Failure to Object. — Although it is error to instruct that "if any witness has wilfully testified falsely as to any material fact in the case, then the jury should disregard all the testimony of such witness," still, if the defendant does not object or except to the giving of such instruction he thereby waives any error committed by the court in giving it. State v. Potter, 16 Kan. 99.

Instances of Instructions Held Erroneous. — It is error to instruct the jury that "if they believe any witness has sworn falsely and knowingly as to any material fact, they are bound to disregard his testimony altogether." Letton v. Young, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 559. So it is erroneous to instruct that "if you believe from the evidence that any witness has knowingly and wilfully testified falsely to any material fact, you should totally disregard all the testimony of any such witness." Higbee v. McMillan, 18 Kan. 133. So, also, an instruction that the jury may disregard the evidence of a witness entirely if they believe he has wilfully testified falsely to any material fact, that it is a matter resting entirely in their discretion, but that it is the jurors' duty, as a matter of law, to reject such testimony, is error. People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648.

Instance of Instructions Held Not Erroneous Under This Rule. — It has been held not erroneous to charge that if the jury believe that the witness has knowingly sworn falsely to any fact, he is not entitled to be believed in reference to any other fact testified to by him. In sustaining this instruction the reviewing court said: "If this instruction were to be understood as forbidding the jury to give credit to any statements of the witness, although they might be satisfied of the truthfulness of some part of them, I should be inclined to doubt its correctness. * * * If the witness had committed perjury in his testimony, he was certainly not 'entitled to be believed' upon any doubtful question, and the instruction on this subject should be construed in connection with the previous expression that 'the jury were the judges of the credibility of the witnesses.'" Roth v. Wells, 29 N. Y. 492.

This instruction seems to be in direct violation of the rule. It is hard to see how it could be understood any other way than as forbidding the jury to give credit to any statements of the witness if they believed he had knowingly sworn falsely in reference to any fact.

instruction that the jury may disregard the testimony of a witness who has wilfully sworn falsely to a material matter has been held erroneous for want of the qualifying words "unless corroborated."¹ But other decisions deny the correctness of this rule, and on the soundest reasons.² Such an instruction is no more than an explicit direction to disregard the testimony of the witness, and has been sanctioned by no authorities, ancient or modern.

(5) Omitting Words "Knowingly" and "Wilfully" in Charging. — As the false testimony of the witness must have been given knowingly and wilfully, and with intent to deceive, it is erroneous in instructing to omit the words "knowingly" or "wilfully."³

McDonald*, 46 Ill. 123, in which it was held that if there is no evidence in a case tending to corroborate a witness, it is not error for the court to instruct that if the jury believe that the witness has sworn falsely upon any material point, they have a right to disregard his entire testimony.

The reasoning of the Missouri Supreme Court in support of this rule is as follows: "Is the jury not at liberty to disregard the testimony of one who has committed perjury in their presence, as to some fact testified to by him, because as to that or some other fact testified to by him he is corroborated? If the corroborative evidence establish the fact, they may find the fact on the corroborative evidence, but if the corroborative evidence is insufficient of itself to prove the fact, but in connection with the evidence of the false witness does prove it, is the jury bound to believe the evidence of the witness, and, because corroborated, find the fact as he testifies? This is not the law; the jury may or may not believe him; that is a matter for their determination, and we hold that it is true, as a legal proposition, that if a witness has wilfully sworn falsely as to a material fact, the jury are at liberty to disregard his entire testimony, notwithstanding he may have been corroborated as to that or any other fact to which he testified." *Brown v. But see People v. Righetti, 66 Cal. 185, where the court instructed that "if any witness has, in your judgment, sworn falsely in any material respect, he is to be distrusted in all others, and his testimony is not to be accepted and acted upon without great caution." It was objected that the court should have used the words "wilfully false;" the reviewing court, however, held that the word "wilfully" did not change the effect of the language; that the word "false" is not the equivalent of "mistake," and therefore, "if a witness be believed to have sworn 'falsely,' he is believed to have sworn so wilfully." See also People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 494. In this case the court modified a requested instruction by inserting the word "wilfully" before the word "false," and the reviewing court held that this was not error, taking the view that the word "wil-

The charge should not overlook the distinction between testimony which is false and testimony which is knowingly false.¹

(6) Omitting Word "Material" in Charging.—Nor is the maxim applicable unless the matters falsely sworn to are material. It is therefore error in instructing to omit the word "material."²

(7) Necessity of Instructing as to This Maxim.—According to some decisions it is within the sound discretion of the trial judge whether he shall instruct as to the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus,³ and the propriety of giving such instruction in any particular case must be left largely to the discretion and judgment of the trial court. But authorities are not wanting to the effect that it is reversible error to refuse such an instruction when it is warranted by the circumstances of the case.⁴

2. As to Conflict in Evidence.—Where the testimony of witnesses is irreconcilably conflicting, the court may properly explain to the jury the rules by which it should be weighed.⁵ It may caution fully" did not change the effect of the instruction.

Instructing to Disbelieve if Witness Was Mistaken.—An instruction that if the jury believe that any of the witnesses swore falsely, or were mistaken, they are at liberty to disregard the whole or any part of such witness's testimony is erroneous. State v. Elkins, 63 Mo. 159.

1. Skipper v. State, 59 Ga. 63.

The jury has no right to disregard the entire testimony of a witness because he has innocently made a mistake upon any material point. People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 156.

Correcting Misstatements of Fact.—Where a witness on the stand misstates a fact, and afterwards, before finally leaving the stand, desires to make a correction of it and state the fact as he then remembers or understands it, he will always be allowed to do so, and in such case the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, is not applicable. It applies only to cases where the facts indicate that the false statement is made deliberately and is adhered to by the witness. Kay v. Noll, 20 Neb. 388.

Co.*, 18 Ill. App. 620; White v. Lowenberg, 55 Mo. App. 69. Compare People v. Ah Sing, 95 Cal. 654, where it was held that an instruction to the effect that any witness whom the jury believed to have sworn falsely "as to any fact" was not vicious as failing to restrict its effect to false testimony relating to material matter.

Instruction Held Not in Violation of Rule.—An instruction to the jury declared that if they believed any witness had wilfully sworn falsely as to any of the facts mentioned in the other instructions as bearing upon the claim sued on or the defenses thereto, they were at liberty to disregard entirely the testimony of such witness. It was held that the instruction authorized the jury to discredit only witnesses who had wilfully sworn falsely to material facts, and was proper. Hart v. Hopson, 52 Mo. App. 177.

Hickam*, 95 Mo. 322, in which it was said that an instruction that if the jury believe from the evidence that any witness has knowingly testified falsely to any material fact, they may disregard the whole of his testimony, is not one which should be given as a matter of course in any case.

the jury concerning the care to be used in considering the testimony,¹ and may properly instruct that if there is a conflict in the testimony the jury must reconcile it if possible, but if not, they may believe or disbelieve any witness or witnesses according as they may or may not think them entitled to credit.²

3. As to Number of Witnesses. — The court may charge that in summing up the testimony upon any given question the jury should not alone count witnesses; that this is not always the most satisfactory, nor is it the most certain method of reaching the truth.³ The preponderance of the evidence is not determined, in any case, solely by the number of witnesses, however credible they may be. Therefore it is error to instruct that the preponderance of the evidence is to be determined by the comparative number of witnesses of each party, if they are all of equal credibility.⁴ The vice in this instruction is that it ignores every condition except that of credibility, whereas there are other conditions

State*, 41 Tex. 200, where the following instruction was approved: "Where there is an apparent conflict between the statements of different witnesses, the jury should, if they possibly can, reconcile the apparently conflicting statements; * * * but when the conflicting statements cannot be reconciled, and they cannot stand together as the truth, the jury must decide who of the witnesses is entitled to the greater credibility."

Reason for Rule. — Such an instruction makes no difference between the relative weight of positive and negative testimony, and it takes no account of the possible fact that some of the witnesses may have had better facilities for knowing the facts than others, or remembered them more distinctly, Bierbach v. Goodyear Rubber Co., 54 Wis. 213; State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 35. So, also, the jury should consider whether the witnesses were positive or uncertain and equivocating; their appearance and demeanor on the stand and their bias or interest in the suit. State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 35.

Instances of Erroneous Instruction under This Rule. — A charge that if three named witnesses in a certain case "are of equal credibility and weight, and the two latter conflict with the former on the facts of the case, you may disregard the evidence of" the former, is properly refused. Childs v. State, 76 Ala. 93. So it is proper to refuse a charge in the following language: "If one witness swears to the

to be considered in framing a rule on that subject.¹ It has been held, however, that an instruction that, "other things being equal," the greater number of witnesses would carry greater weight is proper.²

4. As to Variance in Testimony of Witnesses. — It is erroneous to instruct the jury not to regard "mere slight variances" between the testimony of witnesses as affecting their credit.³

existence of a fact, and another witness, of equal credibility, swears that the fact is not true, then the fact is not proved unless there is other satisfactory proof of the fact." Dorgan v. State, 72 Ala. 174; and an instruction in a criminal case that the accused should be acquitted because there are the same number of witnesses on each side who are equally credible is erroneous and properly refused. Armstrong v. State, 83 Ala. 49.

Instance of Proper Instruction under This Rule. — A charge that in determining the preponderance of the evidence the jury shall, in connection with the number of the witnesses upon any proposition, "take into consideration their opportunity for seeing or knowing the things about which they testify, the probability or improbability of the truth of their several statements in view of all the other evidence, facts, and circumstances proved on the trial, and from all these considerations determine on which side is the weight or preponderance of the evidence," was held proper. Robertson v. Monroe, 7 Ind. App. 470.

Charge that in Case of Conflicting Testimony Plaintiff Must Fail. — Where the testimony of parties to a suit, each of whom is a witness in his own behalf, is conflicting, and neither is supported by other evidence, the jury must determine which is entitled to the greater credit; hence an instruction that "so far as that testimony so conflicts, the plaintiff must fail," is properly refused. Kuehn v. Wilson, 13 Wis. 104.

Similar Instructions Held Vicious. — The following instructions have also been held erroneous: The evidence is in equilibrium where the testimony of two witnesses is directly conflicting, unless the testimony of one or the other is corroborated. Sickle v. Wolf, 91 Wis. 396. Where two witnesses are equally entitled to belief, and their testimony is conflicting, the verdict must be for defendant. Thomas v. Paul, 87 Wis. 607; Kelley v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 49 Ill. App. 304; Johnson v. People, 140 Ill. 350, affirming 40 Ill. App. 382, and overruling McFarland v. People, 72 Ill. 368.

1. Bierbach v. Goodyear Rubber Co., 54 Wis. 213.

2. Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 62 Wis. 453. In this case the court said: "By 'other things being equal' we understand the court to mean all things being equal in respect to each of such witnesses so testifying. This not only included the credibility of the respective witnesses, but their opportunities, capacities, attention, memory, and every other fact and circumstance in any way going to make up the weight of their testimony. It may be difficult to see just how all such things could be equal as to each of several witnesses; but what was said about giving the greater weight to the greater number is predicated wholly upon such equality in all things, and whether it did or did not exist was, after all, left to the jury."

Calling Attention to Number of Witnesses. — In case of a conflict in the evidence the court is not bound to call attention to the fact that the number of witnesses testifying to a fact is greater than the number of witnesses testifying to the contrary. McIntosh v. McIntosh, 79 Mich. 198.

3. State v. Swayze, 11 Oregon 360.

Such variances may, in many instances, be sufficient to enable the jury to determine the degree of credit to which each is entitled, and may answer the purpose equally as well as contradictions of a graver character. State v. Swayze, 11 Oregon 360.

Proper Form of Instruction as to Variances. — That partial variances in the testimony of different witnesses, on minute and collateral points, are of little importance unless they be of too prominent and striking a nature to be ascribed to mere inadvertence, inattention, or defect of memory; that it rarely happens that witnesses of the same transaction perfectly and entirely agree

5. As to Positive and Negative Testimony. — It is a rule of evidence that the testimony of a witness who speaks positively to a fact is entitled to more consideration than that of several witnesses whose statements are merely negative.¹ The propriety of instructing on this subject is, to say the least, questionable, and the weight of authority is probably against it, the view being taken that such instructions violate the rule against charging on the weight of the evidence (which undoubtedly they do, and an instruction stating this rule is, perhaps, open to the further objection that it is argumentative).² The cases clearly sustain the proposition that this is not a proper matter upon which to instruct the jury.³ Authority is not wanting, however, for the position that the court may properly give a cautionary instruction on this on all points connected with it; that an entire and complete coincidence, in every particular, so far from strengthening their credit not unfrequently engenders a suspicion of practice and concert; and that upon determining upon the credence to be given by the jury to testimony, the real question must always be whether the points of variance and discrepancy be of so strong and decisive a nature as to render it impossible, or at least difficult, to attribute them to ordinary sources of such variances, viz., inattention or want of memory. *State v. In Haskew v. State, 7 Tex. App. 107, it was held ground for reversal to charge that "the testimony of a witness who swears positively to a fact is to be taken in preference to the testimony of one who cannot so testify, though having the same opportunity of knowing." In Sparks v. Dawson, 47 Tex. 139, it was held erroneous to charge that "the witness who states positively that a certain state of facts is true is entitled to more weight than half a dozen others who cannot swear positively, but who testify that they do not believe them to be true." In Preston v. Moline Wagon Co., 44 Ill. App. 342, it was held reversible error to charge that the jury are further instructed that when witnesses are otherwise equally credible, and their testimony otherwise entitled to great weight, that greater weight and credit should be given to those who swear affirmatively to a fact rather than to those who swear negatively or to want of knowledge or want of recollection. In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Feehan, 149 Ill. 202, it was held proper to refuse an instruction that "the affirmative testimony of witnesses that the bell was rung and whistle sounded at a given time and place is of greater force and weight than the negative testimony of witnesses of no greater credibility, and who had no better opportunity of hearing, that the bell was not rung or the whistle sounded, or that they did not hear them;" and in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stommel, 126 Ind. 35, it was held proper to refuse an instruction that the positive testimony given by one witness is, under some circumstances, entitled to more weight than negative testimony given by another.

subject.¹ So the ground is taken by one decision that although an instruction stating the rule correctly may properly be given, it may, with equal propriety, be refused;² and in some cases, without deciding whether the giving of a cautionary instruction on this subject would be proper, instructions given have been condemned, and instructions refused held properly refused as stating the rule of evidence incorrectly.³

1. Hinton v. Cream City R. Co., 65 Wis. 337, where the giving of the following instruction was approved: "The rule of law is that the positive testimony of one credible witness to a fact is entitled to more weight than the testimony of several witnesses equally credible who testify negatively, or to collateral circumstances merely persuasive in their character, from which a negative may be inferred." Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Newton, 85 Ga. 517, where it was held proper to charge that, "everything else being equal, * * * positive testimony is rather to be believed than negative testimony." See also Olsen v. Oregon Short Line, etc., R. Co., 9 Utah 129, in which it is said: "The request [which embodied a statement of the rule governing positive and negative evidence] could have been given without impropriety." Knight v. Thomas, (Me. 1887) 7 Atl. Rep. 538, in which the reviewing court said: "The presiding justice, after properly explaining to the jury the distinction between positive and negative testimony, said to them: 'Now the statements of the Wymans are not positive testimony. They state that they did not know of any intercourse between the complainant and the defendant, still it might have occurred. Whether it did or not is a question for you, gentlemen;' thus limiting the negative character of the depositions to the subject of known intercourse between the parties. In this we perceive no error." Rhodes v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep. 741, where it was held not erroneous to charge that it was for the jury to determine how much certain testimony of a negative character was worth as against positive testimony; and that "ordinarily, the evidence of a witness who swears positively to a thing, or emphatically says that he saw something, is more valuable than that of witnesses who say they did not see." Neill v. State, 79 Ga. 779, in which it was held that where only one witness was sworn for the state and one for the accused, and the testimony of the defendant's witness was positive in part and negative in part, the court might properly charge the rule applicable to positive and negative testimony as to the negative part of such witness's testimony.

2. Olsen v. Oregon Short Line, etc., R. Co., 9 Utah 129. See also Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Lorentzen, 79 Fed. Rep. 291, where it was said that the "giving of an instruction of that nature is a matter which rests largely in the discretion of the trial judge," and where it was held that such an instruction was properly refused where witnesses testified as positively on one side that a thing did not occur, as witnesses on the other side testified that it did.

3. Sibley v. Ratliffe, 50 Ark. 477, in which it was held proper to refuse the following instruction: "The positive testimony of a witness who says he heard the whistle blow is entitled to more weight than the negative testimony of a witness who says that he did not hear it." The reviewing court, in commenting on this instruction, says: "The request falls short of stating the full proposition." Kelley v. Schupp, 60 Wis. 86, where it was held that the following request for an instruction was erroneous: "It is sometimes said that affirmative testimony is of more value than negative testimony. But I charge you that where one man affirms a fact and another positively denies it, the denial is not negative testimony within the rule just stated." The reviewing court said: "Very clearly it is negative testimony." Smith v. Milwaukee Builders', etc., Exch., 91 Wis. 360, where an instruction was held erroneous which stated that negative testimony was "confined to that of a witness who, though present at a transaction, says that he did not see or did not hear. This is too limited a rule. Testimony which is positive in form may amount merely to negative testimony." Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 109 Ala. 500, where the following instruction was held properly re-

6. As to Character — a. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. — The great weight of authority seems to be that evidence of good character of a defendant in a criminal case is always to be considered by the jury in making up their verdict as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.¹ The defendant is entitled to have this evidence go to the jury,² who are to give it such weight as they may think proper.³

b. WHAT INSTRUCTIONS PROPER — That Good Character May Create Reasonable Doubt. — According to some authorities it is proper to instruct that good character can only be considered when a reasonable doubt arises on the evidence as to the guilt of the defendant;⁴ but the rule of these decisions has been overturned and the overwhelming weight of authority is to the contrary,⁵ the fused: "If you find from the evidence that Henry Ellis testified that the engine was emitting sparks, and that Judge West and the witness Ayer testified that said engine was not emitting sparks at the place where said injury occurred, and that each of said witnesses are equally creditable and worthy of belief, then the fact that said engine was emitting sparks at said place is not established by that measure of proof which the law requires." This instruction was held faulty for failure to hypothesize equal means of knowledge on the part of the witnesses whose evidence the court was asked to compare.

view being that proof of good character will of itself sometimes create a doubt when without it none would exist.¹ Accordingly it has been held proper to charge that such evidence may be sufficient to create in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused,² and error to refuse such a charge.³

Effect of Good Character Where Crime Is Atrocious. — Though there is one

United States. — Wayne v. Winter, 6 McLean (U. S.) 344.

Argument in Support of Prevailing Rule. — "To hold that a man's general good character is only evidence in cases where there is doubt, is equivalent to holding that he shall derive no benefit from it as evidence in a criminal case; for if the jury entertain a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, they will give him the benefit of such doubt and acquit, aside from proof of his good character; so that according to the doctrine of the charge, which, we concede, seems to be supported by many and respectable authorities, a person accused could only avail himself of the benefit of his good character in cases in which he would be acquitted had such proof not been offered. We think the rule in such cases correctly laid down in 2 Russ. by Greaves, 786, and in Roscoe's Cr. Ev. (ed. of 1846) 97, where it is said that 'the good character of the party accused, satisfactorily established by competent witnesses, is an ingredient which ought always to be submitted to the consideration of the jury, together with the other facts and circumstances of the case. The nature of the charge, and the evidence by which it is supported, will often render such ingredient of little or no avail; but the more correct course seems to be not in any case to withdraw it from consideration, but to leave the jury to form their conclusion upon the whole of the evidence, whether an individual whose character was previously unblemished has or has not committed the particular crime for which he is called upon to answer.'" Felix v. State, 18 Ala. 725.

Instructions Held Erroneous Under This Rule. — The following instructions have been held erroneous: "In a plain case a good character would not help a prisoner; but in a doubtful case he has a right to have it cast into the scales and weighed in his behalf." State v. Henry, 5 Jones L. (N. Car.) 65.

That evidence of character can only be considered by the jury where the other evidence is doubtful, and that it is not of the slightest consequence where the evidence is strong, and the guilt of the defendant is impressed on the minds of the jury. Com. v. Leonard, 140 Mass. 473.

That good character may have its weight in a doubtful case, and may have its weight in any case to this extent; that if there is a question of doubt it may determine the matter in defendant's favor. State v. Sauer, 38 Minn. 438.

Instructions Approved Under This Rule.

— The following instruction has been approved: "If the jury are satisfied from the evidence that the defendant has established a good character, then such good character of itself is sufficient to raise a doubt as to the prisoner's guilt." Com. v. Carey, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 406.

1. Remsen v. People, 43 N. Y. 6.

An instruction that the defendant had a right to put his good reputation before the jury for their consideration, "as a kind of makeweight in his favor, if there is a pinch in the case," is erroneous. State v. Daley, 53 Vt. 442.

2. Stephens v. People, 4 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 396; Lowenberg v. People, 5 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 414; Felix v. State, 18 Ala. 725.

3. People v. Doggett, 62 Cal. 27; People v. Bell, 49 Cal. 485. In this case it was held that an instruction that the good character of the defendant is a circumstance for the consideration of the jurors was insufficient, as being only equivalent to the admission of the testimony as to character. Compare Briggs v. Com., 82 Va. 554. In this case it was held proper to refuse an instruction that "if accused be proved of good character as a man of peace, the law says that such good character may be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although no such doubt would have existed but for such good character;" and that an instruction that the jury might always consider the character of the accused in favor of or against him was proper.

decision to the contrary,¹ the weight of authority is to the effect that it is erroneous to charge that proof of the prisoner's good character is entitled to less weight where the question is one of great and atrocious criminality than upon offenses of a lower grade.²

Mere Proof of Good Character Not Ground for Acquittal. — It is perfectly proper to charge that if the jury believe the defendant guilty, they should not acquit merely because he has proved previous good character,³ and to refuse an instruction that proof of good character, if believed, "is sufficient to generate a reasonable doubt" of the defendant's guilt.⁴

1. Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 325.

2. Harrington v. State, 19 Ohio St. 264; Remsen v. People, 43 N. Y. 9; Cancemi v. People, 16 N. Y. 501.

While the presumption of innocence which it raises varies in force with the circumstance, it cannot vary with the grade of the crime charged. Harrington v. State, 19 Ohio St. 264.

Good character is to be considered by the jury, upon the question of credibility of direct evidence of the defendant's guilt, the same as upon proof of circumstances tending to show it, or the inferences to be drawn from such circumstances. Stover v. People, 56 N. Y. 315.

3. State v. Vansant, 80 Mo. 70; State v. McMurphy, 52 Mo. 251; People v. Samsels, 66 Cal. 99; People v. Smith, 59 Cal. 601; Edmonds v. State, 34 Ark. 720; People v. Hammill, 2 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Oyer & T. Ct.) 223; People v. Sweeney, 133 N. Y. 609, 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 867; People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 232; McQueen v. State, 82 Ind. 74; Wesley v. State, 37 Miss. 327; U. S. v. Smith, 2 Bond (U. S.) 324.

Instructions Held Proper Under This Rule. — That if the evidence is convincing beyond a reasonable doubt, it is the duty of the jury to convict, notwithstanding proof of good reputation. People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 233.

"The good character of a person accused of a crime, when proven, is itself a fact in the case. It is a circumstance tending in a greater or less degree to establish his innocence. It must be considered in connection with all the other facts and circumstances of the case. But if, after a full consideration of all the evidence adduced, the jury believe the defendant to be guilty of any degree of crime, they should so find, notwithstanding proof of good character." People v. Smith, 59 Cal. 601.

"The character of the defendant is also a matter for your consideration. The evidence as to his character should be given such weight in explanation of the transaction between himself and the deceased as to you seems proper. But if you shall conclude from all the evidence that the defendant is guilty, you should not acquit him because you may believe that he has heretofore been a person of good repute." State v. Vansant, 80 Mo. 70.

Evidence Entitled to Little Consideration Against Direct Proof. — The following instructions have been approved: "Evidence of good character is, in law, to be considered by the jury, in all doubtful cases, of great weight. Yet if the proof of guilt is direct and clear, it is entitled to little consideration." Creed v. People, 81 Ill. 569.

That evidence of good character can have little practical effect against direct and satisfactory evidence as to guilt, and it cannot turn the scale against conclusive evidence. State v. Spooner, 41 La. Ann. 780.

That Evidence of Good Character Does Not Re-establish Disproved Facts. — Where it is sought to impeach a witness both by disproving facts testified to by him and also by proof of contradictory statements, and to sustain him by evidence of good character, it is error to limit the effect of such sustaining evidence by charging that "if a fact or facts testified to by a witness be disproved to the satisfaction of the jury, then evidence of general good character should not be treated as re-establishing such disproved facts." McEwen v. Springfield, 64 Ga. 159.

4. Booker v. State, 76 Ala. 22.

That Proof of Good Character Is Sufficient Upon Which to Find a Verdict of Not

Not a Strong Presumption of Innocence. — So it is proper to refuse an instruction that good character affords a strong presumption of innocence.¹

Where No Proof of Good Character Offered. — The trial court may instruct that the defendant may avail himself of his former good character, if it existed, by proof thereof, and that if he offer no such testimony the prosecution cannot show that his character was not good.² If, however, the defendant offers proof of good character which the prosecution does not attempt to rebut, it is error for the court to instruct that while the law permits him to make such proof, the people are prohibited from showing his bad character.³

c. NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTIONS. — While a person who has given evidence of good character is always entitled to appropriate instructions on request,⁴ a neglect to give such an instruction in the absence of a proper request therefor is not erroneous.⁵ Nor Guilty. — An instruction in the following language was held properly refused: "If the jury, from all the evidence in this cause, have any doubt of the defendant's guilt, and further believe from the evidence that the defendant has for a long time, and now possesses, a good moral character for peace, sobriety, and honesty, then such fact of good character, coupled with the presumption of innocence which the law invokes, is sufficient upon which to find a verdict of not guilty, and the jury may then acquit the defendant." State v. McNamara, 100 Mo. 106.

1. State v. Tarrant, 24 S. Car. 593.

2. State v. Tozier, 49 Me. 404.

In giving this instruction the court should be careful not to intimate that an inference prejudicial to the defendant should be drawn by the jury from his failure to offer such testimony.

Good Character to Be Proved by Competent Evidence. — The court gave the following requested instruction: That "the good character of the defendant for honesty and integrity is a fact in the case to be considered by you in connection with all the other evidence in the case," and added the following: "But such fact, like all others, must be proven by competent evidence." It was held that this was not error. People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 457.

3. People v. Marks, 90 Mich. 555.

Considerations on Which Rule Is Based. — In reaching this conclusion the court reasoned as follows: "The respondent having offered evidence of good reputation, the door was open to the people to introduce evidence in contradiction of it, and to establish the fact, if they could, that the respondent's reputation for honesty was bad in that community. The people did not avail themselves of this, and presumably because no such proof could be made. The respondent, therefore, had a right to stand before the jury with this proof to be weighed in his favor. * * * When the court, therefore, told the jury that the hands of the people were tied, they might well have understood it as an instruction from the court that, though the respondent might put in proof of his good reputation, the people would not be permitted to rebut or give evidence against the respondent, showing him to be a man of bad reputation."

That Intention Is Not Inferable from Previous Good Character. — Where there is evidence to show the previous good reputation of the defendant as a quiet and peaceable citizen, an instruction that "no inference can be drawn by a jury of the intention which induced the commission of the offense from the previous character of the prisoner. His intention can only be determined by his acts. The law will imply a malicious intention," is erroneous. People v. Casey, 53 Cal. 360.

4. State v. Swain, 68 Mo. 605.

5. State v. McNamara, 100 Mo. 100. In this case it was said that "the law requiring the court to declare the law applicable to the case, whether proper instructions are asked for or not, does not comprehend such merely collateral matters" as good character.

Where Charge Not Sufficiently Specific. — Where the testimony introduced by the defendant related solely to his character and to the impeachment of wit-is it erroneous to refuse an instruction on good character where it has been substantially given already.¹

7. As to Failure to Testify — a. IN CRIMINAL CASES — (1) Adverse Comments as to Failure to Testify. — In most jurisdictions, by virtue of statutory provisions, the defendant in a criminal case may testify in his own behalf or not as he sees fit, and, it is apprehended, it is not competent for the court to allude to his failure to testify, and make adverse comments in regard thereto.²

nesses for the state, and the judge called the attention of the jury to such testimony, he thereby called attention to the proof of good character. If a more specific charge upon that point was deemed necessary, the omission should have been called to the attention of the court by counsel for defendant. Franklin v. State, 69 Ga. 36.

1. People v. Johnson, 61 Cal. 142; Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254.

Instance. — An instruction that evidence of the defendant's good character must be considered in connection with all the evidence in the case, and if then the jury have a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt they must acquit, is correct, and the defendant is not prejudiced by a refusal of the court further to instruct the jury that such evidence "may be sufficient to create in your minds a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although no such doubt would have existed but for such good character." People v. Bowman, 81 Cal. 566.

2. Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 213; State v. Carr, 25 La. Ann. 408.

Certainly Counsel Cannot Allude to It in argument to the jury. See article ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL, vol. 2, p. 718.

Instance of Sufficient Instructions. — An instruction that the defendant "has a right to go upon the witness stand and testify in his own behalf if he chooses to do so. If he does not choose to do so, the law expressly provides that no presumption adverse to him is to arise from the mere fact that he does not place himself upon the witness stand," and that "the mere fact that this defendant has not availed himself of the privilege which the law gives him should not be permitted by you to prejudice him in any way," sufficiently protects the defendant's rights. People v. Watson, (Supreme Ct.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 532.

"The court instructs the jury that the defendant has a right to decline going upon the stand, and that his refusal to testify can in no case be considered as evidence of his guilt or innocence." This instruction was approved in May v. People, 8 Colo. 226.

A charge that the defendant was not bound to go on the stand, and that he could say to the prosecution: "Prove your case against me; it is my judgment that the situation is such that I am not bound to take the witness stand, and the law gives me that right, and the law gives me that privilege. I charge you that the law says there is no presumption to be taken against a defendant by reason of the fact that he does not take the witness stand," is not erroneous as being a covert insinuation that the situation was such that it would be disastrous to the defendant if he took the stand. People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 496.

Using the Word "Should" Instead of "Shall" in Charging. — In charging the jury as to inferences of guilt from defendant's silence, it is not erroneous to employ the words "no inference of guilt should arise in the minds of the jury," instead of the words "no inference of guilt shall arise," etc. State v. Krug, 12 Wash. 288.

Additional Instruction that Jury May Consider Failure to Testify — Effect. — On the trial of an indictment where the defendant has not testified, it is erroneous for the judge to instruct that nothing is to be presumed against the defendant for not testifying; but that the failure of a defendant to produce evidence which it was in his power to produce, to meet the evidence adduced by the commonwealth, is a proper matter for them to consider. Com. v. Harlow, 110 Mass. 411.

Additional Charge that Evidence for State Had Not Been Contradicted — Effect. — The trial judge told the jury that they had no right to consider the fact of the defendant's neglect or refusal to testify against him, and also charged that they had the right to consider that the evidence of the state had not been contradicted. This instruction was ap-

But it has been held that if the defendant takes the stand in his own behalf, and fails to repel or explain accusatory evidence, which he clearly could do if innocent, the court may properly direct the jury that they are at liberty to consider this circumstance in determining the issue of guilt or innocence.¹

(2) What Instructions Proper or Necessary. — In some jurisdictions it is made the duty of the court to instruct the jury that no

proved. The reviewing court said: "We do not think the jury could thereby have obtained the impression that they could consider the fact that the respondent had not testified as any evidence against him." State v. O'Grady, 65 Vt. 66.

Remark by Court That Judge Could Not Control Thoughts of Jury — Effect. — In place of a requested instruction that the jury were not "to think" of the defendant's failure to testify, the court instructed that they were not "to consider" the defendant's failure to testify against him, at the same time remarking that he could not control the thoughts of the jury. The reviewing court upheld the trial judge, saying: "The remark of the court in reply to this request, that he could not control the thoughts of the jury, was unfortunate, as, unintentionally, it may have given some countenance to the idea suggested by the prosecuting counsel, that whatever the law was, he knew they would consider this omission against the respondent." State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 564.

Error Cured by Subsequent Instructions. — On a criminal trial the presiding judge has no right, in charging the jury, to allude to the fact that the defendant has not availed himself of the statutory privilege of being a witness in his own behalf; but where such allusion was made, and subsequently, upon his attention being called to it, he stated to the jury that there was no law requiring the prisoner to be sworn, and no inference to be drawn against him from the fact of his not being sworn, it was held that the error was thereby cured. Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 213.

Rule Under the English Statute. — Under a statute providing that the accused in a criminal case shall be "competent but not compellable" to testify in his own behalf, it is not error for the court to comment on a failure of the accused to testify, and to tell the jury that they might draw an inference adverse to the defendant for his having omitted to deny on oath certain statements made by the witness, and to explain certain matters which, when unexplained, were suspicious against the defendant. Kops v. Reg., (1894) App. 650.

1. Stover v. People, 56 N. Y. 320. In this case the court charged that the jury might consider, as a circumstance, the failure of the accused, while a witness, to give any account as to where the money found upon him had been kept in the interval from the time he claimed to have received it until it was so found. The reasoning of the court in arriving at this conclusion was as follows: "The argument in behalf of the accused is that he cannot be made a witness at all except by his own request, and that his failure to be a witness shall not create any presumption against him; and that if he requests to be a witness, and becomes such, he need give testimony only as to such parts of his case as he may choose; and as to other parts as to which he does not request or desire to give testimony, no presumption can be created against him for his failure to testify. In this construction I cannot concur. True, it is at the option of the accused whether or not to become a witness. When he has exercised this and become a witness he is made competent for all purposes in the case; if by his own testimony he can explain and rebut a fact tending to show his guilt, if innocent, and he fails to do so, the same presumption arises from his failure that would arise from a failure to give the explanation by another witness, if in his power so to give it. The reason for the presumption is alike in both cases. It arises from the known desire of parties to repel or explain accusatory evidence against them, if in their power; and the basis of the presumption is that the case shows that it is in their power, if innocent. Hence a failure tends to show an absence of innocence." See also Brashears v. State, 58 Md. 563, in which the above decision is approved.

inference of the defendant's guilt is to be drawn from his failure to testify, and it would seem that no request for such an instruction is necessary.¹ In others the giving of such an instruction is proper, but not necessary in the absence of a request therefor.² In some jurisdictions, because of the peculiar wording of the statutes, it has been held erroneous to refuse an instruction that no presumption of guilt should be indulged against the defendant on account of his failure to testify,³ and in others it has been held proper to instruct that such failure raises no presumption against the accused.⁴ On the other hand, the statutes of some states have been so construed as to prohibit the court from charging that a neglect or refusal of the accused to testify does not create any presumption against him.⁵ These courts take the view that the trial judge should say nothing whatever in regard to the matter.⁶

b. IN CIVIL CASES. — In civil cases it has been held that the People*, 133 Ill. 244 (under a statute providing that a defendant in a criminal case shall at his own request be deemed a competent witness, and his neglect to testify shall not create any presumption against him, nor shall the court permit any reference or comment to be made to or upon such neglect); State v. Landry, 85 Me. 95 (under a statute providing that the fact that the person accused does testify in his own behalf shall not be taken as evidence of his guilt).

Refusal Proper Where Defendant Has Testified. — Where the defendant has testified, it is proper to refuse an instruction that he is under no obligation to do so, and that his failure to testify raises no presumption against him. Williams v. People, 166 Ill. 132.

4. Sullivan v. State, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 652 (under a statute providing that a neglect or refusal to testify shall not create any presumption against the defendant, and that no reference shall be made to nor any comment be made upon such neglect or refusal; this provision is intended merely to prevent unfavorable comment); State v. Weems, 96 Iowa 426 (under a statute providing that where a defendant does not elect to become a witness, the fact shall not have weight against him on the trial, nor shall the attorney or attorneys for the state during the trial refer to the fact that the defendant did not testify in his own behalf); Fulcher v. State, 28 Tex. App. 465 (under a statute providing that the failure of any defendant to testify in his own behalf "shall not be taken as a circumstance against him, nor shall the same be alluded to or commented on by counsel in the cause.") See also People v. Seaman, (Mich. 1895) 65 N. W. Rep. 203.

5. State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226 (under a statute providing that a neglect or refusal of the accused to testify shall not create any presumption against the defendant, nor shall such neglect be alluded to or commented upon by the prosecuting attorney or by the court; in this case the court distinguishes Farrell v. People, 133 Ill. 244, saying: "Our law * * * goes much further [than the Illinois law], and prohibits not only the prosecuting attorney, but forbids even the trial court, from alluding to or commenting upon the neglect or refusal of the defendant to testify."); State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 663, where it was held not erroneous to refuse an instruction that such failure should not create any presumption against the defendant, the statute providing that failure to testify shall not "be referred to by any attorney in the case, nor be considered by the court or jury before whom the trial takes place."

court may direct the jury's attention to the fact that one of the parties has failed to testify, as a matter that they might consider and give such weight as they think it might deserve.¹ Authority is not wanting, however, for the position that the court should not call the jury's attention to the fact in any way.²

8. As to Failure to Produce Countervailing Evidence. — The authorities are not harmonious as to what instructions are proper on this subject. In the Webster case the court charged in effect that where the evidence in support of the charge is strong, and it is apparent that it is in the power of the accused to produce countervailing evidence, the jury may consider, as a circumstance against him, his failure to do so,³ and an instruction somewhat similar to this has met with approval.⁴ In other decisions instructions have been sustained which are in effect the same as that approved in the Webster case, except that they limit the right to consider the failure of the accused to produce countervailing evidence as a circumstance against him, to cases where he can do so by the testimony of others than himself;⁵

A charge that the jury are at liberty to draw unfavorable inferences against the defendant for failing to testify as a witness in explanation of material transactions, if they believe them to be within his knowledge, is unobjectionable. Blackwood v. Brown, 29 Mich. 483.

Where there was a plea of non est factum by an executrix to a note purporting to be signed by the son of the deceased for his father, who was at the time unable to attend to business, and the executrix was present in court at the trial, and was the widow of the deceased, it was erroneous to charge that if the executrix could, by going on the stand as a witness, clear up any doubts that might be in the case, the jury might take her failure thus to be a witness into consideration, and might infer from such failure against her. There was no evidence that the executrix knew the truth of this transaction, and it was altogether an unfair inference which the judge authorized the jury to draw from her failure to testify. Emory v. Smith, 54 Ga. 273.

2. Moore v. Wright, 90 Ill. 470.

Failure to Call Witness. — It has been held erroneous to give a charge which in effect permits the jury to use against the defendant the fact that he has not called certain witnesses, where it does not appear that the witnesses were under the control of the defendant more than of the plaintiff. Flynn v. New York El. R. Co., 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 375. So where it appeared upon the trial that one who had testified upon the former trial of the same case had disclaimed all knowledge of the transaction in controversy, a charge commenting unfavorably upon the failure to call the witness, and instructing the jury that they were at liberty to draw an unfavorable inference from the fact of his not having been called, was ground for a new trial. Fitzpatrick v. Woodruff, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 437.

3. Charge of Chief Justice Shaw in Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 316.

4. In People v. Doyle, 21 N. Y. 578, the reviewing court said: "The only direct evidence of the prisoner's guilt was given by his accomplice, G. It was a part of his story that, on the night of the arson, he and his confederates were at the house of W.; that they went to bed there at an early hour; that they afterwards got up, went and committed the crime, and then returned to bed in the same house. The defendant produced no evidence to show that he was not at the house of W. on that night, and the judge instructed the jury that they might, if they thought proper, take this omission into consideration as a circumstance which corroborated the evidence of G." This instruction was approved.

and in another case an instruction was held erroneous mainly because it did not contain this limitation.¹ So it has been held error to instruct that "when all the circumstances proved raise a strong presumption of the guilt of the accused, his failure to offer any explanation, where it is in his power to do so, tends to confirm the presumption of his guilt."² This instruction is clearly erroneous within the rule laid down by the decisions cited in the two preceding paragraphs. But the court in which it was reviewed based its conclusions on a different reason.³

9. As to Presumption of Innocence — a. DUTY TO INSTRUCT ON WHEN REQUESTED. — In all criminal prosecutions the law clothes the defendant with the artificial presumption of innocence, which attends him through every stage of the trial. It is therefore erroneous to refuse the defendant the benefit of a charge upon the presumption of innocence when he requests it,⁴ and error in

1. Com. v. Harlow, 110 Mass. 411, in which the jury were instructed that "the failure of a defendant to produce evidence which it was in his power to produce, to meet the evidence adduced by the commonwealth, was a competent and proper matter for them to weigh in considering the question of his guilt." The reviewing court held this instruction erroneous, saying: "They were not told that this last remark did not apply to his own testimony, but merely to his failure to produce other witnesses. Nor was it otherwise qualified."

2. Doan v. State, 26 Ind. 498. See also Clem v. State, 42 Ind. 420, in which the following instruction was held erroneous: "If you have a reasonable doubt whether the material facts have all been given to you in evidence, and whether other relevant and material facts necessary to a right understanding of the case, or any part thereof, and not in evidence, exist, and whether such facts not in evidence might lead to the just conclusion that the defendant is not guilty, and you should believe that the state could have known and produced such evidence, then you ought to find the defendant not guilty. But if you should believe that such other facts, if exculpatory in their character, could have been proven to you by the defendant, or that, if not guilty, she could have so explained those given in evidence as to show their consistency with her innocence, and has failed to do one or the other, then this failure may be considered in connection with the other circumstances offered to show her guilt."

3. Doan v. State, 26 Ind. 498, in which the court reasoned as follows: "If the jury knew that it was in the power of the accused to offer an explanation of circumstances which, unexplained, raised a strong presumption of his guilt, that knowledge of his ability to explain these circumstances destroyed the presumption which would otherwise be indulged against the accused. The defendant was not to be convicted of burglary because he failed to satisfy the curiosity of the jury by giving an explanation of circumstances which created no presumption of guilt against him, because the jury knew that he was able to explain them and thereby destroy any presumption which might have arisen had the jury been uninformed of his ability to make such explanation. It was probably intended to inform the jury that if circumstances which had been introduced in proof created a strong presumption of guilt against the defendant, and those circumstances, if untrue, the jury knew the defendant could disprove, or if true and yet capable of an explanation consistent with his innocence, he could give such explanation — in such a case his failure to make such proof tended to confirm the evidence of the existence of the circumstances; or that his failure to explain added force to the inference drawn from the circumstances proved."

Instructions Erroneously Refused — Instances. — It has been held that the following instructions were properly refused: That "the defendant is presumed to be innocent, * * * and before he can be convicted * * * the state must prove him guilty of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt," Line v. State, 51 Ind. 172; that "this legal presumption of innocence is a matter of evidence, to the benefit of which the party is entitled," Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33; that "the absence of all evidence of an inducing cause or motive to commit the crime, when the fact is in reasonable doubt as to who committed it, affords a strong presumption of innocence," Vaughan v. Com., 85 Va. 671; that "the accused must be presumed innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence, and in case of a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, he is entitled to be acquitted," Mace v. State, 6 Tex. App. 470.

Instructions Properly Refused — That Defendant Is as Innocent as Though Not Indicted. — It is proper to refuse an instruction that "the defendant, though indicted for perjury, is just as innocent of the crime as though not indicted." The instruction virtually says that the defendant is innocent independently of what the evidence might show on that subject, and of course it is erroneous. Sanders v. People, 124 Ill. 218.

Want of Motive a Strong Presumption of Innocence. — The defendant asked the court to instruct that a failure to prove a motive for the commission of the crime would raise a strong presumption that he was innocent. On appeal it was said that there could be no necessity of nor propriety in giving such an instruction. The general presumption of innocence covers it fully. The jury were told that this would be a circumstance for them to consider; to have said more would have been to trench upon the prohibition against commenting on the facts. State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 513.

That Presumption Does Not Obtain After Proof of Guilt. — That the prisoner is presumed innocent until his guilt is established by competent evidence, but that after the guilt of the prisoner is so established such presumption no longer obtains, is incorrect. The law is that "a defendant in a criminal cause is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence, and in case of reasonable doubt as to his guilt, he is entitled to be acquitted." Stapp v. State, 1 Tex. App. 734.

Duty of Jury to Reconcile Evidence with Presumption of Innocence. — There is a conflict of authority as to whether it is proper to instruct that it is the duty of the jury, if possible, to reconcile the evidence with the presumption of innocence. In Castle v. State, 75 Ind. 146, it was held erroneous to refuse such an instruction, but in Barker v. Com., 90 Va. 820, an instruction that "the jury should endeavor to reconcile all the evidence with this presumption" was held to have been properly refused, the court saying: "It was the duty of the jury to weigh the evidence carefully, and to pass upon it dispassionately, and to give the prisoner the benefit of any reasonable doubt; but it was no more their duty to endeavor to acquit him than to convict him."

Instructions as to Presumptions of Innocence Held Sufficient. — A charge that the accused is presumed innocent until the contrary is proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and that he is entitled to the benefit of a doubt, if it be substantial, is good law and sufficiently liberal to the accused. State v. Duck, 35 La. Ann. 764. So the following is a correct charge on this subject: "The accused is always presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and the burden of proof rests always upon the state and does not shift, * * * and if the circumstances as disclosed by the evidence can be explained, in the opinion of the jury, upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt of the defendant, he should be acquitted." Templeton v. State, 5 Tex. App. 398. So the follow-doubt.¹ Such an instruction cannot be regarded as covering the subject of the presumption of innocence.² Of course if a requested instruction on the subject of the presumption of innocence is covered by instructions already given, the refusal of the request cannot be assigned as error.³

b. WHETHER NECESSARY TO INSTRUCT ON, IN ABSENCE OF REQUEST. — While it would undoubtedly be better for the court to instruct on this presumption in all cases, whether requested or not, the authorities are not harmonious as to whether a failure to give such a charge in the absence of a request will operate to reverse. According to some decisions the mere omission to give this instruction when not requested is not ground for reversal,⁴ while according to others it is, the view being taken that whether requests for charges are made or not, it is the duty of the court to see that the presumptions of law in favor of the accused are clearly and impartially laid before the jury.⁵ It would seem, ing instruction has been held a sufficient charge as to the presumption of innocence: "If, after you shall have carefully examined the evidence in this case, you shall be able to reconcile it with the innocence of the prisoner, it will be your duty, as no doubt it will be your pleasure, to acquit him." Garrison v. State, 6 Neb. 285. And an instruction that the law raises no presumption against the accused, but that every presumption is in favor of his innocence, and that to convict, every material fact necessary to constitute the crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Territory v. Burgess, 8 Mont. 57.

Adverse Comments in Connection with Proper Instruction as to Presumption of Innocence — Effect. — Where the court sufficiently charges as to the presumption of innocence, the fact that it tells the jury that the law should be fearlessly administered, and that if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt they will fail in their duty if they do not convict, is not prejudicial. People v. Bowers, (Cal. 1888) 18 Pac. Rep. 660.

Conflicting Presumptions. — A refusal to instruct that "where there are two presumptions, one in favor of innocence and the other in favor of a criminal course, the one in favor of innocence must prevail," is not error. The only presumption in a criminal case is of the innocence of the defendant until guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt, and it is sufficient if the court has so charged the jury. People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1.

1. McMullen v. State, 5 Tex. App. 577; Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 388; Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432; Cochran v. U. S., 157 U. S. 286; Vaughan v. Com., 85 Va. 671. Contra, State v. Heinze, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1314, 66 Mo. App. 135.

2. Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432.

3. Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168; Wooten v. State, 24 Fla. 335.

The court having charged: "The defendant began on his trial with the presumption of innocence in his favor, and that presumption remains until removed by sufficient proof," it was not error to decline to add, at the prisoner's written request, that "the defendant is presumed to be innocent, and that presumption remains with and fully protects him until it is removed by the proof." Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 170. So it is not error to refuse a charge that the legal presumption of innocence is to be regarded by the jury as a matter of evidence, where they have been charged that the law presumes every man innocent until he has been proven guilty by proper legal evidence, and if they have any reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant arising from the evidence, they should acquit him. Wooten v. State, 24 Fla. 335.

5. People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10; People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15; People v. Potter, 89 Mich. 353; People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 701.

Rule Applicable to Misdemeanors Where Intent Is Not an Element. — The rule is though, that in the absence of a request, and the court's attention not being called thereto, it will not be ground for reversal that the jury is not informed in so many words that the presumption of innocence remains with the accused until he is proved guilty.¹

10. As to Reasonable Doubt. — When requested to instruct on the doctrine of reasonable doubt the trial court should comply with such request, and a failure to do so will usually be ground for reversal,² except in cases where the facts are clearly proved.³ Of course the rule stated does not apply where the court has already given a sufficient charge as to the doctrine of reasonable doubt. In that case no further instruction on the subject is necessary.⁴

In Absence of Request. — Whether a failure to charge as to the doctrine of reasonable doubt, in the absence of a request, will be error depends, it is apprehended, upon the practice in the jurisdiction where the question arises. Except in jurisdictions where the court is required in criminal cases to give instructions fully covering the whole law applicable to the case, it will not be error, it is believed, to fail to instruct as to reasonable doubt — although it would undoubtedly be the more proper course to do so. Under the statute in Texas the court is bound to instruct as to the law of reasonable doubt, whether requested or not, in felony cases.⁵

held to apply to statutory misdemeanors where intent is not an element of the offense charged. People v. Potter, 89 Mich. 353.

1. People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646; People v. Smith, 92 Mich. 10; People v. Ostrander, (Mich. 1896) 67 N. W. Rep. 1079.

Thus if the court fully instructs the jury that they must be convinced by the evidence of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, this presumption will be sufficient; it informs the jury, in substance, that the presumption of innocence is with the respondent until the jury find that he is proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646; People v. Ostrander, (Mich. 1896) 67 N. W. Rep. 1079.

Statutory Requisite. — It has been held that even though the court is required by statute to give a charge on this subject, a failure to do so will not be ground for reversal unless an exception is saved before the jury retire. Murray v. State, 26 Ind. 141.

2. People v. Cohn, 76 Cal. 386; People v. Cheong Foon Ark, 61 Cal. 527; May v. State, 6 Tex. App. 191; Treadway v. State, 1 Tex. App. 669; Goode v. State, 2 Tex. App. 520; Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 369.

Insufficient Request. — Where the defense in a criminal case rests largely on the doctrine of reasonable doubt, and the attention of the court is called to that feature of the case by a request to charge, even though the request as made may not be strictly legal, it is, nevertheless, the duty of the court to charge the law on that branch of the case, and an entire failure so to do will be ground for a new trial. Madden v. State, 67 Ga. 151.

The Rule in Iowa. — Under a statute providing that where there is a reasonable doubt of the degree of the crime of which the defendant is guilty, he shall be convicted of the lower offense, it is error to fail to instruct, in a prosecution for larceny of property of more than twenty dollars in value, that if the jury are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the prop-

Defining Reasonable Doubt. — The failure of the court in its instructions to define the meaning of the words "reasonable doubt" is not erroneous in the absence of a specific request therefor,¹ and even though the court attempts to define it, and the definition is inadequate, this will not be ground for reversal unless a more specific instruction is asked.² The accused in a criminal case is nevertheless entitled to a clear and full instruction as to what is meant by the term "reasonable doubt," and a failure to comply with a request for such a definition is reversible error.³

What Instructions Are Necessary. — The propriety of instructions upon reasonable doubt easily resolves itself into questions of the substantive law of the subject, which is treated of in the American and English Encyclopædia of Law, title Reasonable Doubt.⁴

11. As to Circumstantial Evidence. — The force and effect of circumstantial evidence are matters of law rather than of practice, and instructions upon this subject can readily be resolved into their legal elements. The subject will be fully treated in the American and English Encyclopædia of Law (second edition) under the titles Presumptions and Reasonable Doubt. The investigator should also consult the various criminal titles in that work wherein the application of the rules of circumstantial evidence to the particular crime is considered.

12. As to Defense of Alibi — a. NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTING ON THIS DEFENSE. — Where there is evidence tending to prove an alibi it is, of course, proper for the court to give an instruction on this defense,⁵ and if a request for such an instruction is made the erty stolen exceeds that amount, they must find that it was less than that. State v. McCarty, 73 Iowa 51; State v. Wood, 46 Iowa 116.

1. People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511; People v. Christensen, 85 Cal. 568; People v. Ahern, 93 Cal. 518; Winn v. State, 82 Wis. 571; State v. Smith, 65 Conn. 283; Butler v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 35; People v. Waller, 70 Mich. 237.

2. State v. Reed, 62 Me. 129. See also People v. Sheldon, 68 Cal. 434.

3. People v. Lachanais, 32 Cal. 433.

4. Repetition of Rule without Repeating Qualifications. — It has been held sufficient ground for granting a new trial that the judge, after stating to the jury the law applicable to the case, with proper exceptions and qualifications, afterwards, in commenting upon the evidence, repeated the general rule without again repeating the qualifications. Belknap v. Wendell, 36 N. H. 250; Saltmarsh v. Bow, 56 N. H. 428.

5. State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 266; State v. Standley, 76 Iowa 215.

Prosecution of Several Defendants. — Where several defendants are jointly indicted and prosecuted on the theory of a conspiracy to commit a crime charged, and this theory is supported by evidence, the court may properly refuse to instruct that if the jury find that one of the defendants was not actually present when the crime was committed, they should acquit him. State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 266.

No Evidence on Which to Base Instructions. — There should be no instruction on an alibi where there is no evidence to warrant it. State v. Jackson, 95 Mo. 623; State v. Murray, 91 Mo. 95; State v. Seymour, 94 Iowa 699; Burger v. State, 83 Ala. 36. Thus it is not error to refuse an instruction on the subject of alibi where the testimony of the witness as to where the defendant lived at the time of the murder was vague and inconclusive, and was unsupported by the statement of any fact showing that the witness knew when the deceased was killed. State v. Murray, 91 Mo. 95.

court should comply therewith, and a failure to do so will be reversible error.¹

Necessity of Request. — There is some diversity of opinion as to whether the court is bound to instruct on this defense in the absence of a request. In one state the rule seems to be settled that where there is evidence tending to establish an alibi the court should usually instruct the jury upon that issue, especially where the defendant relies on that defense alone; but that a failure to charge with reference to alibi is not such error as will ordinarily work a reversal, unless the charge be excepted to because of such omission, or unless special instruction upon that subject be requested and refused.² Some courts take the view that the court need not instruct as to this defense in the absence of a request therefor.³ But in one state the judgment was reversed for failure to give such an instruction although no request therefor had been made.⁴

When Question of Personal Identity and Fact of Alibi Are the Same. — Where the question of personal identity and the fact of alibi are virtually the same defense, the omission of the court to instruct separately on alibi is not error. Dale v. State, 88 Ga. 552.

Applying Doctrine "Falsus in Uno, Falsus in Omnibus." — An instruction as to the doctrine falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, where the defense is an alibi, may properly be given where the testimony of the witnesses was conflicting. State v. Johnson, 91 Mo. 439.

Defective Charge Cured by Subsequent Instruction. — A charge that if the jury entertain a reasonable belief that, at the time of the killing, the defendant was at his own home and not at the place of the killing, they should acquit, is not a sufficient charge on the subject of alibi, but when followed by a sufficient charge on the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the charges taken together will be sufficient. *Boothe v. Exceptions Saved Sufficient to Work Reversal Though Request Not Made. — A failure of the court to instruct as to the defense of alibi will be reversible error, even though no request for such an instruction has been made, if the defendant saves exceptions to the omission to charge. Conway v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 327; Quintana v. State, 29 Tex. App. 401; Anderson v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 546; Bennett v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. Rep. 405; McGrew v. State, 10 Tex. Sutton, 70 Iowa 268, in which the view was taken that the defense does not confess the act charged and seek to excuse it, as in the defense of insanity; and therefore the absence of instructions in reference to evidence of an alibi is not prejudicial to the defendant, and under the general instruction as to reasonable doubt on the facts in the case, the defendant would have the advantage of all the presumption which could arise in his favor by reason of such evidence; State v. Reed, 62 Iowa 40, where the court held that alibi is not a defense within any accurate meaning of the word, but a mere fact shown in rebuttal of the state's evidence, and therefore does not demand a specific instruction from the court.

b. INSTRUCTIONS DISPARAGING DEFENSE IMPROPER —

(1) Statement of Rule. — According to the weight of authority it is erroneous to disparage the defense of alibi. An instruction which tends to prejudice the minds of the jury against the evidence introduced by the defendant to establish an alibi, or which tends to cast suspicion on such defense, is erroneous.¹

(2) Instructions Held to Violate Rule. — Accordingly it has been held error to instruct that the jury need not pay any attention to the evidence of an alibi,² or to assume that such defense is frivolous and unfounded,³ or to state that the defense tends merely to cast a reasonable doubt upon the case made by the prosecution,⁴ or that "the law regards evidence to prove an alibi among the weakest and most unsatisfactory of all kinds of evidence,"⁵ or to charge that this defense is "to be viewed with peculiar suspicion and distrust,"⁶ or that evidence thereof should be weighed with great caution, because it is a defense easily fabricated and often attempted by contrivance or perjury.⁷

1. Albin v. State, 63 Ind. 598; Sater v. State, 56 Ind. 378; State v. Jaynes, 78 N. Car. 504; Casey v. State, 49 Neb. 403.

A charge that "an alibi is a species of defense often set up in criminal cases, and one which seems to figure somewhat in this," is erroneous; it is calculated to impress upon the jury that the court regarded such a defense as a pretense. Walker v. State, 37 Tex. 366.

It is error to charge that alibi is frequently resorted to by guilty persons as well as by innocent ones, and that it is a defense in which perjury, mistake, and deception are often committed. State v. Chee Gong, 16 Oregon 534.

Harmless Error. — The defense of alibi is not one requiring that the evidence in support of it should be scrutinized otherwise or differently from that given in support of any other issue in the cause; but an instruction that the proof to sustain such defense is to be subjected to a rigid scrutiny is not ground of reversal if the remaining portions of the charge are such that when given as a whole an intelligent jury could not have been misled by it. People v. Lattimore, 86 Cal. 403. See also People v. Lee Gam, 69 Cal. 552.

To the same effect are: People v. Kelly,

35 Hun (N. Y.) 295, where the court charged that "an alibi is a species of defense which the law looks upon generally with great suspicion;" Spencer v. State, 50 Ala. 124, where the court charged that the law always looks with suspicion upon the defense of an alibi; Line v. State, 51 Ind. 174, where the court charged that evidence of an alibi is evidence of a suspicious character, and should be most rigorously sifted and cautiously confided in, but when it has been subjected to severe scrutiny, and ascertained to have been honestly and truthfully given, it should have equal force with the same weight of evidence on any other subject.

7. Dawson v. State, 62 Miss. 241 (overruling Nelms v. State, 58 Miss. 362), where it was further held that this error was not corrected by a further charge that such defense, "when established by the evidence, is a good and complete legal defense."

Contra, State v. Blunt, 59 Iowa 468; State v. Rowland, 72 Iowa 327, where it was held not erroneous to instruct that the defense of alibi is one easily manufactured, and that juries are generally properly advised by the courts to scan the proofs of an alibi with care and caution; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, where it was held not erroneous to instruct that "this [alibi] is a defense often attempted by contrivance, subornation, and perjury. The proof, therefore, offered to sustain it is to be subjected to a rigid scrutiny." See also Provo-

c. APPLYING DOCTRINE OF REASONABLE DOUBT. — It is well settled that if the evidence of an alibi produces upon the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt concerning the truth of the facts constituting the guilt of the defendant, it will be sufficient to require an acquittal.¹ It is therefore proper to charge the jury to that effect,² and error to refuse such an instruction where there is evidence on which to base it.³ So it is error to charge that if

v. State, 55 Ala. 222, where the following charge was approved: "The jury should consider the evidence of an alibi with great caution; that the law so considered it because it was so easily manufactured, but that an alibi, when once established to the satisfaction of the jury, was as good as any other evidence."

Tennessee. — Chappel v. State, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 92.

Texas. — Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 360.

"There is but one question, there can be but one question, in a criminal prosecution: Has the guilt of the defendant been established beyond a reasonable doubt? This is the experimentum crucis by which every juror must test the correctness of his verdict. If this question cannot be answered in the affirmative the defendant is entitled to an acquittal, regardless of how the doubt has been engendered, provided only it arises out of all the evidence in the case, considered as a whole." Pollard v. State, 53 Miss. 424.

If the evidence of an alibi produced upon the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt concerning the truth of the facts constituting the guilt of the defendant affirmed in the indictment, it would be sufficient to require an acquittal. Such a doubt might arise in their minds from the evidence tending to prove an alibi, and if so, that would be sufficient to render the evidence available to rebut the affirmative evidence for the state, without their minds ever having arrived at a conviction, to the degree of a moral certainty, as to the truth of the alibi. Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 360.

Instruction Held Erroneous as Excluding Benefit of Reasonable Doubt. — The court below charged the jury that "when the defense of an alibi is set up, the jury should look with the greatest degree of strictness, and bear in mind that the proof necessary to establish the alibi must be proven with as much certainty as the state would have to establish the guilt of the accused." It was held that the effect of the charge was to exclude the prisoner from the benefit of any reasonable doubt as to his guilt arising from the proof touching the alibi, in connection with other proof in the cause; and that the prisoner was not bound to prove an alibi beyond a reasonable doubt. Chappel v. State, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 92.

Instances of Instructions Held Proper Under This Rule. — The following instructions have been held proper: "If the evidence raises in your minds a reasonable doubt as to the presence of the defendant at the place where G. H. was killed (if killed), at the time of such killing, you will find him not guilty." Walker v. State, 6 Tex. App. 576. An instruction asked by the defendant which states that "the commission of a crime implies the presence of the defendant at the necessary time and place, and evidence of the absence of defendant is always a defense; and if a reasonable doubt is created by this evidence, it is the duty of the jury to acquit the defendant," and is amended by the court by inserting after the word "always" the words "admitted to establish," as amended states the law the doubt only arises from the consideration of the evidence tending to prove an alibi, the defendant is not entitled to the benefit of that doubt.¹ So, also, it is error to charge that the defense must be made out beyond a reasonable doubt,² or that such defense must be fully and satisfactorily established to the satisfaction of the jury,³ or that it is essential to the sufficiency of correctly, and is properly given. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421.

An instruction that "although the evidence of an alibi falls short of the weight of moral certainty as to the existence of the alibi, yet if it leaves in the minds of the jury such a doubt or uncertainty that, if taken by itself, they could not find for the alibi or against the alibi, then the jury must carry such doubt into the case of the prosecution and array it there as an element of the reasonable doubt beyond which the prosecution must establish guilt. The defendants are entitled as much to the benefit of such doubt as to any other doubt raised by the evidence; and if its weight alone, or added to that of any other, be sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to the defendants' guilt, then the jury must acquit them," is sufficient as to the meaning of the term "alibi" as applied to the facts in evidence. State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 112.

The Doubt Must Be a Reasonable One. — Where the accused asked the court to instruct the jury that "if the evidence of an alibi has introduced into the minds of the jury a doubt as to whether or not the defendant was at or about the place when the alleged robbery is said to have been committed, you will acquit the defendant," is properly refused, as the doubt justifying an acquittal must be a reasonable doubt, and the court below sufficiently charged the jury on that point. Gibbs v. State, 1 Tex. App. 12.

1. State v. Waterman, 1 Nev. 553.

It is not quite correct to say that when the jury have considered all the evidence offered on the point made as to the alibi, if they have a reasonable doubt as to whether "defendant was in some other place when the offense was committed," they should acquit. A better expression of the law would be that when the jury have considered all the evidence, as well that touching the question of the alibi as the criminating evidence introduced by the prosecution, then, if they have any reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, they should acquit, otherwise not. Mullins v. People, 110 Ill. 46.

Fong Ah Sing*, 64 Cal. 253, where a charge, in effect, that the defendant was not to have the benefit of any doubt in regard to the alleged alibi, unless the jury should find as a fact that he was at another place than the place of the shooting when the shooting occurred, was held error.

3. Dawson v. State, 62 Miss. 244; Binns v. State, 46 Ind. 312; State v. Josey, 64 N. Car. 56; State v. Henry, 48 Iowa 403; Watson v. Com., 95 Pa. St. 421. Contra, State v. Drawdy, 14 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 88. See also Holley v. State, 105 Ala. 100, in which it was held that an instruction that the defendant was not required to establish the defense of an alibi which he had set up to the "reasonable satisfaction" of the jury was erroneous and properly refused; Pellum v. State, 89 Ala. 28, where the following charge was approved: "It is the duty of the defendant, in proving an alibi, to reasonably satisfy the jury that he was elsewhere at the time of the commission of the offense;" Simpson v. State, 78 Ga. 91, in which the following instruction was approved: "To make an alibi available as a defense within itself, it must be so strong as to preclude the idea of the party's being at the place where the crime was committed at the time the crime was committed."

Harmless Error. — In a murder trial the court charged that "if there is in this case a reasonable doubt, it will be your duty to acquit;" and further, "if upon the whole evidence there is not a reasonable doubt, it will be your duty to convict;" and further charged that "an alibi, when established to the satisfaction of the jury, is as conclusive a defense as can possibly be interposed in a criminal case. It need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, but it should be established to the sat-

such defense that it cover the whole time or so much of the time as to render it impossible that the prisoner could have committed the offense charged.¹ No such strict proof is required, and so to hold would, in most cases, render the defense valueless, no matter how honestly it was made.²

d. INSTRUCTIONS PROPER UNDER RULE THAT BURDEN OF PROVING ALIBI IS ON DEFENDANT. — According to some decisions the burden of proving an alibi rests on the defendant,³ and in order to authorize an acquittal on that ground it must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.⁴ Under these decisions it is proper so to instruct.⁵ When such an instruction is given, it is usual further to instruct that if upon the whole evidence there is a reasonable doubt as to the respondent's guilt, he is entitled to an acquittal,⁶ the view being taken that these instructions are not contradictory.⁷

Harmless Error. — The court charged that it was "essential to the successful proof of an alibi that it should cover the whole time of the transaction in question, and when it fails to do so it is regarded as the most suspicious of evidence; that the witnesses all testified to having retired by ten o'clock, and it was for the jury to say whether the prisoner might have left or did leave his bed, commit the deed, and return before the alarm of fire was given." "This rule does not abrogate the doctrine of reasonable doubt. A prisoner cannot be convicted upon a preponderance of evidence. There must exist no reasonable doubt of his guilt, based upon the evidence. But there may be a preponderance of evidence against him, and yet a reasonable doubt of his guilt. In such case the jury may acquit. This reasonable doubt may be based upon the whole evidence, or upon the evidence establishing certain essential facts necessary to be established, or upon evidence of facts inconsistent with the prisoner's guilt. The doctrine extends to all the evidence and to each part tending to establish independent facts. If, upon consideration of the whole evidence or any part of it, the reasonable doubt arises as to any

c. INSTRUCTIONS PROPER UNDER RULE THAT BURDEN OF PROVING ALIBI IS NOT ON DEFENDANT. — According to other decisions the burden of proving an alibi is not on the defendant,¹ and under these decisions it is erroneous to charge that the defendant must establish his alibi by a preponderance of the evidence,² or that testimony tending to show an alibi should not be considered unless it establishes the fact by a preponderance of evidence.³ According to these decisions such an instruction is inconsistent with the doctrine of reasonable doubt.⁴ essential fact, the jury must acquit." State v. Red, 53 Iowa 71.

"Fair" Preponderance of Evidence. — On a murder trial the court instructed the jury that if the alibi was supported by a "fair preponderance of the evidence" they should acquit, and it was held that the use of the word "fair" did not vitiate the instruction. State v. Johnson, 72 Iowa 393.

Instances of Instructions Held Proper Under This Rule. — The following instructions have been held proper: That "the burden of proof is on the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the [crime] charged was in fact committed. But if the state has made this proof, then the burden of proof is on the defendant to establish by the weight or preponderance of the evidence his defense of alibi; but if the entire evidence upon the whole case raises a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, then you should acquit him." State v. Van Winkle, 80 Iowa 15. That the evidence to prove an alibi must outweigh the evidence to show the defendant at the place of the crime; that if so established the jury should acquit; and that the alibi evidence was to be considered with all the other evidence in the case, and if upon the whole there was a reasonable doubt as to the respondent's guilt he was entitled to an acquittal. On a trial for rape the court instructed: "If the jury believe and find from the evidence that the defendant was not present at the place and time the alleged rape is stated to have been committed, by the prosecuting witness, K., but that the defendant, at the time of the alleged rape, was elsewhere, at another and different place than where the alleged rape is stated to have taken place by said K., then you should acquit the defendant." It was held that this instruction was proper and not liable to convey to the jury the impression that the defense should be made out by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Johnson, 91 Mo. 439.

3. Walters v. State, 39 Ohio St. 215.

4. Johnson v. State, 21 Tex. App. 380, in which the court says: "If the burden of proof is on defendant to establish his alibi by a preponderance of evidence, then the doctrine of reasonable doubt cannot possibly apply. Whenever, in a criminal or civil case, a party is required to prove a fact (and this always means by a preponderance of testimony), the reasonable doubt does not obtain, and cannot be applied to the negative or opposite of such fact. If A. be at Galveston at a given time he is guilty, but if at Houston at that time he is not guilty. The burden is on A. to prove that he was at Houston. If this be so, a doubt that he was at Galveston is not in the proposition, because he must prove that he was at Houston, and this proof must be made by a preponderance of evidence; and a doubt that he was at Galveston does not aid his proof that he was at Houston. On the other hand, his proof that he was at Houston may not be by a preponderance of the evidence, but amply sufficient to raise a reasonable

f. INSTRUCTIONS AS TO FAILURE TO PROVE ALIBI. — While it is stated by text-writers that an unsuccessful attempt to prove an alibi is always a circumstance of great weight against the prisoner, because a resort to that kind of defense implies an admission of the truth and relevancy of the facts alleged and the correctness of the inferences drawn from them if they remain uncontradicted,¹ the decisions are practically unanimous in holding that an instruction embodying such a statement is erroneous.²

doubt that he was at Galveston. Let us view these propositions at work. One of the jurors says: 'I doubt that A. was at Galveston.' To this another replies: 'So do I, but has A. proved by a preponderance of evidence that he was at Houston?' 'No,' says the first, 'but I doubt, from his evidence in support of his being at Houston, that he was at Galveston.' 'But,' replies the other, 'I know that he has not proven by a preponderance of testimony that he was not at Galveston, and we are instructed by the judge that he must do this—that this burden is upon him.' In comes the third juror, and suggests that the only way out of this trouble is to obey all that the judge says upon this subject. To this all agree. 'Now, then,' says he, 'we will hold defendant to the proof that he was at Houston, for we are told by the judge that the burden is on him, and that he must prove by the preponderance of the evidence. Has he discharged this burden?' All say, 'No.' Then he must be convicted. But if he has discharged this burden, then the jury might have a reasonable doubt of his being at Galveston. But the first juror replies: 'The judge charged us that if defendant has shown such facts as raise a reasonable doubt as to whether he was at Galveston or not, we should acquit.' To this all agree; but the second juror says: 'We are also very plainly told by his honor that the burden is on him to prove that he was not at Galveston, and this must be done by the preponderance of evidence, and we have all agreed that it has not been done by him.'"

What Instructions Proper on this Point.

—It is said that the following instruction would be proper: "That even if they [the jury] believed the witnesses supporting the alibi, they could not on that account acquit the accused unless it had been proved that the period during which he was shown to have been absent from the scene of the murder covered the time of its commission, or so nearly did it as to raise in their minds a reasonable doubt as to his having passed from one point to the other, and that in determining this question they must look to all the testimony in the case, giving to the witnesses on either side such credit as they thought them entitled to." Polard v. State, 53 Miss. 424.

Harmless Error. — Where there is evidence tending to prove an alibi, a general statement in the charge that the defendant may establish any fact essential to his defense by a mere preponderance of evidence, though objectionable in itself, is not prejudicially erroneous as applied to the defense of alibi, where the court specifically charged that if, from the whole case, the evidence was sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant was present at the time and place of the murder, he should be acquitted. People v. Tarm Pol, 86 Cal. 225; People v. Chun Heong, 86 Cal. 330.

Com.*, 112 Pa. St. 220, in which it was held that where a corrupt attempt to manufacture an alibi failed, the court properly instructed that such failure might be regarded as indicative of the defendant's guilt [distinguishing Turner v. Com., 86 Pa. St. 54]; Com. v. McMahon, 145 Pa. St. 413, where it was held that the defense of alibi being set up, it was not improper for the court to instruct that if it "was false, and manufactured by the defense, it should go for nothing, and should have some weight against the defendant."

Evidence of Alibi for Jury. — Evidence of an alibi, whether sufficient to render the guilt of the defendant impossible.

In speaking of the statement made by text-writers it is said that "this is stated as a fact which we all know to be true, and not as a rule of law to be charged by a court."¹ So it has been held erroneous to charge that a failure to prove an alibi ought to raise a strong presumption against the bona fides of the defense,² or is a circumstance unfavorable to the defendant,³ or that the presumption is that the evidence of the prosecution is true.⁴

13. As to Evidence to Establish Identity. — In instructing as to the strength of evidence necessary to identify the accused as the person who committed the offense, it is error to charge that "all that is necessary in order to justify the jury in finding the defendant guilty is that they shall be satisfied from the evidence of the defendant's guilt, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, although they may not be entirely satisfied from the evidence that the defendant and no other person committed the alleged offense."⁵ On the other hand, the court may properly refuse an instruction that the jury must have "an abiding confidence and full faith" that the witnesses were not mistaken in the fact of such identification by a personal recognition,⁶ or that if or only improbable, is proper for the jury, and he is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt the jury may entertain on this point. Where a defendant attempts to prove an alibi and fails to do so, it should have no greater weight to convince a jury of his guilt than a failure to prove any other important item of defense, and should not, generally speaking, operate to his prejudice. Miller v. People, 39 Ill. 458.

Circumstance to Be Weighed Against Defendant. — In Kilgore v. State, 74 Ala. 5, the following instruction was approved: "An unsuccessful attempt to prove an alibi, in a criminal case, is a circumstance to be weighed against the defendant." This decision hardly seems to be in line with the rule above stated.

It cannot be said that an unsuccessful attempt to prove an alibi is a circumstance of great weight against the prisoner. People v. Malaspina, 57 Cal. 628.

2. Com. v. Fisher, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 386. See also Turner v. Com., 86 Pa. St. 54, where it was held erroneous to charge that an alibi, if proved, "constitutes a complete defense; if not proved, and if you think it has not, the attempt to manufacture evidence is a circumstance which always bears against the person. No innocent person is driven to manufacture evidence."

3. Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511; White v. State, 31 Ind. 262. See also Prince v. State, 100 Ala. 144, where it was held that the following charge was erroneous: "If the defendant has failed to establish his alibi through the perjury or through the want of recollection of his witnesses, it is a circumstance against him."

4. Sawyers v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 694.

The court charged that "the failure of either of the defendants to account for his whereabouts during all the time within which the offense might have been committed is not of itself a circumstance tending to prove his guilt, but a failure of this character may be properly considered by you in connection with any other evidence in the case tending to prove guilt, if you find that there is such." It was held that that part of the instruction in italics was erroneous. Parker v. State, 136 Ind. 284.

5. People v. Kerrick, 52 Cal. 446; People v. Phipps, 39 Cal. 326; People v. Padilla, 42 Cal. 535; People v. Carrillo, 70 Cal. 643. See also People v. Brown, 56 Cal. 405, in which a similar instruction was held erroneous, the instruction being as follows: "You are not legally bound to acquit him [the defendant] because you may not be entirely satisfied that the defendant and no other person committed the alleged offense."

6. Hughes v. State, 75 Ala. 35.

the prosecuting witness "may be mistaken" in the identity of the accused then the jury ought to acquit him.¹

14. As to Arguments of Counsel—a. AS TO CONSIDERATION TO BE GIVEN ARGUMENTS. — While it has been held not improper to charge the jury that the attorneys on either side are not supposed to be impartial, and that the jury are to take their statements guardedly,² it will be error to charge that no consideration is to be given to arguments of counsel,³ or that the jury shall not consider any argument of counsel as to the law of the case,⁴ as parties have a right to be heard by counsel, and it is the privilege of counsel to address the jury on the facts.⁵

1. Booker v. State, 76 Ala. 22, in which it is said that "a mere possibility of mistake [as to the identity of the accused] is not the equivalent of that insufficiency of proof which, as matter of law, generates a reasonable doubt and demands acquittal."

Establishing Identity of the Accused to an Absolute Moral Certainty. — The refusal of the court to give an instruction to the jury that "the identity of the accused must be established to an absolute moral certainty, and every fact and circumstance must be established to the same degree of certainty as the main fact which these independent circumstances, taken together, tend to establish. If this certainty is not proven, then the jury must acquit the defendant," is not error. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421.

Identity of Person from Identity of Name. — On a trial for robbery, where the prosecution offers in evidence the deposition taken on the preliminary examination, which shows that the person charged with the offense has the same name as the defendant and the latter offers no evidence to disprove his identity, the court may instruct the jury that identity of person is presumed from the identity of name, and the failure to instruct that the presumption of evidence is only prima facie, is without prejudice. People v. Riley, 75 Cal. 98.

2. State v. Jones, 29 S. Car. 201.

Directing Jury to Question Raised by Argument. — It is not error for a judge, in charging the jury, after instructing them correctly upon a point presented by counsel, to add that, as a general rule, it is "the fairest and best way" for a jury to decide cases mainly upon the ground taken and discussed by counsel in the argument. Melvin v. Bullard, 35 Vt. 268.

3. Garrison v. Wilcoxson, 11 Ga. 154. See also Smith v. State, 95 Ga. 472.

4. Reeves v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 483.

5. Garrison v. Wilcoxson, 11 Ga. 154.

Instructions Held Not to Violate This Rule. — Where counsel for the accused stated in argument to the jury, in strong language, that the prisoner impressed him, in his statement, as being innocent of the charge, and that he (the counsel) conscientiously did not believe the prisoner was guilty, there was no error in charging that "what counsel said in their argument, and what they believe" was to have no influence whatever with the jury, it clearly appearing from the text that the presiding judge used the words above quoted with reference solely to the statement made by counsel as to his belief in the prisoner's innocence. Smith v. State, 95 Ga. 472. So it is not a violation of the rule to charge that "I cannot do anything towards brushing away the sophistries of counsel," where the words quoted occur when the court is stating exactly and fully the restrictions of the law upon a judge endeavoring to comment upon the facts in testimony to the jury, and where there is not the slightest indication of any personal application of the words to any particular counsel. State v. Way, 38 S. Car. 347.

Effect of Failure to Except. — The court charged: "What counsel on either side may say, in the course of argument, as to their personal belief in the guilt or innocence of the defendant, is not in any degree evidence, and as such will be entirely disregarded by you, and you will try the defendant wholly by the law as given you in this charge, and by the testimony admitted to go before you, and allow nothing else to influence you in finding your verdict." In

b. CORRECTING IMPROPER ARGUMENTS BY INSTRUCTIONS. — Counsel, in arguing the cause to the jury, are justified in referring to the evidence and in making from it such deductions as they think are justified by the evidence.¹ But where the legitimate limit of argument is transcended and prejudice is likely to result, the trial judge should, especially when requested, correct the tendency of the argument to mislead. In jurisdictions where the argument precedes the charge it is in a measure discretionary whether this should be done by stopping and reproving counsel at the time, or by setting the matter right in the charge,² and in a number of decisions it has been held sufficient to correct the error in the charge,³ the statement being made in one of them that it is perhaps the most appropriate time to make the correction when charging the jury.⁴ But it has been held that where counsel grossly abuses his privilege, to the manifest prejudice of the opposite party, it is the duty of the judge to stop him then and there, and that a failure to do so is good ground for a new trial.⁵

commenting on this charge the reviewing court said: "A very nice and most serious question would have been presented in the case we are considering had this portion of the charge [the italicized portion] been specially excepted to. This, however, was not done, and the question is, was it calculated, under the facts and circumstances of the case, to injure the rights of defendant? In view of the explanation made by the learned judge, we think not. He says: 'As to denying the right to be heard by counsel, I allowed four counsel to speak for the defense—all that they asked; and gave them unlimited time, the four aggregating seven hours.'" Roe v. State, 25 Tex. App. 33.

1. People v. Hite, 8 Utah 461, where the following charge was refused: "The jury are further instructed that whatever may have been said or claimed by counsel on either side during the introduction of the testimony, and the examination of the witnesses, or in their arguments to the court, should have no influence whatever with the jury in determining the facts in the case, except so far as the testimony when considered altogether may show the statement to have been true. The jury should not be influenced by anything but the testimony in the cause, with whatever light may have been reflected thereon by the arguments and analysis of counsel and the law as it has been given you in charge by the court, and from these alone endeavor to arrive at the very truth regardless of results." The reviewing court considered this charge improper as tending to limit the effect of legitimate argument.

2. Jenkins v. North Carolina Ore Dressing Co., 65 N. Car. 564.

Correcting Misrepresentations of Law. — It is the duty of the court, in the trial of both civil and criminal cases, to correct any misrepresentations of law made to the jury, although admitted to be law by the parties or their counsel. State v. Johnson, 1 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 354.

3. Fry v. Bennett, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 200; State v. O'Neal, 7 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 251; Melvin v. Easley, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 386.

5. Jenkins v. North Carolina Ore Dressing Co., 65 N. Car. 564. See generally article ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL, vol. 2, p. 750.

Correcting Error After Disagreement of Jury. — On a trial for larceny the prosecuting officer said that if the judge had believed that the defendant had made out a fair claim to the property, he would have directed a verdict of acquittal without their leaving the box; but as he had not done so, the judge must not have believed that a fair claim to the property had been shown by the defendant. This passed unnoticed by the judge then, and in his charge, but

15. Limiting Effect of Evidence — a. PROPRIETY OF SUCH INSTRUCTIONS. — It happens not infrequently that evidence is admitted for some special purpose and can be properly considered for no other. When this is the case it is, of course, proper so to instruct the jury.¹

b. NECESSITY OF GIVING SUCH INSTRUCTIONS — (1) In Criminal Cases. — In criminal cases, at least, the rule is well settled that whenever extraneous matter is admitted in evidence for a specific purpose incidental to, but which is not admissible directly to prove, the main issue, and which might tend, if not explained, to exercise an improper influence upon the jury as to the main issue, injurious and prejudicial to the rights of a party, it is the duty of the court in charging to limit the effect of the evidence to the purpose for which it was admitted,² and that, too, when the jury returned with a verdict of guilty, and on being polled three of them did not concur, the judge informed them that he had no opinion of his own, and that it was improper for the counsel so to have represented him. It was held that this was erroneous; that the remarks of counsel were improper; and that the attempted correction of them by the court came too late. State v. Caveness, 78 N. Car. 484.

Evidence of Extraneous Crime to Show Intent or Motive. — Where evidence of an extraneous crime is admitted for the whether such an instruction has been requested or not.¹ And it has been held in one state that nondirection in this regard is reversible error even in the absence of exceptions.² Of course if the jury could not possibly have concluded that the evidence was admitted for any other purpose than that for which it was admitted, no cautionary instruction is necessary.³

(2) In Civil Cases. — In civil cases the authorities are conflicting as to whether an omission to give an instruction specially limiting the effect of evidence admitted to a particular purpose, when no request has been made therefor, is erroneous.⁴

purpose of showing the intent or motive of the defendant in the commission of the act alleged against him, it is the duty of the trial court, in charging the jury, to explain the purpose for which it was admitted, and to limit the effect of the evidence to this purpose alone. McCall v. State, 14 Tex. App. 353.

On a trial for arson, where evidence of admissions by the defendant that he had poisoned the horses of the man whose house was burned was admitted, it was the duty of the court to charge that such evidence could only be considered as tending to show malice, and not to prove the commission of the crime charged. Kollock v. State, 88 Wis. 663.

When evidence of collateral facts or of a distinct offense is admitted as proof of the guilty knowledge or intent of the accused, the charge should apprise the jury of the legitimate scope and purpose of such evidence, and thus guard them against treating it as proof of the corpus delicti. Francis v. State, 7 Tex. App. 501.

Impeaching Evidence. — If evidence of prior convictions is admitted in order to discredit the defendant's testimony, it is erroneous to refuse a charge that it should be considered for no other purpose. Fossdahl v. State, 89 Wis. 482.

If a defendant on cross-examination admits that he has been charged with other crimes, it is reversible error not to instruct that such evidence can only be considered as affecting his credibility. Oliver v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 541. So where evidence of a former conviction has been admitted, it is reversible error not to instruct that this evidence can only be considered as affecting the defendant's credibility. Hutton v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1896) 33 S. W. Rep. 969.

Exception — Misdemeanor Cases. — It has been held that upon a prosecution for a misdemeanor it is not necessary for the court, unless requested, to give an instruction limiting the effect of the evidence to the purpose for which it was admitted. Duke v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 283.

2. Martin v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1896) 36 S. W. Rep. 976; Paris v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 82; Davidson v. State, 22 Tex. App. 372; Thornley v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 982; Burks v. State, 24 Tex. App. 326.

3. Holly v. Com., (Ky. 1896) 36 S. W. Rep. 532. See also State v. Gaston, 96 Iowa 505, where it was held that if the purpose of admitting the testimony objected to was clearly apparent, it was not prejudicial error to fail to give a charge limiting the effect of the evidence.

In Giving These Instructions They Should Be So Framed as neither to withdraw the evidence from the consideration of the jury, nor to restrain them from giving to it, in connection with the other evidence in the case, such weight in respect to the matter which it proves, in the light of reason and good sense, as they may, as thus advised, believe it to deserve. Harrington v. State, 19 Ohio St. 264.

4. In McDermott v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 87 Mo. 285, it was held that evidence admissible for one purpose, but inadmissible for another, should, when admitted, be so controlled by an instruction, and the judgment was reversed because this was not done.

16. Cautioning Against Sympathy or Prejudice. — It will, in general, be proper for the trial court to caution the jury against sympathy for or prejudice against one of the parties.¹ Of course

In Worthing v. Worthing, 64 Me. 335, it was held that when evidence is admissible for a special purpose only, the jury should be instructed to limit its use to that purpose, and a general instruction permitting its use for all purposes is erroneous.

In Weir v. McGee, 25 Tex. Supp. 20, it was held that where evidence tending to impeach the credibility of the witness, but inadmissible therefor, is offered for another purpose, it should be carefully restricted to such other purpose by another instruction.

In Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Johnson, 72 Tex. 95, it was held that when evidence is admitted for a specific purpose which is not competent under the main issue involved, the court should by instruction confine its consideration to the specific matter to which it is relevant, but that a failure thus to limit the application in the main charge will not constitute cause for reversal when no special charge is asked having that object in view.

In Lipprant v. Lipprant, 52 Ind. 276, it was held that a failure to instruct as to the proper purpose for which evidence was introduced should not be assigned as error, unless requests for instructions of that nature were made and exceptions saved to a ruling refusing them.

In Anson v. Evans, 19 Colo. 274, the court said in effect that where evidence is admitted for a special purpose, it should be limited to that purpose by an instruction; but as the cause was reversed on other grounds, the court said that it did not consider it necessary to determine whether this was reversible error.

Instructions Held Proper Under This Head — In General. — An instruction is not objectionable because it contains the words: "You will allow no false sympathy to sway you from a proper discharge of your duty." Smith v. State, 4 Neb. 288. Nor is it objectionable to charge that the jury have no right to permit their feelings of sympathy to interfere with their duty, whatever that may be under the law and the evidence, nor, on the other hand, to allow any considerations of public policy or over-anxiety to enforce the law to influence them in the fair consideration and decision of the case, otherwise than in strict accordance with the evidence in the cause. State v. Talbott, 73 Mo. 347. Nor is it objectionable to charge that the jury, in reaching a verdict, must not be controlled by any fear of what the punishment may be. Coyle v. Com., 100 Pa. St. 579; Brantley v. State, 87 Ga. 149; Wilson v. State, 69 Ga. 240.

Race Prejudice. — In an action by a negro against a white man, to recover for assault and battery, the court may properly charge the jury to consider the case "without regard to the difference in race or color of the parties." Lunsford v. Walker, 93 Ala. 36.

Public Opinion. — So the jury may properly be cautioned not to be influenced by public opinion, whether for or against the defendant, and be told that they are not to concern themselves with the pleasure or displeasure of the public. McTyier v. State, 91 Ga. 254.

Sympathy on Account of Sex. — In an action for assault the court may properly caution the jury not to "lose their heads," and find for the plaintiff on general principles because of her sex. Bingham v. Bernard, 36 Minn. 114.

Instruction Held Improper. — Instructions which characterize the people in attendance at a trial as a lobby, who have packed the court-room with intent to influence the jury to decide the

if the attendant circumstances do not warrant it, a request for such an instruction is properly refused,¹ and it has been said that the giving of such instructions is necessarily very much within the discretion of the court, and that refusal to give them cannot ordinarily be assigned as error.² On the other hand, cases might readily be supposed in which such an instruction would not only be proper but necessary.³

XIX. WITHDRAWING OR MODIFYING INSTRUCTIONS. — The court has the power at any time during the trial to modify its instructions to the jury, or to revoke them entirely, if, upon reflection, it is considered that they have been erroneously given.⁴ This it case without regard to evidence, are properly refused. Lynch v. Bates, 139 Ind. 206.

Improper Remarks in Cautioning Against Prejudice. — To remark, in cautioning a jury against prejudice, that the defendant is charged with a "dastardly crime," is not ground for a new trial. State v. McCarter, 98 N. Car. 637.

1. Central Branch Union Pac. R. Co. v. Andrews, 41 Kan. 371, in which it was held not erroneous to refuse an instruction that a railroad corporation is entitled to the same protection under the law as individual litigants, where it does not appear that there was any reason to distrust the integrity of the jury, or to impute partiality or prejudice to them.

2. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Pulver, 126 Ill. 329, in which an instruction cautioning the jury against prejudice and favoritism was held properly refused.

3. Blizzard v. Applegate, 77 Ind. 516, in which case it was said: "If, in the case in hand, an effort had been made in argument to array prejudice against either party on account of his profession or employment, it was the right of the court to caution the jury to discard such considerations. It is the duty of the trial court to keep the scales of justice evenly balanced, and to rebuke any attempt to carry a case before a jury by exciting class prejudices, or invoking distinctions of race, religion, politics, or otherwise, between the litigating parties." See also Quinby v. Railway Co., 2 Del. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 285, in which it was said that where the court discovers prejudice, it is necessary to state the law so clearly and unequivocally as to leave the jury no avenue of escape from their sworn duty.

Doyle v. Dobson, 74 Mich. 567. In this case it was said: "If such an instruction is asked it ought to be given, in most cases, as such an instruction ought not to do any harm or be of undue advantage to either party. A careful examination, however, of the record in this case, convinces us that the verdict was a just one, and not brought about by any undue sympathy or prejudice in favor of the plaintiff. We shall, therefore, not disturb it because of the failure of the court to give or to refer to the subject-matter of this seventh request."

In answer to a request to charge that the jury had no right to be governed by nor act upon their sympathies, it was held not erroneous to charge: "You have no right to act upon your sympathies without any proof; but if the proof happened to concur with your sympathies, you are not to disregard the proof because of that fact; you are to be governed by the proof in the case." Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

After Retirement of Jury. — Erroneous instructions may be withdrawn after the jury have retired by causing them to be returned into open court, and, in the presence of the objecting party, withdrawing the obnoxious charge and giving a correct one. Buntin v. State, 68 Ind. 38.

Withdrawing Declarations of Law. — A party who has presented propositions of law may be allowed to withdraw them where the other party submits no may do either with or without request.¹ It is well settled that where a judge in his charge lays down erroneous propositions, but subsequently corrects the misdirection and lays down the correct rule, no error is presented for review.² If an erroneous instruction is thus withdrawn, it will be presumed that the jury accepted and acted upon the correction.³ In order to obviate an erroneous instruction the withdrawal must be absolute,⁴ and in such explicit terms as to preclude the inference that the jury might have been influenced thereby.⁵ Where an erroneous instruction has been given, the error is not cured by the giving of instructions explanatory of or contradictory to those first given.⁶

What Is a Sufficient Withdrawal. — Where the court recites certain statements in its charge to which exceptions have been taken, and remarks: "I withdraw what I said upon those points, as there was no evidence to that effect," the error is thereby cured. Sergeant v. Martin, 25 W. N. C. (Pa.) 565.

What Is Not a Sufficient Withdrawal. — Where an erroneous instruction was excepted to by the defendant and waived by the plaintiff, and the presiding judge said: "If the party declines to receive it, I will leave the matter as it stands before the jury," it was held that the jury were not instructed with sufficient distinctness to disregard the instruction given, and that a new trial should be granted. Eldridge v. Hawley, 115 Mass. 410.

An instruction materially affecting the case was given, and withdrawn, about the close of the argument, by the court stepping to the counsel-table, and, in the sight of counsel and jury, removing the instruction and making it "refused," and returning it to the plaintiff's counsel in full view of all present, the jury's attention not being specially called to the change in the instructions as read to them by the court, except by the removing of the same. The jury on retiring took all the instructions except the one so removed, and returned a verdict for the full amount of the plaintiff's claim. It was held that this was not a sufficient withdrawal, and a new trial was granted. New Albany Woolen Mills v. Meyers, 43 Mo. App. 124.

Withdrawal Beneficial to Defendant. — Where the court, in an action for false imprisonment, gave the jury an instruction permitting them to award exemplary or punitive damages to the plaintiff upon testimony justifying such damages; and subsequently recalled the jury and withdrew from them that instruction, making no other modification in the charge, and denied the application of the defendants to address the jury further after the instruction had been withdrawn; it was held that the ruling of the court in withdrawing the instruction, although erroneous, was beneficial to the interests of the defendants, and there could be no reversal unless the erroneous ruling were injurious to the party complaining. Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Boyce, 36 Kan. 350.

Presumptions on Appeal. — The withdrawal will not be presumed, but must be affirmatively shown. Lower v. Franks, 115 Ind. 334, wherein the court said: "It is true, as claimed, that this court has frequently held that where the court below has refused to give an instruction which stated the law correctly and was applicable to the facts of the case, but where the record disclosed nothing as to whether any instructions were given, we will presume that the court below did its duty, and gave general instructions covering all the matters in controversy, and will not reverse the judgment upon the ground that the instruction may have been refused because the subject matter of it had already been given to the jury. That rule of practice has, however, no application to the case before us, where a series of general instructions was given, and one of the series is adjudged to be erroneous. The giving of a fatally erroneous instruction can only be cured by a plain withdrawal of the instruction, and the withdrawal of such an instruction will not be presumed, but must be affirmatively shown."

I. NATURE AND CHARACTER OF ACTION — 1. Action at Law — In General. — The ordinary remedy upon policies of insurance of all kinds is an action at law.¹

Form of Action. — Debt and covenant are the appropriate form of common-law actions upon policies under seal.² Assumpsit will not lie in such cases unless there is a new consideration,³ or unless permitted by statute.⁴ Debt or covenant will lie on a policy under seal, renewed in accordance with its terms, by an indorsement or receipt not under seal.⁵ But assumpsit may be brought upon certificates of renewal or indorsements of renewal made upon payments of a premium where these constitute a new contract.⁶ Assumpsit is also the appropriate

1. Carter v. United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 463.

2. Contract of Indemnity Against Unliquidated Damages. — Covenant and not debt should be brought upon a policy under seal in which the insurer covenants to pay the loss or repair or rebuild at his election. Flanagan v. Camden Mut. Ins. Co., 25 N. J. L. 506. See also articles COVENANT, vol. 5, p. 344; DEBT, vol. 5, p. 909.

Young*, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 332; Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 479; Pelly v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 1 Burr. 341.

4. Protection L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer, 81 Ill. 88, where the court, after quoting a section of the Illinois Practice Act, says: "It then follows, although the policy was under seal, an action of assumpsit can be maintained upon it under this statute. Had the policy not been under seal assumpsit would have unquestionably been the proper action, and this section has abolished the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, as to the form of action."

remedy upon policies not under seal and parol agreements to insure.¹ Where a policy issued in pursuance of a contract to insure is not delivered, trover will lie for its value.²

2. Suits in Equity — a. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — REFORMATION OR CANCELLATION OF POLICY — Specific Performance. — Where there is an agreement to insure, and loss occurs before the policy is written, the remedy is in equity. Courts of equity decree specific performance of the contract to insure by directing the issuance of a policy as of the date of the contract, and directing payment of the loss.³ So chancery has jurisdiction of a suit for the specific performance of a contract of life insurance on the co-operative or assessment plan.⁴ Under the code practice which obtains in many states, suit is brought directly on the agreement to insure.⁵

Reformation of Policy. — Where, by reason of mutual mistake, or of mistake of one party coupled with fraud or inequitable conduct on the part of the other, the policy as it stands contains provisions or descriptions or representations which preclude a recovery thereon, or omits provisions which it should contain, remedy on the policy must be sought in equity by suit for reformation.

Where a policy under seal contains a covenant for extension from year to year on payment of premiums, extension as a specialty is held to be intended, and assumpsit is not maintainable. But where there is no such covenant in the policy, which expressly terminates at a specified time, a renewal receipt constitutes a distinct parol contract referring to and incorporating the terms of the policy upon which assumpsit may be brought. Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Floss, 67 Md. 403.

England. — Mackenzie v. Coulson, L. R. 8 Eq. 368.

Reformation as a Prerequisite. — Where a description, provision of the policy, or statement in an application made a part of the policy, is claimed to have been inserted or omitted by mutual mistake, and such description, provision, or statement would preclude a recovery on the policy as it stands, reformation is a prerequisite to recovery. Collins v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 44 Minn. 440; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 11 Ind. App. 72.

If the error in description is not such as to avoid the policy for uncertainty, and the true description appears sufficiently from extrinsic evidence, it has been held unnecessary to have reformation. State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Neb. 527; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Gebhart, 32 Neb. 144; Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 65 Iowa 308.

And if the policy by accident, mistake, or design is made payable to a person by a wrong name, as where insurance applied for by the "estate of J. B." was made to "J. B.," reformation is not necessary, but the mistake may be shown in an action at law on the policy. Lumberman's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bell, 166 Ill. 400. Compare Lawrence v. Sebor, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 203; Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851; Holladay v. Phenix Ins. Co., 7 U. S. App. 325; Ruan v. Gardner, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 145.

Reformation Is Required where there is a mutual mistake, or a mistake of the draftsman whereby something is written other than what the parties intended. Where the insurer or his agent falsely records answers in the application, or writes them in without authority, no advantage can be taken of this fraud by the insurer, and if the contract may be recovered upon with such answer or statements removed, reformation is unnecessary.

7. Uhlman v. New York L. Ins. Co., 109 N. Y. 421, distinguishing and overruling the dictum in Bogardus v. New York L. Ins. Co., 101 N. Y. 328. In the case first cited the court said: "We think the payment of a premium by the policy holders of this class of policies is much more like that of a deposit in a bank by a depositor, as to which it is conceded there is no such relation of trustee and cestui que trust. See Foley v. Hill, 2 H. L. Cas. 32. By the very terms of this policy the amount of the fund is necessarily uncertain. What it may be depends not only upon the number of policies taken out during the period, but upon the number of policies in the class which may lapse or become forfeited, and upon the amount of the proper expenses of the company which shall justly become chargeable to this fund, so that the dividend which may come to the plaintiff or any other policy holder depends upon numerous contingencies, and in relation to all these matters the parties have agreed, in specific terms contained in the policy itself, that this surplus or fund, derived as already stated, 'shall be apportioned equitably among such policies of the same class as shall complete their ten-year dividend period.' Here is the extent of the obligation of the defendant — that it shall equitably apportion this sum. As has been said, there is no title in the plaintiff to any specific moneys. There is in reality no specific or separate fund, as it is made up simply by a system of debits and credits contained in the books of the company, which debits and credits are made during the running of the tontine period. There is no separation of the fund belonging to this system,

So in the United States courts,¹ and in the province of Ontario,² the division of the tontine fund is viewed as a matter which rests largely in the discretion of the company's managers, and with which the courts will not interfere by compelling an accounting. On the other hand, it is held in Massachusetts that the holder of such a policy is entitled to an accounting, not on the ground that he is a cestui que trust and the insurer a technical fiduciary,³ but by virtue of the general jurisdiction over accounts conferred on courts of equity by the statutes of that state.⁴ It is noticeable, however, that the United States court, in accordance with the rule above indicated, though sitting in Massachusetts and construing the same statute, refuses to allow an accounting.⁵ In Illinois, the Supreme Court, while not passing specifically upon the right to an accounting, holds that the officers of the company are trustees of the tontine fund,⁶ and this doctrine would seem to include the right of the insured to compel them to account for its administration.

3. Mutual Benefit Insurance. — The proper remedy on a contract or certificate of mutual benefit insurance is an action at law.⁷

and no legal necessity for such separation from any other fund or property belonging to the defendant. The situation of the parties is that of debtor and creditor simply, the amount of such debt being determinable by this equitable apportionment, which, taking the language of the policy into consideration, necessarily means that the apportionment is to be made by the corporation through its officers."

3. Pierce v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 145 Mass. 56, where the court, per Dewey, J., observes: "It is said that the plaintiff has a sufficient remedy at common law; that he can bring his action at law, and that upon proper interrogatories addressed to the defendant all the information necessary for the proper adjustment of the account may be obtained. But even if an action at law could be maintained where an account is complicated so that a full examination and settlement of previous accounts, transactions, or methods of business are necessary, and where the whole matter is entirely within the knowledge of the defendant, it cannot so conveniently or accurately be investigated at common law as in equity. * * * That the accounts are singularly complicated, and that the method by which the value of the share of the plaintiff, which he has obtained by full payment of his premiums and completion of his tontine period, is ascertained is one of much complexity and difficulty in its application, appear from the evidence reported. A court of equity is the appropriate tribunal for dealing with such an account, and the defendant is fairly bound to produce an account, from the data in its possession, which shall show that it has complied with its promise equitably to apportion to the plaintiff his share in the accumulations made through the operation of the tontine provisions in his policy."

4. Mass. Pub. Stat. (1882), c. 151, § 2, subd. 10, which confers such jurisdiction "when the nature of the account is such that it cannot be conveniently and properly adjusted and settled in an action at law."

insurance is a maritime contract, and is within the admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts.¹

II. VENUE AND FORUM — 1. Locus — a. IN GENERAL. — An Action on a Policy of Insurance Is Transitory, and may be brought wherever the insurer may be found, without regard to the situs of the property or subject of the insurance, or to the place where the contract was made.² Hence it follows that an insurance company may be sued at its principal place of business, or wherever it maintains an agency of such character as to make the service binding under the laws of the jurisdiction in question.

Action Against Foreign Insurance Company. — The venue of actions on policies issued by foreign insurance companies is generally regulated by the statutes, which require such corporations to designate agents upon whom service of process may be made. A corporation which has designated such an agent is "found" in the district where such agent does business, within the meaning of the federal judiciary acts.³ Such statutes are variously construed as to their scope in permitting suit by service on such agents where the parties are nonresidents or when the subject of insurance is without the state. It is well established that the object is to give an additional remedy to citizens of the state, and that the means provided for service are not exclusive, but are cumulative.⁴ It is generally held that these statutes apply only to contracts made in the state, or by an insurer or insured in the state, not to insurance effected by a nonresident with a foreign corporation on property outside of the state.⁵ In such cases, under the general rule, suit may still be brought in such state if jurisdiction may be obtained by reason of debts or property within the state or of

Where a policy was taken out in Louisiana, and the insured removed to Kentucky, and paid renewal premiums there, it was held that such payments did not make a new contract in Kentucky, and that suit on the policy could not be maintained in the latter state by sufficient service other than under the statutes in question.¹ But where the subject of the insurance is within the state, the statute may generally be availed of, though the parties are nonresidents,² or where the insured is a resident, though the subject of the insurance is in another state.³ The contract sued on must be of such a nature as to fall within the provisions of the statute, or the statutory mode of service may not be employed.⁴

Insurance Policy as Assets of Decedent. — An insurance policy is regarded as a debt at the place where it is payable or where the insurer resides, so that administration may be founded upon it and the administrator may sue in that jurisdiction.⁵ But the policy itself constitutes assets on which administration may be had and suit founded in the jurisdiction where the deceased died possessed of it,⁶ or at his domicile, if he died elsewhere, though the policy may have been on his person when he died,⁷ unless perhaps by its terms, it is payable at a particular place not in such jurisdiction.⁸

b. COUNTY. — Where statutes provide that an insurance company may be sued within the county in which the cause of action or some part of it arose, it is generally held that an action on a policy of life insurance is maintainable in the county where the insured resided and died.⁹ But in South Carolina it is held that the cause of action arises only where the policy is payable.¹⁰

c. ACCIDENT INSURANCE ACTIONS. — Accident insurance companies are regarded as insurance companies within the meaning of statutes mentioned in the preceding section; ¹ likewise plate-glass insurance companies. ²

d. MARINE INSURANCE ACTIONS. — Where suit is brought on a contract of marine insurance in admiralty, the provisions of the federal judiciary acts, restricting civil suits to the district in which the defendant may be found or of which he may be a resident, do not apply. A libel in admiralty may be maintained wherever the defendant may be found, or personal property or credits may be attached. And service on an agent appointed by a foreign corporation under state statutes will be held sufficient. ³

e. PROVISIONS IN CHARTER, BY-LAWS, OR POLICY. — Provisions in the by-laws or policies of mutual insurance companies requiring suit to be brought in a particular county are generally invalid, ⁴ and like provisions in the charter and by-laws of a foreign mutual insurance company have been held to be of no effect. ⁵ Stipulations in policies of life insurance by which the insured waives the right to sue elsewhere than in the state where the company is incorporated, or requiring suit to be brought in a certain county, are invalid. ⁶

Prior to its passage our courts had no control over these foreign companies, who felt licensed to defraud our citizens out of their just dues whenever they felt so disposed. In many instances the owners of property insured submitted to ruinous compromises rather than undergo the vexation, expense, and uncertainty of litigating with a powerful corporation in the courts of a distant state. The legislature, therefore, very wisely determined that they should not do business in this state unless under certain restrictions imposed for the public good. The right of claiming to sue in our courts is one of the concessions made by these companies for the privilege of being permitted to establish agencies here. The agreement of the parties, then, in this case, is not only to divest our courts of their jurisdiction, but to relieve the defendant of an obligation not imposed by the insured but by a law of the state. We are clearly

f. INSOLVENT COMPANY. — Where a foreign life insurance company licensed to do business in Missouri became insolvent and was being wound up in the state where it was incorporated, pursuant to the terms of its charter, it was held that neither policy holders nor beneficiaries of death claims could maintain suit in Missouri by attachment of property of the corporation in that state.¹

licenses granted to foreign insurance companies revocable in case such companies remove causes to the federal courts are valid to that extent, though ineffectual in so far as they require the companies to abstain from removal.¹

b. TRIBUNALS OF SOCIETY OR ORDER. — Where the rules or by-laws of fraternal or insurance societies provide that claims for benefits shall be submitted to the tribunals of the society or order, it is generally required that such provisions be complied with before resort to the courts.² In some jurisdictions it is held that the decision of the organization or its tribunals as to the right of a member to benefits is final, in the absence of fraud, and that no resort to the courts may be had thereafter.³ But in most jurisdictions such remedies are held cumulative only, and in the absence of an express and unequivocal provision that the decision of the tribunal of the order shall be final, the courts refuse to give it such effect.⁴ Most of the courts taking this a jury to determine any rights of property that might be called in question, but that such rights should in all such cases be submitted to arbitration or to the decision of a single judge, the authorities are clear that he would not thereby be debarred from resorting to the ordinary legal tribunals of the state. There is no sound principle upon which such agreements can be specifically enforced. We see no difference in principle between the cases supposed and the case before us. Every citizen is entitled to resort to all the courts of the country, and to invoke the protection which all the laws or all those courts may afford him. A man may not barter away his life or his freedom or his substantial rights. In a criminal case he cannot, as was held in Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, be tried in any other manner than by a jury of twelve men, although he consent in open court to be tried by a jury of eleven men. In a civil case he may submit his particular suit by his own consent to an arbitration, or to the decision of a single judge. So he may omit to exercise his right to remove his suit to a federal tribunal, as often as he thinks fit, in each recurring case. In these aspects any citizen may no doubt waive the rights to which he may be entitled. He cannot, however, bind himself in advance by an agreement, which may be specifically enforced, thus to forfeit his rights at all times and on all occasions, whenever the case may be presented. That the agreement of the insurance company is invalid upon the principles mentioned, numerous cases may be cited to prove. They show that agreements in advance to oust the courts of the jurisdiction conferred by law are illegal and void." Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186.

view either hold or imply that such society or organization cannot oust the jurisdiction of the courts by providing that its own decisions or the decisions of its tribunal shall be final,¹ and that provisions to that effect are void.

III. PARTIES — 1. Who May Sue — a. THE INSURED. — At common law an action on a policy of insurance under seal must be brought in the name of the covenantee, who may recover for the benefit of the interest insured, whether that of owner or mortgagee.² A contract of insurance is not assignable at com-

Where the remedy by appeal in the tribunals of the organization is held cumulative only, suit may be brought without resort to that remedy. In such jurisdictions such parts of the rules as require submission of claims to an officer or committee or board as a condition precedent to suit are upheld, but such parts as allow an appeal, unless the appeal is expressly and unequivocally enjoined, are held to give an additional remedy which need not be pursued before bringing suit. Supreme Council, etc. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52; Voluntary Relief Dept., etc. v. Spencer, (Ind. If the organization denies the membership of the deceased, or if claim is made by a beneficiary who is not a member, provisions requiring "members" to resort to tribunals of the organization or allowing appeals or other remedies to members are inapplicable. Some courts hold that the provisions regulating submission to a board or committee are merely a revocable agreement to arbitrate, and do not even constitute a condition precedent to suit so far as they attempt to give tribunals of the society power to pass upon the whole matter in controversy, though valid where or in so far as they provide for the ascertainment of particular facts. mon law so as to give the assignee an action in his own name,¹ except where the policy is assigned with the consent of the insurer, as provided for in the policy.² Therefore, suit on a policy in a mutual insurance company must be brought by the insured, who is a member of the company,³ unless the assignee has paid the premiums on renewal so as to become a member of the company.⁴

b. PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES — Administrator. — For reasons similar to those just mentioned, in the absence of statutes or provisions in the codes of procedure requiring actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, the administrator of the insured and not the beneficiary is the proper party to sue on a policy of life insurance under seal.⁵ So the administrator may sue on a policy not under seal, the promise having been made to the decedent.⁶ But where the policy was issued on the application of the beneficiary, and the latter paid the premiums, he is held to be the insured and the promisee, so that the administrator of the assured cannot sue.⁷

An Executor to whom life insurance is made payable in trust for a beneficiary may sue to recover it, under the code practice, as a trustee of an express trust.⁸

c. HEIR — Fire Insurance — Loss After Death of Insured. — Where real property is insured and a loss occurs after the death of the insured, the insurance money is regarded as real property descending to the heir or devisee,¹ who may, it seems, sue therefor unless debts exist for which the realty would be liable.²

d. AGENTS, BAILEES, ETC. — In General. — Agents, bailees, warehousemen, and the like, obtaining insurance in their own names, for the benefit of others, on property in their care or custody or the subject of the agency, or having an insurable interest, may sue in their own names.³

Insurance by Agent or Bailee "for Whom It May Concern." — Marine insurance may be taken out by an agent, factor, bailee, carrier, trustee, consignee, mortgagee, or any other lienholder to the extent of his own interest, and by the clause "on account of whom it may concern" for all others to the extent of their respective interests, when there is previous authority or subsequent ratification.¹ Action may be brought on such a policy in the name of the party taking it out,² or, in case of his death, in the name of his administrator³ or of the party for whom benefit was intended, the latter having authorized it either before or after loss.⁴ If, how-

If the party with whom a contract is made can bring an action upon it, his administrator or executor can do the same. No instance can be found where it has not so been held. If the administratrix of Alexander could not do it, it would be the only exceptional case where it could not be done. If Alexander was a mere agent, the suit would have been for the benefit of the cestui que trust. The same result would follow if the suit is brought by the administratrix. The court in such case will protect the party interested against the nominal party."

A Policy Issued by a Mutual Insurance Company, for account of whom it may concern, to brokers, and payable to the latter, may be sued on by the owner of the property, although the by-laws of the company provide that only members can be insured therein. Somes v. Equitable Safety Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 531.

Parol Evidence of Agency. — Where a company, in order to evade the laws of a state, issued an open policy to its agents to cover risks indorsed upon it, and the agents placed insurance in that state running in their own name, a party actually insured was allowed to sue for a loss in his own name and re-ever, the policy is under seal, at common law action may be brought by the covenantee only.¹

e. INSURED MORTGAGOR. — See infra, III. 1. h. Mortgagees.

f. PARTNERS AND CO-OWNERS. — Where a Policy Under Seal Is Made to a Firm which afterwards takes in another partner, the new partnership cannot sue upon the policy,² and if a policy under seal provides for extension by payment of further premiums, it is held that extension as a specialty is intended, so that the taking in of an additional partner before renewal does not enable the new partnership to sue upon a loss after renewal.³ But in case no such covenant is contained in the policy, a renewal receipt, made after the taking in of a new partner, is a new contract to which the new partnership is a party, and suit may be brought upon it accordingly.⁴

A Surviving Partner may maintain an action upon a policy issued to the firm on property owned by the partners as tenants in common.⁵

Under the Code Procedure, where an insured took in a partner after issuance of the policy, and there was no assignment, it was held that he might sue in his own name and recover to the extent of his interest.⁶

Floss & Co., and that partnership name represented all the members of the partnership at the date of the contract; and the defendants must be taken to have contracted with the partnership as then constituted. Any other principle would lead to the greatest uncertainty and difficulty in the dealings as between the partnership and third parties. Moreover, by the terms of the original contract, to which the subsequent parol contract is made subject, assignment of that contract, or of an interest therein, was permissible with the consent of the insurance company; and the new parol contract made with the existing partnership, for a continuance of the risk, must be construed as consent given, on the part of the defendants, to accept Cohen, the incoming partner, as one of the assured."

insurance, issued to one person for the benefit of another, is under seal, the beneficiary cannot sue.¹ But where the promise was to the beneficiary and not to the insured, as where the application is made and premiums are paid by the beneficiary, the beneficiary may sue on the policy.²

If the Policy is Not Under Seal, suit may be brought by the beneficiary as on a contract for his benefit in jurisdictions where the parties are allowed to sue on such contracts.³

Surviving Beneficiary. — Where there were three beneficiaries, one of whom died, an action by the survivors without joining the representatives of the deceased beneficiary was held proper. Supreme Lodge, etc. v. Portingall, 167 Ill. 291.

When Executor of Insured a Necessary Defendant. — A beneficiary, who claimed only as collateral security to a debt due from the deceased insured, sued and impleaded a legatee under the will of the deceased who claimed under the will. It was held that the suit would not be determined without making the executor a party. Shove v. Shove, 69 Wis. 425.

Husband and Wife. — Where a husband holds a policy in which his wife is beneficiary, and the policy is wrongfully declared forfeited by the insurer, husband and wife cannot maintain a joint action. Knights Templar, etc., L. Indemnity Co. v. Gravett, 49 Ill. 252.

In Massachusetts beneficiaries are now permitted to sue by statute. Dean v. American Legion of Honor, 156 Mass. 435; Wright v. Vermont L. Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 302.

Contractor's Insurance. — Where a policy was issued on the application and at the expense of a contractor, in the name of the owner of the land upon which a building was erected, with a clause, "With a contractor's insurance for thirty days," the contractor was allowed to sue to recover a loss occurring within the time specified. German F. Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 43 Kan. 567.

Guardian. — Insurance payable by the terms of a policy of life insurance to the general guardian of the children of the insured may be recovered in an action in their behalf by a guardian ad litem. Price v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 497.

5. Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Aurora F. & M. Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 148.

Where insurance was procured by A in the name of A and B, loss first payable to A as his interest might appear, in the mortgage, the insurance is taken by the mortgagor, payable to the mortgagee, and provision is made that no act or default of persons other than the mortgagee shall defeat recovery, it is generally held to be a contract with the latter upon which he may sue.¹ But in some jurisdictions the policy is considered as a contract with the mortgagor who took it out, upon which only he or his representatives may sue.²

Divers Doctrines in Various Jurisdictions. — In those jurisdictions which permit an action by the mortgagee, some of the cases proceed upon the ground that one may sue upon a contract for his benefit, though not a party thereto;³ some of these, as well as others, permit a joint action by mortgagor and mortgagee, unless the mortgage debt exhausts the insurance.⁴ Others, and some of those already enumerated, make a distinction between a policy and A paid the premium, he was allowed to sue in his own name. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Foster, 90 Ill. 121.

Rep. 29; Mitchell v. London Assur. Co., 15 Ont. App. 262. Some of these decisions proceed, in part at least, upon the point that the mortgagee's interest was less than the amount of the loss, or are to be distinguished on that ground. Such was the case in Fire Ins. Companies v. Felrath, 77 Ala. 194. Consequently the question cannot safely be regarded as settled in all the jurisdictions from which cases are cited.

In Michigan the courts hold that where the policy does not insure the mortgagee's interest only, and does not run to the mortgagee, suit must be brought by the mortgagor who took out the policy and paid the premium, although taken out in compliance with the covenant in the mortgage. Min-

In New Jersey the policy is regarded as a contract with the insured upon which he may sue. Martin v. Franklin F. Ins. Co., 38 N. J. L. 140. But the mortgagee may sue also. See New Jersey cases cited infra, p. 397, note 1.

in which the loss is payable to the mortgagee without limitation and one payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear;¹ in others each may sue according to his interest;² still others allow the mortgagee to sue as the "real party in interest."³ In others, again, the provision making the loss payable to the mortgagee is looked upon as an assignment with the consent of the insured,⁴ or the bringing of a suit by the mortgagee as a ratification of the insurance procured for his benefit.⁵ In many of these jurisdictions the mortgagor may sue, as well, with the consent of the mortgagee;⁶ in others the mortgagee may sue in the name of the mortgagor;⁷ in others the mortgagor may sue as the party with whom the contract was made, and the mortgagee also, if the policy is not under seal.¹

Extent of Interest as a Criterion. — In many instances a distinction is made between cases wherein the mortgagee's interest is greater than the amount of the loss and those wherein it is less. In jurisdictions where the code practice obtains, or where each may sue for his interest, if the mortgage debt is greater than the loss the mortgagor may not sue unless he has paid the debt.² Where Vermont Rule. — In Powers v. New England F. Ins. Co., 69 Vt. 494, the court said: "Can the plaintiff maintain this action? The contract was made with him, the consideration moved from him, the promise was made to him, and the decisions in this state are that a suit to enforce the contract must be brought in the name of the one to whom the promise is made, and from whom the consideration moves. Fugure v. St. Joseph's Mut. Soc., 46 Vt. 362. In Davenport v. North-Eastern Mut. L. Assoc., 47 Vt. 528, it was held that the beneficiaries could maintain the action, the court construing the contract as containing a promise to pay to them. Many cases from other states have been cited, but they are not authority here, and no reason is disclosed in any of them why we should overturn the well-settled practice and decisions of our own state. A policy of insurance is sometimes made payable to the insured and his assigns, and sometimes to the mortgagee of the premises, naming him, and at other times to any one holding a mortgage upon the insured property at the time of the loss, whoever he may be. The effect of the provision is to give a mortgagee a lien upon the insurance money in case of loss, securing him by substituting the proceeds of the policy in place of the property, provided it burns, thus letting the property go to the substantial owner, if the property is mortgaged, as is often the case, to its full value. But this interest of the mortgagee in the policy is an equitable, not a legal, one and will be protected in a law court. Upton v. Moore, 44 Vt. 552. If a policy is made payable to a mortgagee, the insurer is not at liberty to pay any sum due under the policy to the insured in disregard of the rights of the beneficiary. A policy of insurance is a mere chose in action; it is non-negotiable; it is not assignable at common law so that the assignee can sue in his own name; and though it may be payable to the insured and his assigns, still, if a loss happens an equitable holder of the policy must sue in the name of the original insured. Aldis, J., in Wood v. Rutland, etc., Mut. F. Ins. Co., 31 Vt. 552. Under our system of pleadings — and no better one has as yet been devised — the insurer cannot be subjected legally to any suit save the one in the name of the party to the contract, and the beneficiary can always protect his rights by suit in the name of the insured. This suit is brought, in accord with our system of pleadings, in the name of the party to the contract, for the benefit of the mortgagee, to the extent of its claim. This fact is alleged in the declaration in express terms. The mortgagee has the right to control the judgment, and any execution issued thereon, until his claim under the policy is extinguished, after which the mortgagor (the plaintiff) is the only party in interest and of record. The judgment will be a complete protection to the defendant against any further suit in respect to all claims under the policy."

it is less the mortgagor is allowed to sue under the code procedure by joining the mortgagee,¹ or even without, for his own interest, and as trustee for the mortgagee,² though in such case it is said to be the better practice to join the mortgagor.³

Summary. — It is believed that the somewhat heterogeneous mass of cases cited sustain the following general conclusions.

(1) In states in which the code procedure obtains, if the mortgage debt exceeds the loss, the mortgagee, to whom the loss is made payable, may sue as the "real party in interest" or as the person for whose benefit the contract was made; if the debt is less than the loss, either the mortgagee or the mortgagor may sue by joining the other, or they may sue jointly as being parties interested in the subject of the action and in the relief sought; and though the mortgagor may sue with the consent of the mortgagee, he cannot otherwise sue alone unless he has paid the mortgage debt, except in New York, and in those jurisdictions where a distinction is maintained between those policies payable to the mortgagee without limitation and those payable to him as his Nebraska. — Billings v. German Ins. Co., 34 Neb. 502.

3. North Dakota. — Travelers' Ins. Co. v. California Ins. Co., 1 N. Dak. 151.

In Arkansas the mortgagee may sue where the loss is payable to him without limitation, though his interest is less than the loss, but the mortgagor may properly be made a party to protect his interest in the policy. Burlington Ins. Co. v. Lowery, 61 Ark. 108.

In Wisconsin the mortgagee cannot sue, unless the debt is greater than the loss, without joining the mortgagor. Williamson v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 86 Wis. 393; Carberry v. German Ins. Co., 86 Wis. 323. The contract is regarded as one with the mortgagor. Chandos v. American F. Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 184. Conversely, the mortgagor may join the mortgagee, or may make him a defendant if he refuses to join, but if the mortgagee's interest has ceased the mortgagor may sue alone. Great Western Compound Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 40 Wis. 373.

Miscellaneous Distinctions. — Except in the jurisdictions where each may sue for his interest, the mortgagee's right to sue is limited to cases where he is entitled to the whole loss. Maxcy v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 54 Minn. 272; Donaldson v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 95 Tenn. 280; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. California Ins. Co., 1 N. Dak. 151.

But it was held that where the mortgage debt exceeded the loss the mortgagor was not a necessary party to a suit in equity by a mortgagee as equitable assignee. Rogers v. Traders' Ins. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 583.

A distinction has also been made between one who holds as collateral security to a liability existing before loss and is regarded as an appointee to receive the amount of a loss, and a mortgagee who by the terms of the policy is confined to a party to the contract. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, 48 Kan. 446; Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 141; Excelsior F. Ins. Co. v. Royal Ins. Co., 55 N. Y. 343; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 43 N. Y. 392. See also Palmer Sav. Bank v. Insurance Co. of North America, 166 Mass. 189.

Some courts, however, are less liberal in reading the conclusion that the interest might appear. In case the mortgagor has paid the debt he should sue as the "real party in interest."¹ Where the debt is less than the amount of the loss the mortgagee cannot sue without joining the mortgagor, except in those jurisdictions where a distinction is made as to losses payable to the mortgagee without limitation.

(2) In states where one not a party to the contract is allowed to sue on a contract for his benefit, a mortgagee whose interest extends to the whole loss may sue.² In some jurisdictions also, each may sue for his interest, or either may sue.³

(3) Where the common-law practice or a modification of it prevails, if the insurance was procured by the mortgagee, or for other reasons is to be regarded as a contract with him, and in those jurisdictions where the mortgage clause is regarded as an assignment of the policy to the mortgagee with the consent of the insured, or if the policy is not under seal and the whole proceeds are payable to him, or each is allowed to sue for his own interest, the mortgagee may sue. Otherwise the mortgagor (insured) should sue, or at least suit should be in his name, unless persons not parties thereto are allowed in the particular jurisdiction to sue upon contracts made for their benefit. In such jurisdictions, where the policy is not under seal the insured may sue also.⁴

The several classes of jurisdictions referred to may be identified by reference to the notes preceding this summary.

Particular Cases. — Where the mortgagee satisfied the mortgage in consideration of the transfer to him of the burned property, the policy being payable to the mortgagee as his interest might appear, it was held that he could sue upon the policy as the real party in interest, though the mortgage was satisfied. Bartlett v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 77 Iowa 86.

the insured and may sue in his own name, the transaction being regarded as equivalent to surrendering the old policy and taking a new one for the assignee, or to a new promise to the assignee.¹

An Assignment After Loss is an assignment of the debt or chose in action, and suits to recover the loss in such cases are governed by the general rules applicable to suits by assignees of the chose in action.²

By Implied or Equitable Assignment. — One who is equitably entitled to the loss, though not an assignee of the policy, may, after notice to the insurer, sue to recover the loss. The equitable assignee may bring a suit in equity to recover the loss,³ or he

An order given by the insured after loss, directing the insurer to pay the loss to a creditor, makes the creditor assignee of the cause of action, and the latter may sue in his own name under the code practice as "real party in interest." Spratley v. Hartford Ins. Co., 1 Dill. (U. S.) 392.

may sue at law in the name of the insured at common law,¹ but in his own name under the code practice.²

2. Defendants — Lloyd's Policies. — If a policy provides that action upon it shall be brought only against the agents who issued it as attorneys in fact of the underwriters, an action against such agents is authorized and separate actions on the policy against the underwriters are not maintainable.³ Such provisions, however, do not apply to an action to enforce against the other underwriters a judgment obtained against the persons designated.⁴

Assignees. — An assignee who sues by virtue of an assignment of a policy need not make a third party, who claims under an alleged prior assignment, a party to the action.⁵ Nor need an administrator suing on a policy of life insurance make one who claims under an alleged assignment from the insured in his lifetime a party.⁶

3. Interveners. — Where an assignee of a policy brings suit thereon, one claiming under a prior assignment may intervene.⁷ But if a person who has no insurable interest in property insures in his own name, the owner cannot intervene in an action on the policy by the insured.⁸ In an action by the insured on an employer's liability policy, the party injured, who has obtained a judgment against the insured, may intervene and maintain garnishment proceedings against the insurer.⁹ Intervention need not be perfected before the time fixed by the limitation clause expires.¹⁰

4. Joinder — a. OF PLAINTIFFS. — At Common Law the rule is that if interests are joint although the words are several the action must be joint, and if the interests are several the covenant is

There was no contract of insurance with the county, and after intervening there could be no recovery as for any loss sustained by the county. There was no identity of interest in the bridge as between the turnpike company and the county. If the turnpike company had any interest in it, it was that interest which was represented by the amount of its contribution to the cost of the bridge, but in that contribution the county necessarily could have no interest. The whole of it belonged to the turnpike company, and no part of it, in any contingency, belonged to the county."

several although in terms joint. Therefore, if two or more having joint interest are insured they may sue jointly,¹ and must do so at common law, though one has assigned to the other.² But if the interests are several a joint action cannot be maintained,³ and several actions are proper.⁴

Under the Code Practice, which permits joinder of all persons having an interest in the subject of the action or in obtaining the relief demanded, the insured may join with a creditor to whom the policy is made payable as his interest may appear.⁵ Under the code, also, joint covenantees may join though their interests are several, and the widow and heirs may join to recover insurance on the homestead of a deceased insured.⁶ But parties who have neither joint nor several interests, and whose interests are alternative or antagonistic, may not be joined.⁷

Husband and Wife.—Where a husband was the sole owner of personal property situated on the land of his wife, and he and his wife made a joint application and secured a joint policy on the representation of the agent of the insurer, who knew the title, that such was the proper course, the husband and wife were allowed to maintain a joint action. *Kausal v. 6. Bailey v. Aetna Ins. Co., 77 Wis. 336, where the facts are thus stated: "The principal property insured in this case was a dwelling house, which constituted the homestead of the insured. The property was destroyed after the death of the insured and while occupied as a homestead. The children or heirs at law of the insured, together with the widow, who sues as such widow and also in her representative capacity as administratrix of her husband's estate, and certain mortgagees to whom a portion of the loss is made payable, have been made parties to the action. It is said if this is a legal action the heirs are improper parties plaintiff. But the general rule is that a demurrer does not lie for an excess of parties plaintiff. On the death of the insured the homestead descended to the widow during her widowhood, and to the children on her marriage or death."

7. Thus the Administrator and the Heir cannot join in an action on a policy for a loss occurring after the death of the assured, since, if the heirs have the right to recover, the administrator has no cause of action, while if the administrator may sue, the heirs have no cause of action. Pfister v. Gerwig, 122 Ind. 567.

Benefit Insurance.—A company agreed in certificates of insurance to pay a sum specific to a beneficiary named and to surviving members of the class to which the insured belonged, share and share alike. It was held that a separate action by one of the members of the class to recover his share was maintainable. Emmeluth v. Home Ben. Assoc., 122 N. Y. 130.

Joinder of Causes of Action. (See also infra, III. 2. Defendants.)—Two persons were insured in a mutual company, the policy entitling them also to a share in the profits accruing to the company. On the death of one of them his administrator sued for the insurance and for the share of the profits belonging to the deceased. It was held that there was no misjoinder of causes of action. Vogler v. World Mut. L. Ins. Co., 51 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 301.

b. OF DEFENDANTS. — Where a building was secured by two distinct policies in different companies, but each policy contained a provision that the insurer might elect to rebuild on giving a stipulated notice, and the insurers joined in giving notice of election to rebuild, it was held that there was a new joint contract to rebuild, so that on failure to rebuild the insurers might be sued jointly.² The insurer cannot be joined in a suit by a mortgagee of insured premises to reform the mortgage.³

1. Keary v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., 30 Fed. Rep. 359, where Brewer, J., states the case as follows: “All the different parties in interest, beneficiaries in the policy, have joined in one action, and the demurrer is on the ground of improper joinder of causes of action. The petition states the condition under which the policy matured. It states the promise on the part of the insurance company in one instrument to pay different sums of money to different parties. Of course, there may be a unity of interest in the subject-matter of the action, but there is no unity of interest in the relief desired. If, for instance, one of these beneficiaries is paid, the others have no interest in and are not prejudiced by that payment; and he has no interest in the money which is due the other beneficiaries. Each one has a separate interest in the money which by the terms of the policy is payable to him or to her. I think, therefore, under the practice which obtains, and the rule laid down under the state code, the demurrer will have to be sustained. But all the parties plaintiff are in court. The defendant is in court. All the causes of action are stated, and I think it is within the power of the court, and the order will so be made, after sustaining the demurrer, that each plaintiff may file his or her petition upon his or her cause of action, and without other process the defendant will be ruled to answer within thirty days each petition.”

2. Morrell v. Irving F. Ins. Co., 33 N. Y. 429, where the court said: “The two companies were bound to pay the loss ratably, if so stipulated in the policies; and if not so stipulated, the whole loss should be paid by one, then the other would be liable for contribution. When one of the companies should elect to rebuild, it would come under obligation to the insured to make full indemnity by rebuilding, and if there were a provision in the policy that it should only be liable to pay a ratable proportion of the loss, such provision would be superseded by the agreement to rebuild. If only one of the insurers should elect to rebuild, and should perform the building contract, it would be entitled to contribution from the other company, not a proportion of the amount expended in building, but a ratable proportion in money of the actual loss. So, also, if the party undertaking to rebuild should fail to perform the contract, and the insured should recover and collect damages for the breach of the agreement, such party could recover of the other insurer a ratable proportion of the loss. Such insurer would, by the payment of the damages recovered by the insured, have satisfied the demand for the loss. The insured would be fully indemnified, and the insurer who paid nothing and did nothing would be liable for contribution. In my opinion the insured, in a case like the present, may have his action against both insurers jointly, or against either separately, and recover his full damages for the breach of the building contract, and leave the two insurers to an adjustment of their rights between themselves, according to well-settled rules of law applicable to different insurers of the same property.”

judgment by default.¹ Under statutes providing for service on foreign insurance companies through the state superintendent of insurance, the writ should be directed to the superintendent and not to the sheriff.²

2. Service — a. ACTUAL — ON WHOM SERVICE MAY BE MADE — (1) In General. — In Missouri it is held that the statute providing for service of summons on foreign insurance companies does not apply to garnishment proceedings.³ But in Pennsylvania this is authorized.⁴ Statutes providing for suits against foreign insurance companies, and permitting service upon certain designated public officers in case no agent can be found, apply only to such companies as do business or have been doing business in the state enacting such statutes.⁵

Courts. — In some jurisdictions it is held that the statutory service may be availed of only in courts of record, and may not be employed in suits in justices' courts.⁶

(2) Statutory Mode Exclusive. — It is generally held that statutory provisions for service upon foreign insurance companies are not cumulative to the methods prescribed or allowed for service upon foreign corporations generally, but supersede the latter.⁷ Thus, in case a foreign insurance company has appointed

Statement of Nature of Action. — Under a statute requiring the summons to state "the cause and general nature" of the action, the following statement in a writ has been held sufficient: "The said action is brought to recover the sum of fifteen hundred dollars due from the defendant to the plaintiff on a certain policy of insurance described in the complaint; also for interest thereon." *Tabor v. Craddock, 59 Ark. 593, where the court said: "The bureau act provided for the protection of policy holders in case of inability or unwillingness of foreign insurance companies to redeem their pledges; and since then, bond and security have been required as part of the conditions imposed (and the sureties on these bonds must be largely citizens of the state), as in the present instance. These bondsmen, as well as the foreign corporations, have a vital interest in the law being confined in its administration to the exact terms and provisions of the bureau act — the law under and in view of which they entered into their obligations. All of them have a right to demand that when they (principals and sureties) are sued on the bonds, no obscure, incompetent, or careless agent shall represent the corporation in this particular matter; but the chosen agent — the confidential representative — shall be notified of the institution of all suits, and they all, by the state's sacred contract and treaty with them, have the right to enjoy the benefit of this agent's promptness and efficiency. We think that the law, when construed in the light of surrounding circumstances, the objects to be attained, and the great interest to be subserved, can mean an agent to receive service of process as required by law, service can be had only upon such agent, and in the absence of statutory provisions for the same, service upon a local agent of the company, not so appointed, is invalid.¹ But in New York the latest statute authorizing service on the insurance commissioner has been held to be permissive only.²

(3) Agents. — Special enactments exist in almost every state as to the method of serving process on insurance companies, and these are held to supersede other statutory modes of serving corporations.³ Under the Texas statute, which provides for service upon any one who solicits insurance on behalf of the defendant, it is sufficient that the party served had been supplied with blank applications by another party, to whom they had been furnished by the defendant, and with these took the application of the plaintiff.⁴ Service on the local secretary of a foreign mutual insurance company, who is authorized to receive assessments, countersign and deliver receipts, and forward money to the home office, is sufficient under the Kansas statute, especially where the company has no other officer in the county where the service is made.⁵ It has been held proper to serve a writ upon the

In Wisconsin the statutes provide that a person who solicits insurance and receives compensation therefor shall be deemed the agent of the company, and that service of process may be made upon him. Service upon such person was held good where the defendant was a foreign company that had not complied with the requirements of the statutes so as to be entitled to do business in the state, although the policy provided that such person should be the agent of the insured only. Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 95 Iowa 31. See also Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44 Iowa 330, where service on the agent who made the contract of insurance upon which suit was brought was upheld.

5. Southwestern Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Swenson, 49 Kan. 455, the court saying: "The plaintiff in error claims that the court erred in overruling its motion to set aside the service of summons. We think, however, that the service of summons upon V. Brown can be sustained under paragraph 4152, General Statutes of 1889. Brown was at least the agent of the company at El Dorado for the purpose of representing it in making collections of dues and assessments from members of the company holding certificates therein, and receipting for the same. He signed receipts as local secretary; that is, he designated himself as local secretary of the plaintiff company. In his testimony he said he was collection agent for the company at El Dorado. In the notices of assessments sent out from the home office he is referred to both as local secretary and as branch secretary of the company. He also signed one of the papers in evidence as secretary of the local board. Mr. Halbert, secretary of the company, in his testimony on the trial, referred to Brown both as general manager of agencies for the defendant.¹ Nevertheless, a service upon one who is interested in the recovery of the loss will not support a judgment by default upon the company, especially if it was without knowledge of the action.² So it has been held improper to make the service upon the "recording agent" of an insurance company,³ the attorney,⁴ a traveling agent authorized only to effect insurance,⁵ and even upon the superintendent of soliciting agents.⁶ In Pennsylvania it is held that service upon the agent in an action before a justice of the peace against a foreign insurance company is insufficient unless the record shows that the insured resides in the county where the suit is brought.⁷ Generally, service on the local agent of an insurance local collector and as local secretary of the company. Blank receipts were sent from the home office of the company to Brown, to be countersigned by him, as local or branch secretary, and delivered to members on payment of their assessments. And Brown was the only person in Butler county, where the case was tried, in any way authorized to represent the company. The company says it was not taking, at the date of service, and had not been for a long time, any new memberships in Kansas, and that it had no agent for that purpose in the state. However, it was still assessing members in the state, and collecting the assessments here, and to that extent doing business here. We do not think it could do any business here through an agency for that purpose, even the settlement of their old business, without at the same time being here for the purpose of service. If the company thought it proper and to its interest to have a local secretary or secretary of a local branch of said company here to do business for it, even to the extent of collecting and receipting assessments and forwarding them to the home office, we think, in the absence of any other officer or agent of the company upon whom service could be had in the county, that service upon him is good under our statute."

was thus referred to: "The further evidence submitted upon the motion showed that at the time service was made upon Hambleton he was in Keokuk, acting as attorney for the defendant in an action before a justice of the peace; that his home was in Galesburg, Illinois, and he had no headquarters in Iowa; that he was assistant manager of agencies, and acted for the company whenever sent out by them to investigate losses, to look up testimony in lawsuits in which the company was engaged, and at times to look after local agents, investigating the facts, and report to the general manager; but that he did not take risks or issue policies, and that the person performing such duties as Hambleton performed did not act in states where there were agents, and that Funk, of Des Moines, was the agent for defendant in Iowa. Some evidence was introduced of declarations made by Hambleton, but this evidence we regard as incompetent. Hambleton's agency cannot be proved by his own declarations. So far as is shown by competent evidence, Hambleton was not authorized to do any act for the defendant in Iowa except to appear as attorney in behalf of the defendant in the justice's suit before referred to."

company is sufficient.¹ And the fact that such agent has not given bond or been formally commissioned will not invalidate the service.²

(4) Statutory Appointees. — In many jurisdictions there are statutes which require a foreign insurance company to designate some party upon whom process may be served. Such enactments are constitutional,³ and when complied with by the company render other modes of service inoperative.⁴ Service upon the designated party confers jurisdiction over the company,⁵ and the method is applicable to suits in admiralty.⁶ Where the superintendent of insurance has been appointed attorney to receive service of process, his written admission of service effected by mail was held sufficient in New York,⁷ but denied validity in the federal court.⁸ Where the superintendent had been specially designated, service on his clerk was held sufficient.⁹

Where a foreign insurance company does business in a state without procuring a license or without appointing an agent to receive service of process as required by the statutes of such state, under such statutes process may be served on the agent through whom the business is transacted or any agent doing business in the company's behalf.¹⁰ The conditions imposed on foreign insurance companies by state statutes as a prerequisite to doing business are binding.¹¹ And by doing business in a state a foreign corporation submits to them.¹² Therefore, although a foreign insurance company may not have taken a license or appointed a public officer, or designated an agent to receive service of process, as required, yet where it has done business in the state some courts hold that service may be made as if it had complied with the statute,¹ though there is opposing authority.² Such statutes do not apply, unless it is so provided, to domestic insurance companies, which are governed by the statutory provisions for service on domestic corporations.³

(5) Public Officers.—In many jurisdictions statutes provide for the service of summons on some public officer, such as the auditor or superintendent of insurance, or the insurance commissioner, in actions against foreign companies.⁴ In such cases it is held that a foreign corporation doing business in the state asserts thereby that it has complied with such statutes and assents to service on that officer; and such service is upheld though the company has not filed a written stipulation or written appointment of the designated officer as its agent, as required in the statute,⁵ or although the stipulation or appointment filed is irregular or informal.⁶ But such enactments usually govern only actions involving the class of business which the defendant is specially authorized to transact, and in Indiana a suit for an alleged breach of contract of employment is not within the terms of such a statute so as to authorize service upon the state auditor.⁷ The

In the case first cited it is said: "The next contention of the defendant is that, although it was doing business in the state at the time the policy was issued, it had not then done those things which, by the laws of the state, were conditions precedent to its right to do business in the state, and that therefore, in the language of its counsel, 'the defendant did not in any way submit to the jurisdiction of the state,' and is in no manner bound by its laws. The state laws referred to were enacted for the benefit of the state and the protection of the policy holders. By failing to comply with them the defendant and its agents incurred the prescribed penalties; but such failure does not affect the validity of its policies, or in any manner operate to the prejudice of its policy holders. By the fact of doing business in the state, it asserted a compliance with the laws of the state, and after enjoying all the benefits of that business and receiving the money of the assured, it will not be heard to say that it never submitted 'to the jurisdiction of the state.' It can reap no advantage from its own wrong. To sus-

superintendent of insurance may be served at his office in the state capital, though the action is pending in another county,¹ and the refusal of an officer to receive process when he has the power to do so will not invalidate the service.²

(6) Withdrawal from the State; Revocation or Cessation of Agency.—The appointment of an agent to receive service of process, under the statutes referred to, is irrevocable, at least as to controversies arising out of transactions while doing business under such appointment, unless by the appointment of a new agent duly notified upon the public record; so that service on the agent appointed will bind the company as to such transactions after it has left the state.³ An appointment of the superintendent of legislature ever intended to authorize such a proceeding. It is our opinion, therefore, that the appellants were not deprived of the benefit of the provision in the Act of 1883 authorizing service of process upon the auditor of state, because they happened to be the agents of the appellee when they instituted their action. But their cause of action did not arise out of any business transaction within the purview of the statute. The business contemplated is such as an insurance company is authorized to transact after it has complied with the conditions imposed by the statute, and which is forbidden until such compliance. The business contemplated is that of insurance; that is the subject to which the statute relates. The statute contemplates a company having agents in the state, and relates to such business as they may do after the company has complied with its conditions. A compliance with the requirements of the statute, and the appointment of agents, are preliminary conditions to the business contemplated. The contract sued upon is not a contract such as will ordinarily be intrusted to a mere agent of the company, but one ordinarily executed by the company itself through its general officers. It has no connection with the ordinary business of insurance, but is preparatory to such business. This contract might have been entered into in the state of Illinois or elsewhere, and if executed in Indiana it is none the less a valid contract because of the Act of 1883. The contract is an ordinary common-law contract, whereby the appellants agree to serve the appellee in a particular manner for a certain compensation. We think the action is controlled by the rules of the common law, and could only be maintained in a forum within the place of the appellee's domicile."

Re-entry and New Appointment.—A foreign insurance company withdrew from a state and revoked its appointment of an agent, but afterwards reentered the state and appointed an agent under a new law. It was held that the new law referred to past as well as to future contracts, and service on the new agent in an action on a contract made when the company was previously doing business in the state was sustained. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Duerson, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 630. But see Ellis v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 81.

Construction of Statute.—Under a statute authorizing service upon an agent in actions growing out of or connected with the business of an office or agency maintained by a foreign insurance company, service on one agent in an action growing out of business done by a former agent, who conducted a different office in the same town, was held insufficient. State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62 Iowa 272.

No Notice of Revocation.—Where an agent whose authority to receive service of process had been revoked continued to collect premiums and to adjust insurance to receive service does not become operative where such superintendent refuses to admit the company to transact business within the state, and hence a service upon him is insufficient as against such a defendant.¹ The provision authorizing service upon the last designated agent of a foreign insurance company which has ceased to do business in the state refers to the agent last acting in the state, and not in the county where the suit is brought.² But a suit which authorizes service upon the personal representative of the deceased agent does not apply to an insurance company which had ceased doing business in the state and whose agent died before the enactment of the statute.³

4. The statute provided that where a foreign corporation ceased to do business in, and had no agent in, the county where the action was brought, service might be had by the sheriff mailing a copy of the summons, postage prepaid, to the home office of the corporation. In an action on a policy where the corporation continued to do business in the state after the statute was enacted, such service, though prior to the enactment, was held good on the ground that the insurer had by continuing business assented to and become bound by the law. Thayer v. Life Ins. Co., (Ohio Dist. Ct.) 10 Ins. L. J. 719.

In Virginia, where there is no agent of a corporation in the county in which the action is brought, service by publication is permitted. Such service was upheld in an action against an insurance company which also did a banking business, though another kind of service is provided for in an action against banks. Wytheville Ins. Co. v. Stultz, 87 Va. 629.

A statute of Virginia provided that where the agent appointed by a foreign insurance company was dead, his personal representative was authorized to accept service of process. This was held to be prospective, not retrospective, and service on such representative in a suit on a contract made prior to the statute, the company having withdrawn from the state, was held invalid. *Ellis v. V. DECLARATION, PETITION, OR COMPLAINT — 1. Statutory Forms. — In some jurisdictions there are statutes permitting a special and abbreviated form of declaration in actions on policies of insurance.¹ Under such a statute a declaration from which it is evident that the pleader intended to proceed under the statute is good, although it largely follows the form of an ordinary declaration in debt.² Where the declaration is drawn under such a statute, and additional statements are ordered by the court, the statements are to be regarded as informal pleadings.³

In Assumpsit the common counts, or other counts proper in that action, may be joined with a count in the statutory form.⁴

Under the Virginia Statute the performance of conditions precedent may be alleged in general terms, and it is not necessary to aver an award, though the policy provides that no suit shall be brought until after an award.⁵

2. Specific Allegations — a. NECESSARY ALLEGATIONS ENUMERATED. — The allegations required in a declaration, petition, or complaint on a policy of insurance are: an insurable interest in the plaintiff or insured; consideration (unless the policy is under seal) and issuance of the policy; the terms of the policy; a loss within the purview of the contract, and in certain cases the actions against insurance companies may be brought in the county where the insured resides, and summons may be directed to any county in the state, the return need not set forth that the insured was a resident of the county where the action is brought. Coyle v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 8 Kulp (Pa.) 169.

Under the Kansas statute it is proper for the superintendent of insurance to make return of summons sent directly to him by the clerk of the court. Long Island Ins. Co. v. Great Western Mfg. Co., 2 Kan. App. 377.

2. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Saunders, 84 Va. 213, where the court says: "The learned counsel for the plaintiff in error refer to the case of Moseley v. Moss, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 534, as deciding a principle analogous to the view for which they contend; namely, that a plaintiff cannot proceed under the statute and at common law at the same time. But we do not perceive any analogy between that case and the present. In that case it was decided that in an action for insulting words the plaintiff must declare under the statute, and that such a cause of action cannot be blended in the same count with one for defamation at common law; for, said the court, there are essential points of difference, affecting both the pleadings and the evidence, between an action for defamation on the one hand and an action for insults on the other, and that to ignore these distinctions would lead to the utmost perplexity and confusion. Clearly this reasoning cannot apply to a case like the present; for here no right of action is given by the statute above quoted which does not exist independently of the statute, and, as we have seen, the right of the defendant to plead, and the rules relating to the maturing of actions and the subsequent proceedings therein, remain substantially the same as before the statute was passed."

amount thereof; performance of the conditions of the policy; and a breach of the contract on the part of the insurer.¹

b. INSURABLE INTEREST. — The interest of the plaintiff and of the insured, whether as owner, mortgagee, bailee, or agent, or, in case of life insurance, the proper degree of relationship or dependence, must be alleged,² and interest should be alleged at the date of the insurance and at that of the loss,³ except in marine insurance.⁴ In Alabama the code prescribes forms of pleading, and such a form is sufficient in a suit on an insurance policy, though it contain no allegation of insurable interest.⁵

Fulton F. Ins. Co.*, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 404, most of these cases proceed upon the analogy of marine insurance, in which insurable interest is not necessary.

3. See cases cited in the last note.

But it has been held that an allegation of interest at the time the insurance was effected is enough, as the interest will be presumed to have continued. Roussel v. St. Nicholas Ins. Co., 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. 279.

Sufficiency of Averment. — A general averment that the plaintiff, at the inception of the insurance and at the time of the loss, was the owner of the property is sufficient to admit evidence of any interest he may have had, and in such case a motion to make the allegation more definite and specific is properly overruled, although the policy stipulates that it shall be void if the insured shall not be the sole and unconditional owner in fee. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stark, 120 Ind. 444; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 119 Ind. 155; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Rowe, 117 Ind. 202; Rediker v. Queen Ins. Co., (Mich. 1895) 65 N. W. Rep. 105.

In an action on a policy of life insurance, an allegation that neither the plaintiff nor the insured "was actuated by any speculative motive" was held sufficient on error after judgment, there having been no demurrer and no motion in arrest of judgment. Kentucky L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 22 U. S. App. 548.

Where the petition alleged that the plaintiff was the owner and had an insurable interest in the property insured, it was held that the allegation of interest did not qualify or restrict that of ownership, and might be treated as a surplusage. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 43 Kan. 741.

Mortgagees. — Where suit is brought by a mortgagee to whom loss is made payable, he must allege his interest in such a way as to bring it within the rule in force in the particular jurisdiction as to suits by mortgagees. Chrisman v. State Ins. Co., 16 Oregon 283; Donaldson v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 95 Tenn. 280. See supra, III. 1. h. Mortgagees.

Generally, too, the want of this allegation may be supplied by amendment.¹

c. CONSIDERATION, TERMS OF POLICY, AND AMOUNT OF LOSS — Consideration. — An allegation that a policy was executed and delivered in consideration of a certain sum as a premium is sufficient, as it is immaterial whether it was paid in cash or credit given.²

Terms of Policy. — The terms of the policy must be alleged.³ But it is enough to set forth the promise of the insurer applicable to the state of facts declared on; and promises applicable to the other facts, upon which no recovery is sought, and conditions not touching the plaintiff's right of recovery, need not be alleged.⁴ Where the policy declared on requires the loss "to be paid sixty days after proof" this is at least an argumentative allegation of a promise to pay.⁵

d. PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS OF POLICY. — Performance of the conditions of the policy, except those not affecting plaintiff's right of recovery, as in case of conditions relating to fatal accident in a suit on an accident policy for an injury, must be pleaded.⁶

such as the present one there must have been, when the policy was taken out and when the loss occurred, such ownership or right as amounts to an insurable interest, and the plaintiff must show himself entitled to assert that interest. Lynch v. Dalzel, 3 Bro. P. C. 497; Sadlers Co. v. Badcock, 2 Atk. 554; Wilson v. Hill, 3 Met. (Mass.) 66; Phil. on Ins. 59; May on Ins., §§ 115, 116. Form 16, Code of 1876, p. 704, is framed for a suit on a policy of insurance. It contains no averment of property or insurable interest in the plaintiff. In section 2979 of the code it is provided that 'any pleading which conforms substantially to the schedule of forms attached to this part is sufficient.' Form 16 is one of said forms. It must be inferred that the legislature treated the averment that the policy was issued by the insurance company as the equivalent, prima facie, of an averment that the assured owned an insurable interest in the property. Each count in the complaint is sufficient, and the demurrer to it was rightly overruled. 2 Brick. Dig. 344-345."

In the case last cited an averment in the petition of a policy of insurance covenanting and promising to pay to A. P., his executors, administrators, or assigns, ten thousand dollars upon satisfactory proof of the death of the said A. P. during the continuance of the said policy, was held a sufficient description of the policy.

Averments of Loss. — Where suit is brought by a mortgagee to whom the loss is payable, an allegation that he has sustained loss to a certain amount sufficiently alleges loss to the insured owner as against a general demurrer. Maxcy v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 54 Minn. 272.

And alleging that the property insured was damaged by fire sufficiently avers damage sustained by the owner. Keeler v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 16 Wis. 523.

The plaintiff need not negative the performance of conditions subsequent.¹

c. BREACH OF CONTRACT. — If by the terms of the policy the loss is not payable until a specified time after loss occurs, or after notice and proofs of loss, it is necessary to allege that this time has expired before the commencement of the action.² It must also be shown that the loss occurred from one of the perils insured against.³

Rep. 498, where the court said: "The defendant criticises the declaration because the plaintiffs have not averred and negatived the several provisions contained in the policy which are in the nature of conditions subsequent, the existence of the facts creating which would avoid the policy. All that is necessary, however, for a plaintiff to do in declaring a contract of insurance is to set forth so much of it as will show a right to recover. 2 May Ins., § 589; 2 Greenl. Ev. (13th ed.), § 376. Hence it follows that the various limitations, conditions, and stipulations of a policy which are in the nature of conditions subsequent and go to defeat the liability of the insurer, are matters of defense and have no place in the declaration. Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co., 8 Conn. 459."

Anticipating Defenses. — The plaintiff is not required to anticipate defenses by alleging that the loss was not produced by any of the causes for which it is provided that the insured shall not be liable, or, in case of life or accident insurance, that death or injury was not brought about by any of the means specially excepted in the policy. These are matters to be pleaded by the defendant.

German Ins. Co.*, 78 Wis. 77; Howard F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Cornick, 24 Ill. 463.

Agreement to Insure. — In an action on a parol contract of insurance there must be an allegation of a present contract to insure. Farmers', etc., Ins. Co. v. Graham, (Neb. 1897) 70 N. W. Rep. 386.

f. NECESSITY OF ATTACHING COPY OF POLICY. — It is generally provided by statute that parties may attach copies of written instruments sued on instead of pleading their terms. Commonly it is required that such copies be attached. In Illinois the policy, or a sufficient portion of it to show a right of recovery, must be set out either in terms or in substance.¹ Setting out the policy in hæc verba in the declaration is equivalent to attaching a copy.² It is generally held that the application on which the policy issued, and the answers therein, even though referred to in the policy and especially made a part thereof, need not be set out, and that no copy of the application or answers need be attached.³ But there are decisions to the contrary.⁴ By-laws of an insurance company annexed to the policy need not be set out.⁵ In New Jersey the policy, when attached to the declaration, becomes a part of the record.⁶

g. ALLEGING NOTICE AND PROOFS. (See also article CONDITIONS PRECEDENT, vol. 4, p. 626.) — In the notes will be found a collection of decisions relative to the proper mode of pleading compliance with those provisions of the policy requiring notices and proofs of loss to be furnished.⁷

7. Alleging Notice and Proofs. — An allegation that "more than ninety days had elapsed prior to the commencement of this suit, after sufficient proof," and that the plaintiff and the deceased "have duly complied with all the terms and conditions of said policy to be kept or performed," sufficiently alleges notice and proofs. Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170; Emery v. Svea F. Ins. Co., 88 Cal. 300; Benedix v. German Ins. Co., 78 Wis. 77; Butternut Mfg. Co. v. Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 78 Wis. 202.

But there must be an allegation that notice and proofs were furnished within the time required, or, if the loss is payable a fixed time after proof, that proof was made for that space of time before suit. Doyle v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 44 Cal. 265; Pierson v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co., 7 Houst. (Del.) 307; Carberry v. German Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 605. Contra. — Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co.

greater proportion of the loss than the amount of the policy bears to the whole insurance on the property, the amount of other insurance or the fact that there is none must be alleged.¹

Amount of Loss. — The amount of loss sustained on each subject of insurance must be alleged where there are two or more included in the policy;² but where the liability of the insurer is limited by the policy to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the loss, the value at such time need not be alleged.³

(2) Life and Benefit Insurance — Life — Insurable Interest. — Where one person has procured insurance on the life of another, in an

v. Faires, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 55.

An allegation that the plaintiff rendered to the insurer a particular account and proof of the loss, and fully complied with all of the conditions of the contract, sufficiently shows receipt of the proofs by the insurer, where the policy provides that the loss shall be payable sixty days after proofs are made and received by the company. River Falls Bank v. German American Ins. Co., 72 Wis. 535.

Waiver of Notice and Proofs. — Allegations of waiver of notice or proofs should show that waiver was made within the time stipulated for furnishing the notice and proofs; but it is enough if this is shown by necessary implication, as where it was alleged that the plaintiff did not give notice or furnish proof within the time required because the "said defendant had actual knowledge thereof, and notified the plaintiff that it would not pay said loss." Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 3 Ind. App. 332; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 11 Ind. App. 72; Butternut Mfg. Co. v. Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 78 Wis. 202.

In jurisdictions where it is held that a general allegation that all terms and conditions of a contract have been performed sufficiently alleges performance of conditions precedent, no allegation of proof of loss need be made in addition to the general allegation. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 119 Ind. 155; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. State, 113 Ind. 331; Indiana Ins. Co. v. Campehart, 108 Ind. 270. And in such jurisdictions, if in addition to allegations of waiver of proofs of loss there is a general allegation of performance of conditions, or an allegation that proofs were furnished, the latter may be treated as a surplusage, and a motion to require the complaint to be made more definite and certain is properly overruled. American F. Ins. Co. v. Sisk, 9 Ind. App. 305.

But it is held that waiver of proofs of loss may be shown under a general allegation of performance of conditions. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Schollenberger, 44 Pa. St. 259.

Where a policy provided that an award should be a condition precedent to suit, and the plaintiffs alleged an award and also proofs of loss without arbitration, it was held that these allegations were not inconsistent. Randall v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 10 Mont. 362. But in such case, in jurisdictions where provisions of that character are held valid, either award or waiver thereof must be pleaded. Carroll v. Girard F. Ins. Co., 72 Cal. 297.

Parol Agreement to Insure. — In declaring on a parol agreement to insure or to renew an existing policy, or in a suit in equity on such an agreement, it is not necessary to allege performance of conditions usually limited by the insurer in its policies, or of conditions of the policy agreed to be renewed. Gold v. Sun Ins. Co., 73 Cal. 216; Baile v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co., 73 Mo. 371; Schwahn v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 89 Wis. 84; *Nebraska, etc., Ins. Co. v. action on the policy he must allege an insurable interest,¹ but a beneficiary for whose benefit the deceased took out the insurance need not allege interest.²

Benefit Insurance. — The allegations necessary in an action upon a certificate of mutual benefit depend somewhat upon the view taken in the particular jurisdiction as to the appropriate remedy in such cases.³ Where the promise is to pay a definite amount in no way dependent upon or limited by an assessment, although an assessment is provided for as the method of securing the fund; or where statutes require the policy or certificate to state the exact amount which is to be paid, or require that the company pay the maximum amount named in the policy; or where statutes require the company to make its ordinary assessments sufficient to pay its certificates in full; or where the certificates provide for the payment of a certain per cent. of the assessment, not to exceed a specified sum, and there is no restriction upon the amount which may be levied upon each member in the assessment, it is not necessary to allege the amount that would be realized by an assessment, a demand for an assessment and refusal, the number of members subject to assessment, that an assessment has been made and collected, or that the company has bonds on hand to pay the certificate.⁴ In the absence of such statutes or of such provisions in the certificate or policy, in some jurisdictions it is held that such certificate is prima facie evidence of the maximum amount which may be realized by assessment, and that it is for the company to plead and prove that the sum named in the certificate cannot be realized.⁵ But elsewhere it is generally held in such cases that the plaintiff must

A complaint on a policy payable to the wife of the insured, or, if she does not survive him, to his representatives, must allege that the insured survived his wife. *Knorr v. State Mut. Ben. allege the amount payable upon a proper assessment of the members of the company,¹ or the amount of the share of the plaintiff in the fund to be raised,² or the number of members liable to assessment,³ and a refusal to levy an assessment.⁴ But any allegations which sufficiently show the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, as that an assessment would produce more than the maximum amount, or that the membership is large enough to assure the stated amount by assessment, are enough.⁵

(3) Marine Insurance. — In an action on a policy of marine insurance an allegation of interest in the insured at the time of insurance is unnecessary.⁶ Nor is it necessary to allege abandonment or other facts necessary to constitute total loss, as an allegation of a total loss covers actual as well as constructive total loss.⁷

(4) Accident, Casualty, and Fidelity Insurance. — In an action on a Policy of Accident Insurance the particular circumstances of the injury need not be alleged.⁸ But it must be alleged that the injury was received or inflicted accidentally.⁹ Only such of the terms and conditions of the policy need be set forth as are applicable to the kind of injury or to the state of facts complained of.¹⁰

Occupation of Insured. — Where a petition showed that the occupation of the insured at the time the policy issued was stated in the application, and that the latter was in the sole possession of the insurer, it was held unnecessary to allege the occupation of the insured at that time. In the same petition it was alleged that the insured, while at supper at a restaurant, was injured by flying timber from a cyclone. It was held unnecessary to allege his occupation at the time of the injury. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Koen, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 273.

A Declaration on a Policy of Casualty Insurance covering all loss or damage except losses caused directly or indirectly by fire or lightning must aver that the loss was not due directly or indirectly to the causes excepted.¹

Fidelity Insurance. — Where the obligation of a fidelity insurance company covers acts of fraud and dishonesty only, but it is provided that a shortage shall be prima facie evidence of dishonesty, a complaint setting forth a shortage, but not alleging that it was caused by fraud and dishonesty, states a cause of action.²

1. Western Refrigerator Co. v. American Casualty Ins., etc., Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 155, where, in ruling on a general demurrer, Blodgett, J., said: "In construing this policy it must be borne in mind that it is a policy strictly against accidents, and not a fire policy. The whole tenor of the instrument shows clearly that it was intended only as an accident policy, and not as an insurance against fire. The true meaning of the fifth item of the policy would, I think, be more clearly expressed if the clause in brackets excepting loss by fire had been omitted, and there had been written at the end of the paragraph a proviso saying that this policy is not to cover any losses caused directly or indirectly by fire or lightning. In other words, it is not a policy against fire, even if fire is the result or immediate consequence of the accident. With this view of the true construction of the policy I think the demurrer is well taken to these counts, because the pleader has not stated that the loss was not caused directly or indirectly by fire."

2. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, where the point is thus discussed in the opinion: "The fourth objection urged against the complaint is that while the bond only covers acts of fraud and dishonesty, it contains no allegation that this shortage was caused by the fraud or dishonesty of the defendant. Whoever drafted this bond used language very loosely, and employed a great many words to express, or else conceal, very few ideas. But after taking it by the four corners and considering all its provisions, our construction is that the plaintiff was only bound to make good, and reimburse the elevator company for, loss sustained by reason of a shortage of grain caused by the actual fraud or dishonesty of the defendant. But the bond also provides how the existence and amount of a shortage shall be ascertained, and that when thus ascertained it shall be accepted as evidence that it was caused by the fraud or dishonesty of the defendant, and not by any of the various other causes, enumerated as exceptions, for which the plaintiff was not to be liable; in other words, that a shortage ascertained in the manner prescribed should be prima facie evidence of its existence, and that it was caused by the defendant's fraud or dishonesty, thus casting the burden upon the plaintiff to rebut this prima facie case by proof. It is not bound to do this by affirmative evidence showing the particular one of the causes, enumerated as exceptions, which produced the shortage; but may do it by negative evidence showing that it was not caused by the fraud or dishonesty of the defendant, and hence must have been produced by one or more of the excepted causes. This it may do by a fair preponderance of evidence as to any of the excepted causes, except errors or carelessness in weighing, and thefts by persons other than those covered by the bond, in which cases the proofs must be conclusive. The word 'conclusive' in that connection, we think, must be construed as meaning so strong as to require a finding or verdict that the shortage resulted from the cause alleged. This may also be done by negative or circumstantial evidence. So much for the construction of the bond. The bond having been executed at the request of the defendant, and in the form requested by him, it follows that his obligation to indemnify the plaintiff is coextensive with that of the plaintiff to reimburse the elevator company; also, that any provisions in the bond as to proof of liability, binding on the plaintiff in favor of the elevator company, are equally binding on the defendant in an action brought by the plaintiff against him to recover indemnity for what it has paid in his behalf. Therefore it follows that the com-

i. IN ACTION AGAINST FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANY. — It is not necessary to allege, in an action against a foreign insurance company, that the company has complied with the laws of the state so as to be entitled to do business therein.¹

j. ALLEGING ESTOPPEL. — In pleading an estoppel by reason of the acts of the agent of an insurance company which obviate the necessity of reformation, it need not be alleged that there was nothing in the charter of the company to prevent the acts of the agent from operating as an estoppel.²

3. Prayer. — Where the same court administers both legal and equitable relief, a prayer in the alternative to reform the policy, or to recover on the policy itself, is proper.³ If the policy sued on covers several classes of property, and the complaint states the amount of loss upon each class, a prayer for the aggregate of such amounts is proper.⁴

VI. DEMURRER. — Under the Code Practice the question whether an action is barred by terms of a policy made part of the petition may be raised by demurrer.⁵

In West Virginia the plaintiff may be required to file, in addition to his declaration, a sworn statement of the facts which he expects to prove, and in an insurance case the legal sufficiency of the facts thus presented was held to be properly raised by a demurrer.⁶

plaint alleges facts which, under the provisions of the bond, constitute a cause of action against the defendant; that is, if all the facts alleged are proved on the trial, it would follow, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover. That the facts alleged are in one sense merely evidentiary, and may be rebutted by other evidence, is not material, inasmuch as, by the agreement of the parties, they make out prima facie a cause of action, and if not rebutted they conclusively make it out. Otherwise expressed, under the contract of the parties, the facts alleged prove that the shortage was caused by the defendant's fraud or dishonesty. Under these circumstances, an express and direct allegation that it was so caused is unnecessary."

evidence was correctly overruled. There is no inconsistency in the alternative prayers of the plaintiffs, and if the allegations in a petition will warrant equitable relief this court, under the well-recognized jurisprudence of the state, will grant it. Such is the prayer of plaintiffs in their petition."

5. Moore v. State Ins. Co., 72 Iowa 414.

6. Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851, the court saying: "The important question is whether or not, according to the facts thus appearing, the plaintiff has any right to maintain this action. I think this question is properly raised by the defendant's demurrer to the declaration and the plaintiff's statement filed in support thereof. The statement, being a specific averment of the facts intended to be proved, to sustain the action must be considered a part of the declaration; and if it so modifies or contradicts the general averments of the declaration as to show that the plaintiff has no cause of action, it would be vain and useless to put the plaintiff to the proof of them, because that would be, in effect, to call upon him to prove facts which, when proved, would

VII. PLEA OR ANSWER — 1. In General — As to Interest of Insured. — Where the policy provides that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than that of unconditional ownership in fee simple unless the consent of the company to a different ownership be indorsed thereon, it is not necessary, in pleading a breach of this condition, to allege that consent was not so indorsed, the consent being a matter for replication.¹

Negative Pregnant. — An answer denying loss on the particular day alleged, or that the conditions of the policy were complied with as stated in the complaint, there being an allegation in the complaint of performance on a particular day, or that consent to other insurance was not indorsed on the policy, the latter providing only for consent in writing, is insufficient.²

Argumentative Denial. — Where the plaintiff, in suing on an accident policy, alleges an accidental injury, an averment in the answer that the alleged injury was caused by poison, and that the policy did not extend to this cause, was declared to be merely an argumentative denial, not good as a plea in bar to the action.³

2. Specific Pleas — a. GENERAL ISSUE OR GENERAL DENIAL — General Issue. — The courts incline to restrict the scope of the general issue in actions on insurance policies, especially where applications containing a large number of "warranties" or representations are referred to and made a part of the policy. In such case, although the application and all the statements therein are expressly incorporated in the policy by reference, a breach thereof, or a defense based thereon going to avoid the insurance, cannot be proved under the general issue, but must be pleaded specially.⁴ But breaches of conditions in the policy itself, as that the insured was the owner of the property, that the property was defeat his action. The demurrer at this stage of the proceedings is analogous to a motion to dismiss on the plaintiff's opening statement of his case, or, according to the practice in this state, of moving the court to exclude the plaintiff's evidence. *Oscanyan v. by fire. The answer denies this in the very words of the complaint. Such a denial is a negative pregnant with the admission that it may have been all destroyed on some other day, or that a part may have been destroyed on the day named. Such denials have been always held insufficient. Baker v. Bailey, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 54; Salinger v. Lusk, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 430; Davison v. Powell, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. unoccupied, or fraud in proofs of loss, may be shown under the general issue.¹

General Denial. — Where the code practice obtains the defendant may show, under a general denial, breach of conditions precedent, such as failure to give notice or proofs of loss,² or that the loss or cause of the loss was not within the purview of the contract;³ but he cannot show a breach of conditions, representations or "warranties" not conditions precedent,⁴ or facts showing a right to avoid the policy,⁵ such as a wilful burning of the insured property by the plaintiff.⁶

b. BREACHES OF CONDITION. — Breaches of conditions other than conditions precedent, and breaches of warranties, representations, or statements in the application or policy, must be pleaded specially.⁷ In pleading breach of condition, care is necessary to cover the conditions in question so as to set out a breach with certainty.⁸ Thus where a condition takes effect only in case of Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co.*, 85 Mich. 210.

Therefore the only question for consideration is whether the facts stated amount to a cancellation of the policy."

6. Incendiarism Not Provable Under General Denial. — In Residence F. Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 106, the court said: "Objection is also made that the court ruled out testimony offered as tending to show that Hannawold burned his own house. a. written request, such request must be pleaded.¹ When incumbrance is permitted with the consent of the insurer, in pleading incumbrance of the property it should be alleged that there was no consent thereto.²

c. BREACHES OF REPRESENTATIONS OR WARRANTIES. — Where an application contains a large number of answers which are incorporated by reference to the policy and termed "warranties" therein, a breach of any of these warranties or falsity of the statements must be alleged specially.³ And it must be alleged specially which answer or statement is false, and wherein it is false.⁴

d. FRAUD. — Particularity is required also in alleging fraud.⁵

Injury While Committing Unlawful Act. — If the policy excepts injury or death while engaged in violation of the law, and acts are stated constituting a violation of law, it is not necessary to allege that they were "unlawful." Bloom v. Franklin L. Ins. Co., 97 Ind. 478.

But where the acts charged to have been unlawful were such by reason of a particular statute of a foreign jurisdiction, they must be brought fully within the statute by the answer. Conboy v. Railway Officials', etc., Acc. Assoc., (Ind. App. 1896) 43 N. E. Rep. 1017.

The seventh article of the conditions has made no provision against incumbrances of this character. A change of title or any undivided interest in it by assignment of the whole or any interest in the policy, without the consent of the company, would avoid the policy. Admitting that this would be an assignment within the meaning of this article of the conditions, yet the plea ought to aver that the company did not assent and agree to such transfer. For a sale and transfer by assignment of the policy would be good with the consent of the company. This we may presume, or that the conditions were complied with, until the contrary is averred in the plea. See, for assignments, Wilson v. Genesee Mut. Ins. Co., 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 511."

Where by statute it is provided that if the application is not indorsed the insurer may not take advantage of false representations therein, a plea that statements in the application were false must allege that the representations were indorsed on or attached to the policy. McConnell v. Iowa Mut. Aid Assoc., 79 Iowa 757; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Jenkins, (Pa. 1886) 10 Atl. Rep. 474.

The answer denies this allegation, sets out the proof of loss made, and points out several alleged defects in it, but does not charge that it is either false or fraudulent. It does state, however, that 'thereafter on or about the twenty-first day of March, A. D. 1887, defendant presented to and served upon plaintiff its objections and excep-

Generally, in pleading false answers in an application,¹ or false statements in proofs of loss,² a mere allegation that the answer or statement was false is insufficient. The particular false statement must be pointed out,³ and it must be alleged that it was fraudulent.⁴

e. OTHER DEFENSES. — Concealment or failure to state material facts, or failure of the insured to disclose his real interest, or failure to comply with a demand for an appraisal of the amount of the loss as provided for by the policy, must be pleaded specially.⁵ In pleading forfeiture for failure to pay assessments, where the charter of the insurer requires notice of assessment to be given, the facts showing that the notice required by the charter had been given must be set out. A general allegation of failure to pay after legal notice is insufficient.⁶

f. ATTACHING COPY OF POLICY OR APPLICATION TO ANSWER. — Under the Code Practice, where the petition or complaint sets out the policy sued on, it is not necessary, in pleading breach of conditions or representations contained in the policy, to attach a copy thereof to the answer.⁷ But where the answer sets up breaches of representations contained in the application or other defenses growing out of an application, even though the application is referred to in and expressly made a part of the policy, or growing out of rules or by-laws incorporated in the policy by reference, it is necessary to attach a copy or to set forth the application or rules and by-laws, and it is not enough to state general conclusions as to their effect.⁸

tions to said proof of loss, a full, true, and correct copy of which said objections and exceptions is hereto annexed, marked Exhibit B, and is hereby expressly referred to and made a part hereof, and that said objections and exceptions to said proof of loss, and each of them, are and is in all respects true and correct as therein stated, and the same are hereby expressly referred to and made a part hereof.' The matter is not otherwise alluded to in the answer, and, as already said, it charges no fraud nor does it claim a forfeiture. No facts are stated which could amount to fraud." particularly the violation which is set up as a defense — for example, whether the parent was afflicted with consumption or scrofula, rheumatism, gout or insanity, or some hereditary disease; and not to class these all together, and therefore put the plaintiff to the necessity of preparing to show, by evidence, that no one of these numerous diseases existed in the family."

VIII. REPLICATION OR REPLY — 1. In General — To Answer Alleging Breach of Conditions. — Although the plaintiff in his declaration, petition, or complaint denies by anticipation breach of any of the conditions of the policy, and specially denies breach of certain conditions, an answer alleging a breach of such conditions requires a reply.¹ In a replication to a plea setting up breach of conditions of the policy, the breach should be denied or avoided. A replication attempting to set out compliance with the condition, not amounting to a denial, is bad.²

In Respect of Authority of Defendant's Agent. — A replication setting up that the person with whom the plaintiff dealt was an agent of the insured must expressly allege agency; if the facts relied on as constituting agency are set out instead, they must be such that agency follows as a conclusion of law, admitting no other construction, though if agency is expressly alleged it may be sufficiently proved by circumstances from which it is a reasonable inference.³ Under the practice in Texas it is unnecessary for the insured to plead ratification of unauthorized acts of an agent by the insurer in a replication to an answer alleging want of authority in the agent.⁴

Waiver of Proofs of Loss is properly pleaded in a reply where the answer sets up failure to furnish them.⁵

Conclusion. — A common-law replication which introduces new matter should conclude with a verification, and not to the country.⁶

2. Departure. — If, in an action on a policy, the plea or answer

Timm*, 23 Neb. 526, the court saying: "We are all of the opinion that the third answer of the defendant presents a defense which, if admitted in pleading or proved on trial, would defeat a recovery. It certainly contains new matter, although it may be said that the allegation of said clause of the answer, that plaintiff caused the death of the insured mules by suffering them to be overworked, was in a sense negatived in advance by the allegations of the petition that 'said death did not result from any act, design, procurement, or fault on the part of the plaintiff,' but those words of the petition were probably necessary to prevent the petition being open to demurrer, and are too general to be held to answer in advance the special allegations of the answer. It has often been said by this court on the bench, and I think more than once in its written opinions, that in a case where a reply was necessary and none made, yet, if the cause was tried as though there was a proper reply on file, no advantage could be taken of its absence in this court. But that rule cannot be applied to a case like the one at bar, where the cause is submitted on the pleadings."

In that case the plea set forth a warranty that the insured building cost a certain sum, and the replication averred that the defendant's agent, knowing its cost, valued the property at the sum stated, and concluded to the country. On account of this erroneous conclusion it was held that the court erred in overruling the defendant's motion that the replication be rejected.

sets up that the policy was issued without authority, or without payment of premiums, or in consequence of misrepresentations in the application, or was delivered by one who was not the agent of the insurer, a replication or reply alleging ratification of the acts of the agent, waiver of rules as to authority of agents, waiver of conditions as to payment of premiums in advance, or that the agent of the insurer drew up the application with knowledge of the facts, is not a departure.¹

3. Duplicity. — Where the plea alleges misrepresentation in the application as to the value of the insured property, a replication that the agent of the insurer received the property and inserted the valuation in the policy is not double as being both by way of estoppel and in confession and avoidance.²

IX. REJOINDER. — In an action on a policy where the plea set forth a breach of certain conditions, and the replication alleged an offer by an adjuster to pay a sum of money in settlement of the loss, and further, that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, incurred expense in procuring an estimate of the cost of rebuilding, a rejoinder denying the adjuster's authority was held bad as failing to meet the material averments of the replication.³

X. VERIFICATION OF PLEADINGS. — Under the practice in Alabama a general denial in an action on a policy of insurance must be supported by affidavit, since it puts in issue the execution of the policy.⁴

2. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Saunders, 86 Va. 969, the court saying: "A learned author lays it down that the only mode of taking advantage of a departure is by demurrer. 4 Min. Inst. 1040. But be that as it may, here there has been no departure. To the general rule which requires the pleader either to traverse or to confess and avoid there are several exceptions, one of which arises in the case of pleadings in estoppel. Steph. Pl. 219. Indeed, it is one of the essential qualities of a replication that it must present matter of estoppel, or must traverse or confess and avoid the plea. 1 Chitt. Pl. 643. Moreover, a departure takes place only when the party deserts the ground that he took in his last antecedent pleading and resorts to another. Thus the replication must be conformable to the declaration, the rejoinder to the plea, etc. Or, as Lord Coke expresses it, 'Each party must take heed of the ordering of the matter of his pleading, lest his replication depart from his count, or his rejoinder from his bar; et sic de cæteris. 3 Co. Litt. 435; 4 Min. Inst. 1038. In the present case this rule has been observed; that is to say, there has been no abandonment of the case stated in the declaration and a resort to another, but the matter contained in the replication conforms to and fortifies that contained in the declaration. There was no error, therefore, in overruling the motion to reject the replications."

3. Boulden v. Liberty Ins. Co., 112 Ala. 490, because the expense was alleged in the replication to have been caused by the defendant itself, and this was not answered by the rejoinder. See generally article VERIFICATION.

4. Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201, the court saying: "The first plea of the defendant, being a general denial of all the allegations of the complaint, necessarily put in issue the execution of the written policy of insurance which was the foundation of the

XI. AMENDMENTS. — Under the liberal code system of pleading amendments may be allowed even during the trial.¹ Thus in an action on an insurance policy it was held proper to permit the plaintiff so to amend as to allege that the loss did not occur from any of the causes excepted in the policy,² to aver an insurable interest,³ and also to change the complaint so as to avoid a variance between pleading and proof.⁴ It is proper to amend by claiming larger damages or loss to additional property under the same policy by the same fire.⁵ But an amendment setting up an oral contract of insurance states a new cause of action.⁶ And a defendant who asks leave to add a new defense to his plea during the trial must show that he is entitled to such favor and that it can be granted without injustice.⁷

suit, as well as the plaintiff's ownership of the policy, as the beneficiary under it. The plea should therefore have been supported by affidavit, and for want of such verification it was subject to the demurrer which was interposed to it and was properly sustained by the trial court. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Gilmer, 85 Ala. 423; Code 1886, §§ 2676, 2770; Manning v. Maroney, 87 Ala. 563."

6. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Kinne, 77 Mich. 236, the court saying: "It seems to me that the first count of the amended declaration introduces a new cause of action. The original declaration, as before said, counted upon a written contract of insurance, and claimed damages for the breach of that contract in the failure or refusal to pay the amount of the insurance upon loss by fire without the fault of plaintiffs. The first count of the amended declaration claims damages for the refusal of the defendant to deliver a policy of insurance in conformity to a verbal agreement, by which the plaintiffs were deprived of the insurance upon their goods for which they had contracted. These are two independent and distinct causes of action, although both sound in assumpsit and may be said to grow out of the same transaction. Does our statute of amendments in the discretion of the circuit judge allow an amendment of this character? We think not." See, generally, as to amendments constituting a new cause of action, article AMENDMENTS, vol. I, p. 547 et seq.

7. "Apart from the delay and the fact that the case had been opened before the question was presented, the court was abundantly justified by the entire omission of defendant to make any showing whatever in support of the application. A party desiring such a favor must show in some way that he is entitled to it, and that it can be had without injustice. Sometimes this will appear from what comes out on the trial. But in this case the motion was not made on anything appearing upon the trial, and it proposed to introduce a new issue that the plaintiff could not be expected to meet. It is certain that allowing such a motion as was made here, which, for anything that appears, was not made on any new information, would operate very unjustly, and it was properly denied." Deline v. United Kingdom, etc., Inst., 33 Scottish Jur. 286, for a form of the issues, under the Scotch practice, where the falsity of answers was involved.

2. "In the present instance the apparent purpose of the charge asked by the counsel for the defendant below, and refused by the court, was to charge as a matter of law that the answer of Trefz, 'Never sick,' was to be taken as meaning — as it literally does, standing by itself — that he had never during his life had any sickness whatever; and thence to draw the necessary inference that it was untrue in that sense, as it no doubt was, and that for that reason the plaintiff's recovery was made legally impossible. In that view it became the duty of the court to say to the jury that in determining whether that statement was true or untrue, in view of the terms of the policy, they might properly consider that it was the expression of a man ignorant of the language, who did not on that account understand, and consequently did not intend, the literal scope of the expression. And whatever sense the jury as reasonable men, in the light of that circumstance, would put upon it might well be taken as the sense in which it was understood by the company, to whose agent it was personally spoken. For that would be the sense in which it would be understood commonly by reasonable men in similar circumstances. Indeed, the court might well have gone further, for it is matter of law that the answer, 'Never sick,' in the connection in which it was used in the application, must be taken to mean not that the party was never sick at all of any disorder, but only that he never had had any of the enumerated diseases so as to constitute an attack of sickness. The generality of the language of the answer must be restrained to the particulars to which alone it was meant to be applied, and the surplusage does not fall within the agreement which warrants the answer to be true. *Knickerbocker L. And if you believe from the evidence that at the time of the fire the premises were wholly unoccupied without the assent of the defendant, the policy had become invalid, and you should find for the defendant. In determining, under the evidence, whether the premises became unoccupied before the fire and were vacant at the time of the fire, you are instructed as a matter of law that, when the property insured is a hotel, the occupancy required under such a policy as this is such occupancy as ordinarily attends a hotel. The word 'unoccupied' is to be construed in its ordinary and popular sense, and if you believe from the evidence that after the making of the policy the insured or his tenant had moved from the building in controversy, and entirely ceased to occupy the same at the time of the fire, then the policy became void. However, if you believe from the evidence that such vacancy was temporary only, and was occasioned by the fact that plaintiff's tenant was, at the time of the fire, or a short time before, moving from said plaintiff's building, and had not removed all his goods and furniture when the fire occurred, such removal would not render the premises vacant and un-

It should also pass upon the meaning and intent of an inquiry contained in the application.¹²

3. Directing Verdict. — In actions on insurance policies the practice of directing verdict is governed by the same rules which prevail generally with reference to that practice.¹³ If the insured fails to offer evidence necessary to prove his material allegations,¹⁴ or if as a matter of law he is not entitled to recover,¹ or if the facts are undisputed,² the case ought to be taken from the jury. But where any question of fact is presented upon which there is even the slightest conflict of evidence it is usual to submit it to the jury.³ In an action on a life policy where the plaintiff introduced evidence to establish the death of the insured, and the making of requisite proofs, and the defendant offered no evidence, but moved for a peremptory instruction, it was held that a verdict should have been directed for the plaintiff.⁴ But in a suit on an accident policy where there are several equally reasonable theories of death the jury will not be permitted to find that it occurred accidentally in the absence of evidence tending to establish accident rather than another cause of death.⁵ A defendant who questions the legal sufficiency of evidence offered to support one of several facts necessary in order to make out the plaintiff's case should, on motion, exclude the evidence offered on other issues in the case, or direct the jury to find for the defendant." But the rule was held inapplicable in the case cited.

St. 561, where the question was presented as to whether the plaintiff had furnished notice of the injury within the required time, and the only evidence that he had done so was his own statement, which was somewhat shattered on cross-examination. On this point the court said: "It is true, as contended by the company, that the plaintiff's testimony in regard to the time of the notice was somewhat confused and contradictory, and the fact that it was so furnishes a basis for a persuasive argument to the jury against it. But a careful examination of it has failed to convince us that the court would have been justified in withdrawing it from the jury and directing a verdict for the defendant. The contradictions in his testimony affected his credibility as a witness, and the jury were the proper judges of that. We cannot find in the cases cited by the company any warrant for holding that it was error to submit to the jury the question of notice. The evidence that it was properly given was more than a scintilla. The plaintiff testified positively that it was given to the company within the time prescribed by the policy. The jury saw him upon the stand and heard him testify. The testimony was competent, and it was for them to say what weight should be given to it."

Until there was some evidence tending to show that death resulted from accident rather than from design or natural causes, such as apoplexy or heart failure, there was nothing to go to a jury. There was not a prima facie case of accidental death. The burden of proving accidental death is upon the plaintiff. Until some proof is offered tending to establish one of several equally reasonable theories, some consistent with the theory of accidental death, and some inconsistent with it, a case is not made out."

XIII. VERDICT — 1. General. — A verdict for the plaintiff for a sum much less than the amount sworn to by him in his proofs of loss and on the trial does not conclusively find fraud on his part so as to authorize a judgment on the verdict for the defendant.² A verdict for the amount stated in the application is proper where the plaintiff testified to that as the amount paid for the property and there was no controversy as to value.³ Where the only evidence as to the amount of loss consists of two appraisals, a verdict inconsistent with each will be set aside.⁴

2. Special. — Special verdicts are sometimes resorted to in actions upon insurance policies.⁵ These are usually prepared beforehand by counsel in conjunction with the court,⁶ but sometimes by the court alone.⁷ The defendant may move for judgment on such a verdict and thus present the question of its sufficiency to authorize recovery by the plaintiff,⁸ but the court in giving judgment is confined to those facts found.⁹ A party who wishes to predicate error upon the action of the trial court in directing the jury to find a special verdict must save his rights by specific objections and exceptions thereto.¹⁰ In an action on an insurance policy a special verdict should find full compliance with the conditions of the policy,¹¹ such as that notice and proofs of loss were given or waived; and a finding that the insurer received from the plaintiff notice of loss does not find that the notice was given in the time required, nor does the finding of certain evidentiary facts, which might be held sufficient evidence of notice, amount to a finding that notice was given.¹² A special verdict should also set out the terms of the policy,¹³ unless the policy is set out in the pleading and is a part thereof.¹⁴ And the finding must be responsive to the issues.¹⁵ A special finding that proofs of loss were not furnished is not inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff, where the jury may have found that proofs of loss were waived.¹ A finding that the property destroyed was worth a certain amount at the time of the loss, is a finding that such amount was its "actual cash value."²

XIV. JUDGMENT — 1. Amount of Recovery — Recovery in Excess of Proofs of Loss. — Where there is no fraud, and the insurer has not been misled by statements of the amount of loss in the proofs of loss, and acted upon them to his prejudice, the insured is not limited to a recovery of the amount claimed in the proofs of loss.³

2. Attorneys' Fees. — The allowance of attorneys' fees under statutes authorizing their award as a part of the damages can only be made upon proofs as to what constitutes a reasonable fee based upon allegations in the petition, and the demand cannot be successfully made for the first time in the Supreme Court.⁴ So where an allowance has been made in the trial court the Supreme Court will not award the attorney of the insured an additional fee for conducting the cause in the appellate proceeding.⁵ The evidence upon which the allowance is based must be confined to a fee definitely contracted for, and evidence as to the value of legal services rendered upon a promise of a contingent fee is inadmissible.⁶ But the action of the trial court will, on appeal, be presumed to be correct in the absence of a contrary showing.⁷

method ordinarily pursued to remove the paint on the outside of a building preparatory to scraping it off to repaint it." I. NECESSITY OF CLAIMING IN PLEADING—1. At Law—a. WHEN NOT EXPRESSLY STIPULATED.—Where interest is the legal consequence of the debt or obligation without stipulation, it may be recovered though not claimed in pleading.¹ The interest, in such case, is an incident of the debt, and demand of the principal is a demand of both principal and interest.² Thus in cases of

In Grand Lodge, etc. v. Bagley, 164 Ill. 340, it was held that upon recovering the amount of a beneficiary certificate in an action of debt against a benefit society, the plaintiff may be allowed interest rightfully due thereon as damages, though the declaration contains no interest count. See also Supreme Lodge, etc. v. Zuhlke, 129 Ill. 298.

In Cassacia v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 28 Cal. 629, it was held that if an answer is filed judgment may be rendered for the principal, and interest added thereto, although the complaint only prays for judgment for the principal. But see David v. Conard, 1 Greene (Iowa) 336. See also Roberts v. Smith, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 417, holding that in order to recover interest on an account the declaration and bill of particulars must demand an account sufficient to include interest.

In Dunham v. Holloway, 3 Okla. 244, the suit was instituted upon an account. An itemized bill of the purchase was attached to and made a part of the complaint, and the time of such purchase and the dates when the several items so purchased were to be paid for were set forth. The prayer of the complaint asked for judgment for a specified sum, "with interest thereon according as the same may appear to be due from the items of said exhibit at the rate of seven per cent. per annum." Such prayer was held sufficient to support a verdict for the principal sum and interest as computed from the date when payment for each of the several items as set forth in the exhibit, became due to the date of the verdict.

When the Usage of Trade has fixed a period at which book accounts bear interest, this becomes the law of the purchase, and it is not necessary to demand it in a copy of claim filed. Adams v. Palmer, 30 Pa. St. 346. See also, to the same effect, Hummel v. Brown, 24 Pa. St. 310; Watt v. Hoch, 25 Pa. St. 411.

Recovery Under Common Counts.—In obligations and promissory notes containing no stipulation as to interest, it need not be demanded in the declaration,¹ nor need its payment be negatived in the averment of breaches.² In such cases the practice is to declare for the debt alone, and interest is recovered as damages for its detention.³

b. WHEN STIPULATED BY CONTRACT. — When, however, interest is expressly stipulated under contract, it cannot be allowed unless prayed for.⁴ Where interest is payable by the Tucker v. Page, 69 Ill. 179, it was held that interest may be recovered upon the amount of the award after the same is due, and after demand under the common counts, although the declaration contains no count for interest, it being but an incident to the principal sum. See also, to the same effect, McConnel v. Thomas, 3 Ill. 313. For other cases holding that interest may be recovered under common counts without a count for interest, see Lindsey v. Bland, 2 Spears (S. Car.) 30; Brooks v. Holland, 21 Conn. 395; Heiman v. Schroeder, 74 Ill. 158; Pease v. Barber, 3 Cai. N. Y. 266; Marshall v. Poole, 13 East 97; Slack v. Lowell, 3 Taunt. 157.

Necessity of Alleging Demand. — In an action upon a claim due on demand, where no date of demand is alleged, interest can be recovered only from the date of the commencement of the action. Hall v. Farmers', etc. Sav. Bank, 55 Iowa 612.

Action Upon Foreign Judgment. — In Massachusetts, in an action upon a foreign judgment, the plaintiff is entitled, without alleging or proving any demand, to recover interest by way of damages upon the judgment sued from the date of the latter to the date of the judgment for its recovery, at the ordinary rate of interest in the state. Hopkins v. Shepard, 129 Mass. 600.

In Padley v. Catterlin, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1258, it was held that where the plaintiff's loss or the defendant's gain is capable of pecuniary estimate the plaintiff may recover interest under a general allegation of damages.

On Bills for Account. — In North Carolina, where money has been received by a party which ex equo et bono he ought to refund or pay, interest follows as a matter of course, and this whether it has or has not been prayed for in the bill or ordered by the decree. Thus in bills for account it is not usual to pray for an account with interest; this is implied. Smith v. Godbold, 4 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 186.

App. 551; Ashby v. Shaw, 82 Mo. 76; Schermerhorn v. Perman, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 173.

"The plaintiffs' recovery is limited by the damages claimed in the petition, and as they pray for no interest they can recover none." Van Riper v. Morton, 61 Mo. App. 440.

Tax Bill Considered as Petition. — In New Orleans v. Fisk, 14 La. Ann. 875, under the Louisiana Act of 1852, a suit for unpaid taxes due to the city was brought by filing in the court a tax bill, citing the taxpayer by advertisement. It was held that the tax bill must be considered as the petition containing all the demands to which the plaintiff is entitled by law, and consequently in such a suit eight per cent. interest under the statute must be allowed in the judgment as if prayed for.

Time from Which Interest Computed. — In Shepard v. Pratt, 16 Kan. 209, it was held that not only must interest be claimed in the petition, but the time from which such interest is computed must be stated.

Agreement or Special Custom. — If an agreement for interest at an earlier period than the usage would allow or a special custom is relied on as giving it, such agreement or custom must be stipulation of the parties before the principal is due, such interest is part of the contract; and if the plaintiff fails to ask this and to negative payment, he can recover only the amount of debt and interest from maturity of the contract.¹ The demand of principal and interest upon a covenant to pay a specific sum with interest is divisible,² and if the plaintiff chooses to demand the principal only, he may do so, and he need not notice in his declaration the contract for interest.³

2. In Equity. — As a general rule a court of equity will not decree interest upon a balance unless it is specially sued for in the bill.⁴ This rule, however, applies only to interest due at the time the bill is filed. Where interest has accrued subsequently the court may, upon further directions, order the computation of such interest although there is no prayer for this in the bill.⁵

set forth or added to the copy of claim, as otherwise the plaintiff could not embrace it in his judgment, for it would not in such case stand as a necessary incident to the principal. Adams v. Palmer, 30 Pa. St. 346.

Prayer Sufficient for Relief. — In an action upon an account where the prayer is for judgment for the amount of an account and for "his costs and other relief," interest may be added to the amount found due from the time it was payable to the time of the trial. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Donnelly, 46 Ark. 87.

Negation of Payment of Interest. — Where a note is given bearing interest at a certain rate per annum, the payment of the interest as well as the principal must be negated in the breach or it will be too narrow. Clay v. Morehouse, 3 Ark. 261. See also Dickinson v. Tunstall, 4 Ark. 170; Sumner v. Ford, 3 Ark. 389; Chinn v. Hamilton, Hempst. (U. S.) 438. Contra, Cail v. Brookfield, 4 Ark. 554; *Causin v. In Glenn v. Cockey, 16 Md. 446, it was held that, upon a bill of cestuis que trustent against a trustee for an account and general relief, interest may be allowed against the trustee though not prayed for in the bill, if, under the facts disclosed, it appears equitable that it should be allowed. In this case the court said: "The decree of the Circuit Court from which this appeal was taken confirms the auditor's 'Account C' in charging the trustee with interest, and one of the grounds upon which a reversal is asked is that 'because the bill contains no allegation of misconduct, negligence, or breach of trust, or any claim for interest, none can properly be allowed.' In support of this view the appellants have referred to 1 Hill on Trustees 524, where the author uses this language: 'It may be observed that interest will not be given against a trustee unless it be prayed by the bill,' and to sustain the text refers to Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. Jr. 426; Bruere v. Pemberton, 12 Ves. Jr. 389, and Hooper v. Goodwin, 1 Swanst. 493. An examination of those cases has not satisfied this court that the principle stated in the text of Hill, however it may in some cases be applicable, can govern the decision of this case. In 2 Daniell's Ch. Pr. 1507, 1508, 1509 (ed. 1846), this question is considered, and several authorities cited which establish the principle that if the circumstances are such, at the time of filing the bill, that a claim for interest did not exist, or

II. ALLEGATION OF INTEREST OF FOREIGN STATE. — In order to entitle a party to recover interest due by the law of another state, it must be alleged in the pleading. It is not sufficient to prove it at the trial under the prayer for damages for the detention of the principal sum due.¹ No interest can be recovered on a note payable beyond the jurisdiction of the state, in the absence of an allegation and proof of the rate of interest at the place of payment.²

III. TIME FOR RECOVERY. — When interest is recoverable merely as damages, no action can be maintained for its recovery after the principal has been paid.³ The rule, however, is different where there is an expressed agreement to pay interest.⁴

could not be known, then it may be allowed if, under the facts disclosed, it appears equitable, even although not claimed in the bill; and the learned author also refers to cases in which bills were filed 'for the express purpose of enforcing an account and payment of balances, and decrees for interest were made, although no interest appears to have been prayed, nor was the consideration of it reserved.' Upon the best consideration we have been able to give this subject we are all of opinion that the objection to the frame of the bill ought not to be sustained."

Foreign Statute Must Be Pleaded. — If a party to an action wishes to take advantage of the law of any other state fixing the rate of interest upon a contract at a different rate from that fixed by the laws of his own state, he must plead such statute. Dunham v. Holloway, 3 Okla. 244.

Thus where a bequest or contract is silent as to interest, so that if it can be recovered it can only be recovered as damages, an action to recover it cannot be maintained after payment of the principal. American Bible Soc. v. Wells, 68 Me. 572.

I. CIVIL ACTIONS — 1. Suits for Forfeiture for Violation — a. NATURE. — Informations under the United States revenue laws for forfeiture of goods which seek no judgment of fine or imprisonment, while civil actions, are so far in the nature of criminal proceedings as to come within the rule that the general verdict upon several counts, seeking in different forms one object, must be upheld if one count is good.¹

b. JURISDICTION — Suits in Rem. — As a general rule, suits in rem for forfeiture for violations of internal revenue laws are brought in the District Court;² there are, however, numerous instances of such suits being brought in Circuit Courts.³

1. Coffey v. U. S., 116 U. S. 427; Still, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 403; U. S. v. 508 Snyder v. U. S., 112 U. S. 216; Clifton Barrels of Distilled Spirits, 5 Blatchf. v. U. S., 4 How. (U. S.) 242. (U. S.) 407; U. S. v. Six Barrels of Distilled Spirits, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 542; 2. Coffey v. U. S., 116 U. S. 427. U. S. v. Seven Barrels of Distilled Oil, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 174; U. S. v. 200 3. Coffey v. U. S., 116 U. S. 427. See also U. S. v. Two Tons of Coal, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 386; U. S. v. One Barrels of Whisky, 2 Woods (U. S.) 54.

Suits in Personam. — Jurisdiction of a suit in personam for violation of the internal revenue laws is generally in the District Court, but in at least one case it has been taken by the Circuit Court.¹

c. INFORMATION. — An information in rem which follows the words of the section of the statute on which it is founded is sufficient.²

Act of Agent Imputed to Principal. — In an information for forfeiture or violation of internal revenue laws, the acts and intents of the servants or agents of the complainant are to be imputed to the principal, and may work the forfeiture of the property so used for unlawful purposes.³

2. Actions to Enforce Payment of Legacy and Succession Taxes. — In enforcing the payment of taxes imposed upon successions and legacies by the Act of 1864, and which accrued prior to the repealing Act of 1870,⁴ it was held that the remedy provided by statute must be pursued, and that a common-law action could not be maintained.⁵

1. U. S. v. McKee, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 128.

2. Coffey v. U. S., 116 U. S. 427, where the information charged the complainant with defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States of the tax on spirits distilled by him. It was held that it was not necessary to set forth the particular means by which he defrauded and attempted to defraud the United States of the tax, or to specify the particular spirits covered by the tax; nor was it necessary to aver that the distilled spirits found on the complainant's distillery premises and seized were distilled by him or were the product of his distillery, or that the distillery apparatus was wrongfully used. Section 3257 U. S. Rev. Stat. does not make such facts elements of the causes of forfeitures denounced by it.

Distilled Spirits Unstamped. — In an information for the forfeiture of a cask of distilled spirits found without having thereon the required stamp, the fact that such stamps may have been removed by accident need not be negatived, as this is a matter of defense. U. S. v. 9 Casks, etc., of Distilled Spirits, 51 Fed. Rep. 191.

An Information for Altering Inspection Stamps which charges that the defendant "did unlawfully change and alter" the stamps sufficiently shows that the act was done wilfully and intentionally, as otherwise it could not be said to have been done unlawfully. U. S. v. Bardenheier, 49 Fed. Rep. 846.

Information for Using Inspected Packages for Sale of Other Spirits. — In an information for putting into a cask, after it has been inspected or stamped, other spirits, either of the same or of a different quality, which were not therein at the time of such inspection or stamping, it must be shown that the change was caused by filling them with other spirits and that other spirits had been placed in the cask after the original contents had been wholly or partially withdrawn. It will not be sufficient to allege that spirits of 102 degrees proof were fraudulently sold in casks marked 105 degrees proof, since the reduction in proof may have been due to natural causes or to the addition of water after a part of the original contents had leaked out or had evaporated. U. S. v. Bardenheier, 49 Fed. Rep. 846.

3. Bush v. U. S., 24 Fed. Rep. 917, where the court said: "Undoubtedly, in a criminal prosecution this rule would not be applied; but considering the scope and intent of the statute solely as it relates to forfeitures, we think the information was supported by proof of the unlawful use and of the intent to defraud, whether such use and intent were by the claimant personally or by some person acting under his authority and control." 3. Actions to Recover Taxes Illegally Collected. — In order to recover taxes alleged to have been illegally collected, the statutory remedy must be strictly pursued and all its conditions complied with in order to give a right of action.¹ Thus an appeal must first be taken to the commissioner of internal revenue, and the suit must then be brought within two years after such commissioner has rendered his decision upon the appeal.²

II. INDICTMENT FOR VIOLATION — 1. Necessity for Indictment. — The violation of internal revenue laws being so punishable as to make it an infamous crime, it follows that the prosecution for such crime must be by indictment or by presentment of the grand jury, and the defendant cannot be held to answer the charge upon an information.³

2. Essential Averments of Indictment. — Generally, as in cases of indictment for other crimes, an indictment for the violation of internal revenue laws must contain sufficient to inform the prisoner of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to enable him to plead conviction or acquittal in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense.⁴ It should set forth all the facts essential to constitute the offense with which he is charged.⁵

1864, that "proceedings shall be commenced before any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such personal estate or property, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or personal estate, or any portion of the same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court."

Where Decision Is Delayed. — By the Act of June 6, 1872, c. 315, § 44 (Rev. Stat. U. S., § 3226), which is an amendment of section 19 of the Act of July 13, 1866, c. 184, it is provided that no suit shall be brought to recover taxes illegally or erroneously collected unless an appeal has first been taken to the commissioner of internal revenue and a decision thereon had by him; provided that a suit may nevertheless be brought if his decision is delayed more than six months, but that no such suit shall be brought more than a year after the rejection of the claim. Hicks v. James, 48 Fed. Rep. 542.

3. U. S. v. Johannesen, 35 Fed. Rep. 411.

It is provided by Rev. Stat. U. S., §§ 5539, 5541, 5542, that a sentence of the United States courts "to imprisonment for a period longer than one year," or a sentence of "imprisonment and confinement to hard labor," may be ordered to be executed in a state prison or penitentiary. Such imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary, either with or without hard labor, is at the present time an infamous punishment. Mackin v. U. S., 117 U. S. 348.

4. See article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 344.

5. In U. S. v. Simmons, 96 U. S. 360, an indictment founded on U. S. Rev. Stat., § 3281, alleged that the defendant "did knowingly and unlawfully engage in and carry on the business of a distiller, within the intent and meaning of the internal revenue laws of the United States, with the intent to defraud the United States of the tax on the spirits distilled by him, against the peace," etc. The court held that the indictment was sufficient to authorize judgment, and that it was not necessary to state the particular means by which the United States was to be defrauded.

An Indictment for Hindering or Resisting an Internal Revenue Officer who attempts without warrant to enter a building

3. Joinder of Defendants. — An indictment for the violation of internal revenue laws may join two or more defendants where nothing in the nature of the offense prevents one of the defendants being principal in the first degree and others principals in the second degree.¹

4. Charging Different Offenses. — Where there are two or more charges against a defendant for two or more acts of the same class of crimes or offenses which may be properly joined, he may be charged with such crimes in separate counts of one indictment.² The accused should not, however, be tried upon an indictment where illicit distilled spirits subject to taxes are kept and seize said spirits must aver that the attempt to enter was made in the daytime or made at nighttime, when the premises were open, and that such entry was necessary for the purposes of examining said spirits; it must also aver that the distilled spirits were in the custody of some one who purposed selling or removing the same in fraud of the internal revenue laws, or who designed to avoid the payment of taxes thereon. Where the indictment does not contain these averments, the authority of revenue officers to seize is not averred, and it does not appear that the defendant was guilty of any offense in obstructing or preventing such seizure. U. S. v. Fears, 3 Woods (U. S.) 510.

In an Indictment for Removing, Without Destroying, Stamps from a cask containing distilled spirits, it is not necessary to set out the stamps removed, verbatim, but it will be sufficient to describe them by their statutory designation; nor is it necessary to describe the spirits as "domestic" in order to charge the offense, nor to charge that the defendant had knowledge of the contents of the casks from which the stamps were removed. The intent with which the stamps were removed need not be charged, since no particular intent is made an ingredient of the offense. U. S. v. Bayaud, 16 Fed. Rep. 376.

For Receiving Spirits Unlawfully Removed from Distillery. — In a criminal information for receiving, from a person to the district attorney unknown, spirits which have been unlawfully removed from a distillery to a place other than a distillery warehouse provided by law, it is sufficient to show that the spirits were removed from an illicit distillery, since the provision of the statute is intended to apply not only where the spirits received are removed from a registered distillery, but also where they are the product of an unauthorized distillery. It is not necessary in such information to aver that the person who delivered the spirits to the defendant was unknown to the district attorney, and such averment need not be proved. This is not the case of an omission to name the defendant or the party injured. U. S. v. Byrne, 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 259.

Indictment for Removal of Distilled Spirits. — An indictment under Rev. Stat. U. S., § 3296, which charges a removal of a certain quantity of "distilled spirits" on which the tax had not been paid to a place other than the distillery warehouse is sufficient. U. S. v. Anthony, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 92, where the court said: "While, in a strictly chemical sense, the terms 'ethyl alcohol' and 'spirits of wine' are generic terms, and the term 'distilled spirits,' as defined by section 3248, when used in that sense, would be generic, and not necessarily confined to the product of distillation, still the term 'distilled spirits' has also an ordinary and literal meaning, which implies distillation, and when it is used in the latter sense it is confined to the product of distillation. It is so used in section 3296 and in this indictment. Consequently the indictment shows the subject-matter to be subject to tax, under section 3254, and is good."

1. U. S. v. Bayaud, 16 Fed. Rep. 376, where the indictment charged the defendant and another with having removed certain United States internal revenue stamps from packages containing distilled spirits without defacing and destroying the said stamps. It was held that the nature of this offense was such that a joinder of the defendants was permissible.

charging different offenses; and an indictment which contains under separate counts two distinct offenses, with different penalties, will be quashed.¹

1. U. S. v. Gaston, 28 Fed. Rep. 848, where the indictment charged the accused in one count with carrying on the business of retailing liquor without the payment of the special tax, and in another charged him with dealing in manufactured tobacco without having paid the special tax. In sustaining a motion to quash this indictment the court said: "This indictment contains, in separate counts, two distinct offenses, the penalty in each offense being different from the other; as a retail liquor dealer he must be imprisoned as a part of the penalty, and as a dealer in manufactured tobacco he may be imprisoned, and the minimum fine is different. These offenses are, besides, separate and distinct transactions, and not of the same class of crimes or offenses that may be joined under section 1024 of the Revised Statutes."

I. INTERPLEADER AT COMMON LAW.—The only personal action in which the right of interpleader existed at common law was detinue. It was applied to a few other cases such as quare impedit and writs of right of ward.¹ Except in Pennsyl-

1. Russell v. First Presb. Church, 65 Pa. St. 14, where Sharswood, J., said: "The defendant in detinue could plead that the chattel for which suit was brought was held by him as bailee or depositary; that it was claimed by a third person in privity with the plaintiff, and that he was willing to deliver it to the party who was legally entitled to it. Thereupon a process of garnishment issued to compel such third person to appear and defend, or else disclaim his title. This practice has been adopted by the courts of this state and extended to other forms of action. The want of a court of chancery rendered this necessary to prevent a failure of justice. For, although a defendant might protect himself by giving notice of the suit to the claimant, and calling upon him to appear and take defense in his name, yet the latter, not being a party to the record, would not be concluded by the judgment without proof of the notice. If that proof should fail, the defendant would be remediless, and thus might be subjected to two judgments against him for the same cause of action by two different plaintiffs. Hence the practice was early introduced of compelling such third person to become a party by rule or scire facias founded on a suggestion of the defendants, and no doubt he would be admitted to appear and plead gratis without order or process on such suggestion. Coates v. Roberts, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 109; Wallace v. Clingen, 9 Pa. St. 51; Tritt v. Crotzer, 13 Pa. St. 458; McMann v. Caruthers, 2 Am. L. J. 133. It is the defendant, however, who is to be protected. He must, in due time, make the suggestion, show that the claimant is in privity with the plaintiff, state his vania,¹ it is believed that interpleader in common-law actions exists in the United States only by virtue of statutory provisions.²

II. BILLS OF INTERPLEADER — 1. Definition. — A bill of interpleader is ordinarily exhibited where two or more persons³ claim the same debt or duty or other thing⁴ from the plaintiff by differ-willingness to pay the money to the one found entitled to recover it, and pray for the substitution."

In Brownfield v. Canon, 25 Pa. St. 301, the court said: "The principles of interpleading, and the cases in which it may be applied, are best exemplified in the practice in equity; but the form of the procedure in a common-law case is very simple, and requires but little modification. It may be found very fully presented in the abridgments of Fitzherbert, Brooke, and Viner, under the titles Garnishee, Enterpleader, and Interpleader, and in 2 Mod. Ent. 425, 427. The principle appears in various forms in our law; as where heirs, devisees, or alienees come in on notice by writ or by the party to defend for their interests, where a warrantee or landlord comes in on notice to defend an action of ejectment, and other cases. See Brightley's Equity 226. Under our practice, where the middleman or stakeholder is sued, he may take the simple course of giving notice to the other claimant of the money or thing in controversy to come and defend the action or be barred of his claim. But this does not conclusively save the middleman from his liability to action by the other claimant; for the latter, not being a party on the record, is not held barred by the judgment until the fact of notice is properly proved. The middleman is not, therefore, conclusively protected by such judgment, for his proof of notice may fail him. Besides, if the middleman fail, he will have to pay the costs himself, and may have no available recourse. It would therefore seem more prudent for the defendant to pursue the regular common-law form of filing his suggestion, admitting the debt or duty, and his willingness to pay or perform, and stating the claims of third persons, and therefore pray for a scire facias to bring him in to interplead. Thus, the third person, called, from his being warned, the garnishee, or, in other forms of procedure, the intervener, 3 Adams's Ecc. R. 37; 1 L. Ecc. R. 599; 2 Domat 676, is compelled to come in as a party and set up his claim, and is concluded by the record. By the service of the scire facias, the intervener or garnishee actually becomes a party; and if he makes default, the plaintiff will have judgment to recover the money or thing claimed from the defendant, and his damages and costs from the garnishee. If he comes in and disclaims, the plaintiff recovers of course from the defendant. If he defends unsuccessfully, the plaintiff will have judgment for the thing claimed against the defendant, and against the garnishee for damages, or interest and costs. If the intervener plead, the issue to the court or jury is between him and the plaintiff, and the defendant stands aside altogether and has nothing further to do but to pay the money or deliver the thing sued for according to the judgment of the court. If the intervener recover he shall have judgment against the defendant for the thing claimed and against the plaintiff for his damages and costs. If, however, the money be in court, the judgment of course is that the party recovering shall take it out of court. If it has been delivered to one of the claimants, the judgment will accord with the fact. Usually, when the suit is for money, the defendant offers to bring it into court, and does so; and if it is for some other thing, he keeps it safely to abide the order or judgment of the court. If the middleman be sued by two claimants severally, he must sue out his scire facias to interplead in the suit first brought, or if they are both brought at once, then in the one in which the declaration shall be first filed or which the court shall direct."

3. More than Two. — In Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Healey, (Supreme Ct.) 28 N. Y. Supp. 478, it was held that there was no difficulty upon principle in maintaining a bill of interpleader against more than two persons — three in that case — where each claims the same property in a different and distinct right.

4. See infra, II. 3. c. Defendants Claiming the Same Fund or Thing.

ent or separate interests, and he, not knowing to which of the claimants he ought of right to render the same debt, duty, or other thing, fears that he may suffer injury from their conflicting claims, and therefore prays that they may be compelled to interplead and state their several claims, so that the court may adjudge to whom the same debt, duty, or other thing belongs.¹

2. Interpleader by Cross-bill. — Interpleader is an original bill,² and is not the proper subject of a cross-bill.³ But if a cross-bill contains all the substantial allegations of a bill of interpleader, including a prayer for process and for relief, it seems that it may be treated as an original bill of interpleader.⁴

3. Conditions Essential to Maintenance of Bill — a. NO OTHER ADEQUATE REMEDY — Remedy at Law. — The general rule is that a bill of interpleader will not be entertained where the plaintiff has a clear⁵ and unembarrassed remedy at law⁶ — and in this

Lord Cottenham's Definition. — In Hogart v. Cutts, 1 Craig & P. 204, Lord Cottenham said: "The definition of interpleader is not and cannot now be disputed. It is where the plaintiff says, 'I have a fund in my possession in which I claim no personal interest, and to which you, the defendants, set up conflicting claims; pay me my costs, and I will bring the fund into court, and you shall contest it between yourselves.'" This quotation has been cited with approval in Cogswell v. Armstrong, 77 Ill. 139; Wakeman v. Kingsland, 46 N. J. Eq. 113; Anderson v. Wilkinson, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 601; *Greene v. In Admiralty. — The rule was applied without being stated in Sablich v. Russell, L. R. 2 Eq. 441, to proceedings in admiralty, upon the ground that "inasmuch as two persons cannot succeed against the ship in respect of the same subject-matter, it may be supposed that the Court of Admiralty will do complete justice between the parties."

Defense in Pending Action of Replevin.

— The defendant in an action of replevin brought a suit to enjoin the plaintiff from further prosecution of the suit, alleging in his bill that he purchased the property from one who had deduced title under an irregular tax sale and that the plaintiff in the replevin suit claimed to own the property. The bill prayed that the vendor and the plaintiff in replevin be required to interplead and settle the question of title between themselves. It was held that the title to the property could be fully litigated and established in the action of replevin, and hence that there was no ground for the bill of interpleader. Long v. Barker, 85 Ill. 431.

Remedy by Sheriff. — When a sheriff is in doubt as to the appropriation of money on execution, he may pay the money into the court whence the execution issued, make a return of the facts, notifying the conflicting claimants, and leave them to apply to the court to determine the priority of their respective claims. McDonald v. Allen, 37 Wis. 108; Turner v. Lawrence, 11 Ala. 427; Henderson v. Richardson, 5 Ala. 350. Hence, he should not, under such circumstances, be allowed to maintain a bill of interpleader. McDonald v. Allen, 37 Wis. 108; Parker v. Barker, 42 N. H. 78.

behalf, a remedy given by statute may generally be considered as a legal remedy¹ — or, having had such a remedy, has neglected to avail himself of it until too late.²

Another Equitable Remedy. — It is not necessarily an objection to a bill of interpleader that the plaintiff has another equitable remedy which may be regarded as more convenient or less troublesome to pursue.³ But where the plaintiff may have full relief by peti-

1. Dry Dock M. E. Mission Church v. Carr, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 60, where the statute provided an ample remedy for the owner of a building against the contractor and the creditors of the contractor in relation to the balance due from the owner upon the building contract. Board of Education v. Scoville, 13 Kan. 17, holding, however, that the statutory remedy by substitution upon application of a defendant in an action who holds a fund claimed by the plaintiff and the person whom the defendant seeks to substitute is a concurrent equitable remedy which presents no obstacle to an action of interpleader. On the last point see also Barry v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 536; Wood v. Swift, 81 N. Y. 31; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 175.

Remedy in Probate Court. — Where an executor or administrator has a clear remedy in the probate court in respect of conflicting claims of distributees or others, he should pursue that remedy instead of resorting to an action of interpleader. Freeland v. Wilson, 18 Mo. 380; Baker v. Brown, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 627.

And so far as the probate court has by statute exclusive original jurisdiction of the subject there would seem to be an insuperable bar to relief in equity. Chandler v. Dodson, 52 Mo. 128.

2. Carroll v. Parkes, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 269, where the plaintiff had been sued by one of the claimants, and had suffered judgment to go against him without interposing a perfect defense which was available to him. To the same point, see McKinney v. Kuhn, 59 Miss. 186; Yarborough v. Thompson, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 291; Holmes v. Clark, 46 Vt. 22.

3. Curtis v. Williams, 35 Ill. App. 518. In that case the court overruled the contention that the bill of interpleader should be dismissed because the plaintiff could obtain the relief sought by setting up the facts in his answer in an equity suit pending against him by one claimant and requiring the other claimant to be made a party to the suit. The court cited Warrington v. Wheatstone, 1 Jac. 203, where an injunction went to restrain an action at law by one claimant and another to restrain a bill in chancery by another, and also Morgan v. Marsack, 2 Meriv. 107, and Crawford v. Fisher, 10 Sim. 479. "If the doctrine under consideration was known to equity practice," said the court, in the case first above cited, "the question arises why, in these cases, which were well considered, it was not directed that the claimant in the action at law be made a party to the suit of the claimants in equity, so that the holder of the fund might be protected, and the interpleader made unnecessary." See also Prudential Assur. Co. v. Thomas, L. R. 3 Ch. 74.

In New York the right to file an interpleader complaint has been recognized although actions are pending in which, under the code, the court may in its discretion direct that all parties in interest be made parties. Barry v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 536; Wood v. Swift, 81 N. Y. 31; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 175, reversing a decision of the general term dismissing the interpleader on the ground that the plaintiff might have made one of the claimants a party to the other claimant's suit.

Kansas. — In Board of Education v. Scoville, 13 Kan. 17, the plaintiff had been sued by one of the defendants in an action still pending, and in which the defendant (plaintiff in the interpleader suit) had a right under section 43 of the Code to have all the other parties brought in and have them interplead as to who should receive the fund, etc. But the court held that the remedy given by the Code was an equitable remedy and did not supersede the remedy by action of interpleader — that the two remedies were in effect concurrent.

tion in another equity suit pending against him in which all the claimants are parties, it seems that he must resort to that remedy.¹

b. PRIVACY OF TITLE BETWEEN CLAIMANTS — (1) The General Rule.— Some authorities are exacting in the requirement that in order to make a proper case for a bill of interpleader there must be a privity of estate, title, or contract between the defendant claimants, and that if one of the defendants claims under title paramount there is an absence of privity and the suit cannot be maintained.² Thus the bill cannot be filed by a tenant so as to

1. In Lowe v. Richardson, 3 Madd. 277, a bill of interpleader was filed by a captain against the consignee and a person who claimed against the bill of lading, but it appearing that the defendant who so claimed had filed a prior claim against the captain and the consignee, and obtained an injunction against the captain restraining him from delivering the cargo to the consignee, an injunction on the interpleader was refused, as the captain was protected by the former suit and his bill was unnecessary. There, it will be noticed, all the persons in interest were before the court as parties. The case is cited in Badeau v. Rogers, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 209, in support of the suggestion by the chancellor that a bill of interpleader was unnecessary in that case because suits in chancery were pending in which the claimants had made each other defendants, and to which the plaintiff was a party, and in which he might by petition have had the same relief.

And precisely the same relief as in the chancery practice may be had in an equitable action under the code in which all the persons interested are parties. Thus, in Lane v. New York L. Ins. Co., 56 Hun (N. Y.) 92, an action was brought against an insurance company by a plaintiff claiming to be entitled to a certain fund, and a rival claimant was made a joint defendant. It was held that the court might properly allow the insurance company to pay the fund into court and be dismissed from the action. The court incidentally declared that the code provision—N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 820—allowing a defendant to have an order of substitution in certain cases did not apply, because that remedy was intended to apply only to actions at law. See also Williams v. Wright, 20 Tex. 499.

2. See opinion of Vann, J., in Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 657; and further,

"One of the essential elements of the equitable remedy of interpleader as laid down is that all the adverse titles or claims to the thing or debt in reference to which the bill is filed must be dependent, or be derived from a common source." Kyle v. Mary Lee Coal, etc., Co., 112 Ala. 606.

"In the cases of adverse independent titles. it is said, the true doctrine seems to be that the party holding the property must defend himself as well as he can at law, and he is not entitled to the assistance of a court of equity; for that would be to assume the right to try merely legal titles upon a controversy between different parties, where there is no privity of contract between them and the third person who calls for an interpleader." Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281; and to the same point see Boston Third Nat. Bank v. Skillings, etc., Lumber Co., 132 Mass. 410; Morristown First Nat. Bank v. Bininger, 26 N. J. Eq. 345; *Bartlett v. Bill by Shipmaster.— In Lowe v. Richardson, 3 Madd. 277, it was doubted whether a bill of interpleader would lie at the suit of a master of a ship where the adverse claims were paramount to the bill of lading; although it was conceded that it was maintainable where the parties claim adversely at law or in equity under the bill of lading. But subsequently the came court, in Morley v. Thompson, 3 Madd. Index, Interpleader, 564, decided that the master might file such a bill although the adverse claims were paramount to the bill of lading. Mr. Justice Story remarks upon this decision that the bill does not seem to have been founded upon any legal adverse titles, wholly independent of each other, and not derived from a common source. 2 Story Eq. Jur. 121.

See, for a proper case for interpleader, Schuyler v. Pelissier, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 191.

"That an agent should have the power of filing a bill of interpleader when his principal demands the redelivery of goods bailed with him appeared to me so monstrous a proposition and to involve such frightful consequences in mercantile transactions, that I could not suppose it was meant to contend for any such doctrine." Per Lord Brougham, in Pearson v. Cardon, 2 Russ. & M. 606.

In Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 Myl. & C. 1, Lord Cottenham said that a bill of interpleader as between principal and agent was admissible only where the claim was under a derivative and not under an adverse title.

An Attorney cannot maintain such a bill to settle the claim to money which he has collected for his client where a mere stranger claims the money upon the ground that the security upon which the money was collected was originally obtained by his client wrongfully. Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 365.

Derivative Claims.—An attorney at law who has collected money may file a bill of interpleader in respect to the same against defendants who set up a derivative claim from the person for whom the attorney undertook the collection. Goddard v. Leech, Wright (Ohio) 476; Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281. See also Wakeman v. Dickey, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 24.

Thus, an attorney having money collected for a client in his hands, which money is claimed by two creditors of the client, the latter disclaiming any interest in favor of himself, the attorney not being so fully cognizant of the fact as to be able to determine the right, may properly bring a bill of interpleader against the creditors. Sammis v. L'Engle, 19 Fla. 800.

4. "No case can be found in the books where a debtor has ever sustained a bill to interplead his creditor and an outsider—a mere stranger—who had no other claim to assert than a mere equity against the creditor to reach the fund loaned." U. S. Trust Co. v. Wiley, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 477. See also Boston Third Nat. Bank v. Skillings, etc., Lumber Co., 132 Mass. 410.

5. Bill by Sheriff.—"A sheriff who has seized property upon execution cannot maintain a bill of interpleader to determine whether the execution debtor or a third person claiming it is entitled to the property, as their claims against him are not of the same character or in the same right." Boston Third Nat. Bank v. Skillings, etc., Lumber Co., 132 Mass. 410; Morristown First Nat. Bank v. Bininger, 26 N. J. Eq. 345. See also infra, II. 3. c. Plaintiff Not a Wrongdoer, notes.

But he may file such a bill against the assignee in bankruptcy, and the execution creditor, when it is doubtful whether as against the latter the property passed by the assignment. The title of each in such a case is derived from that of the execution debtor. Child v. Mann, L. R. 3 Eq. 806, cited with approval in Fairbanks v. Belknap, 135 Mass. 179. For other cases proper for a bill of interpleader by a sheriff, see Lawson v. Jordan, 19 Ark. 297; Storrs v. Payne, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 506; Parker v. Barker, 42 N. H. 95.

And as to the exclusive remedy by a sheriff against conflicting claimants by paying into the court whence the execution issued the money collected therein, see McDonald v. Allen, 37 Wis. 108; Parker v. Barker, 42 N. H. 78; Turner v. Lawrence, 11 Ala. 427.

6. Fulton Bank v. Chase, (Supreme Ct.) 6 N. Y. Supp. 126; German Sav. Bank v. Friend, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. 400; German Exch. Bank v. Excise Com'rs, 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 394.

But in the case last cited it was help-against his vendor,¹ when a distinctly adverse and paramount title is asserted against the landlord, bailor, principal, creditor, execution creditor, depositor, or vendor. But the doctrine of privity seems to have been abrogated in England, partly by statute and partly by judicial decisions.² And in the United States, according to high authority, the code provisions for interpleader by order apparently do not recognize the rule,³ and its validity has also been regarded as doubtful in ordinary actions of interpleader.⁴

(2) Landlord and Tenant.—A tenant may file a bill of interpleader against his landlord and persons who claim rent in privity of contract or tenure with the landlord,⁵ as where the conflict is that the bill could be maintained, as the claimant's title was derived from the depositor. For other like cases, see Wells v. Miner, 25 Fed. Rep. 533; Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Airey, 95 Mich. 520; People's Sav. Bank v. Wilcox, 15 R. I. 258; Rahway Sav. Inst. v. Drake, 25 N. J. Eq. 220; City Bank v. Skelton, 2 Blatchf. (U. S.) 14; *Alley v. 4. In Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 648, the court refrained from deciding whether the rule requiring privity between the claimants still exists in New York, but in discussing the subject the opinion of the court evidently leans towards the view that the severity of the rule ought to be mitigated.

Gale*, 6 W. Va. 525; Birmingham v. Tuite, 7 Ir. R. Eq. 221. See also McCoy v. Bateman, 8 Nev. 126; McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 592.

Upon the Death of the Lessor, who was a married woman, her husband claimed the rent as her devisee in fee, and her heirs claimed by descent. It was held that the tenant might well file a bill of interpleader against them if he was unable to determine which of the claimants had the better right. Badeau v. Tylee, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 270.

Other Instances.—In Hodges v. Smith, 1 Cox 357, and Angell v. Hadden, 16 Ves. Jr. 203, such a bill was sustained by a tenant for the purpose of ascertaining to which of two different claimants he was to pay his rent.

In Dungey v. Angove, 2 Ves. Jr. 312, where the bill was dismissed, Lord Rosslyn said that a bill of interpleader would lie where the tenant may be liable to pay the rent to one of two different persons; and he puts a variety of cases where the tenant affirming the title, the tenure, and the contract by which the rent is payable, but where it is uncertain to whom it is to be paid, may file a bill of interpleader.

In Doran v. Everitt, 2 Ir. R. Eq. 28, a bill of interpleader was sustained in behalf of a tenant against the devisee of the landlord and an heir who claimed that the will was obtained by fraud and had instituted a suit to set it aside. And Schell v. Lowe, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 43, was a case where the facts were practically the same as those in the case last cited.

In Jew v. Wood, 3 Beav. 579, before the master of the rolls, and affirmed by the chancellor on appeal in 1 Craig & P. 185, 5 Jur. 954, a tenant after the death of his landlord paid rent to the landlord's executors and devisees for two or three years, when the heirs of the landlord gave notice to pay to them in the future. The tenant ceased to pay altogether, and the executors and devisees distrained. He then filed a bill of interpleader, and it was sustained.

In Angell v. Hadden, 15 Ves. Jr. 244, 16 Ves. Jr. 202, the tenant maintained a bill of interpleader in the case of annuities charged upon land.

between the latter and one claiming the rent as assignee thereof.¹ But if a stranger claims under title paramount, the suit cannot be maintained against him and the landlord, as there is an absence of privity between them.²

(3) Bailor and Bailee.—A bailee may file a bill of interpleader against his bailor and one who claims in privity of title with the latter,³ but he cannot maintain a bill to protect himself against the claim of his bailor and that of a third person who asserts an adverse title to that of the bailor.⁴

c. DEFENDANTS CLAIMING THE SAME FUND OR THING.—In order to maintain a bill of interpleader it is commonly declared to be essential that the several defendants who are asked to interplead are claiming the same debt, fund, or duty,⁵ and some of the

In Cowtan v. Williams, 9 Ves. Jr. 107, Lord Eldon sustained a bill of interpleader by a lessee of tithes against the vicar and his assignees under an insolvent act of which the vicar had taken the benefit subsequent to the lease, both claiming the rent. In Clarke v. Byne, 13 Ves. Jr. 383, the same principle was affirmed and applied to claimants of the rent under voluntary transfers made by the lessor.

Jr. 108; Clarke v. Byne, 13 Ves. Jr. 386; Boston Third Nat. Bank v. Skillings, etc., Lumber Co., 132 Mass. 410, where the court said: "Where a tenant is liable to pay rent, and a third person claims it by a title independent of the landlord, the tenant cannot maintain a bill of interpleader. But if the third person claims under the landlord, so that the question arises from the act of the landlord, this creates a privity with the tenant, and the bill will lie."

In Dodd v. Bellows, 29 N. J. Eq. 127, the bill was filed by a tenant against his landlord and the purchaser of the demised premises under proceedings at law in attachment. The conflicting claims set up in the bill were the claim of the landlord to rent under the lease and the claim of the purchaser under the proceedings in attachment to damages for the use and occupation of the premises by the plaintiff since the purchaser's title began. It was held that as the purchaser was not in privity of contract or tenure with the landlord, the bill could not be maintained.

Rent and Use and Occupation. — In Crane v. Burntrager, 1 Ind. 165, one claimed rent from the plaintiff under a contract, while the others claimed compensation for use and occupation. "The two claims are not for the same debt," said the court, "and hence the parties cannot be called upon to interplead." Dodd v. Bellows, 29 N. J. Eq. 127, is quatuor pedibus with the case last cited.

Several Leases. — And one who has taken an independent lease from each of two adverse claimants cannot compel them to interplead with regard to their titles and the validity of their leases. Standley v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 836.

Mortgage Notes and Purchase-Money Notes. — When mortgaged lands are sold and conveyed by the mortgagor by deed with covenants of warranty, the purchaser paying part of the price in cash and giving his note for the residue, if the note secured by the mortgage and the note for the unpaid purchase money are afterwards transferred to different persons the purchaser cannot maintain a bill of interpleader against them. The claims are not for the same fund or debt. Wilkinson v. Searcy, 74 Ala. 243.

Bill of Exchange and Purchase Money. — At the request of a vendee of goods a bank gave the vendor its acceptance for the purchase money, taking the vendee's acceptance for the same amount. The bank assigned the vendee's acceptance to a third person, who sued the vendee on it. In the meanwhile the bank had failed before its acceptance matured, and the vendor sued the vendee for the price of the goods. It was held that the vendee could not maintain an action of interpleader against the vendor and the assignee of the vendee's acceptance, because the conflicting claims were not for the same fund or debt. Bassett v. Leslie, (Supreme Ct.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 483, affirmed in 123 N. Y. 396.

Purchase Price and Value. — A vendee sued by his vendor for the price of goods, and by a third party in trover for their value, cannot maintain an interpleader suit, since the claims made against him are not identical, the one seeking to have the benefit of a contract, the other claiming the value of chattels which are the subject of it. Slaney v. Sidney, 14 M. & W. 800.

Identity of Choses in Action. — "When the subject in dispute has a bodily existence, no difficulty can arise on the ground of identity, for no dispute can arise as to the identity of matter. But where the subject in dispute is a chose in action, which has no bodily existence, it becomes necessary to determine what constitutes identity. Where the claims made by the defendants are of different amounts, they never can be identical; but where they are the same in amount, that circumstance goes far to determine their identity. The amount, however, may not be sufficient of itself to determine the identity; for the thing claimed.¹ But according to the weight of authority, it is not indispensable that the identity shall be absolute and perfect throughout.²

the amount may be the same and the debt may be different." Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 43, quoting Shadwell v. C., in Glyn v. Duesbury, 11 Sim. 139.

Various Tax Assessments. — Where the same property is taxed in two different towns for different amounts, the same debt or duty is not due from the owner so as to enable him to maintain a bill of interpleader against the collectors of the several towns to compel them, as officers of the towns, to litigate with each other instead of with the plaintiff. Greene v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 313.

1. "It is an inflexible rule that the thing to which the parties make adverse claims must be one and the same thing. * * * Where the claims made by the defendants are of different amounts, they never can be identical." Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 46.

Various Lien Claimants. — Where the owner of a building files a bill against contractors, subcontractors, and material men, to have their respective rights to the funds in his hands determined so that he may pay as the court shall direct, it is not strictly a bill of interpleader, for the reason that all do not claim the same fund. Newhall v. Kastens, 70 Ill. 156.

Original and Substituted Insurance Policies. — Where an insurance policy is erroneously canceled and a new policy substituted in favor of new beneficiaries, the several policies do not represent the same debt or duty so as to sustain a bill of interpleader by the company against both sets of beneficiaries. Conley v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 67 Ala. 472.

2. School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85, distinguished in Wallace v. Sortor, 52 Mich. 159. In the case first cited the plaintiff (School District) was indebted to a contractor for building a schoolhouse. This contractor became insolvent, owing largely for material and labor for building the schoolhouse, and otherwise. The plaintiff agreed to pay, at a future time named, a certain sum to parties to whom the contractor had given orders on the plaintiff and parties having claims for material and labor pro rata. Before the money fell due some of these parties commenced proceedings to enforce their claims as mechanics' liens, others sued the contractors and garnished the plaintiff, judgment creditors of the contractors filed creditors' bills and enjoined the plaintiff from paying over the fund, and still others were threatening suit. It was held to be no objection to a bill of interpleader by the plaintiff against the several claimants that each of the latter claimed only a part of the fund where all together claimed an amount far in excess of the whole fund. The court alluded to "the narrow and technical ground as to the identity of the several claims" as indicated in several cases cited, and said: "A much more liberal and reasonable rule has been established; and bills of interpleader have been frequently maintained where the several claimants, instead of claiming the whole fund or matter in dispute, have claimed different portions of the fund, when the aggregate of all the claims exceeded the full amount of the fund, and the complainant being, as in the present case, virtually a stakeholder, and unable to determine to whom or in what proportions the payments should be made. See Suart v. Welch, 4 Myl. & C. 320; Angell v. Hadden, 15 Ves. Jr. 244, 16 Ves. Jr. 203, 2 Meriv. 169; Paris v. Gilham, Cooper 56; Sieveling v. Behrens, 2 Myl. & C. 592; *Morley v. d. PLAINTIFF INDIFFERENT AND DISINTERESTED — Indifferent as Between Claimants. — It is of the essence of an interpleader suit that the plaintiff shall be and continue¹ entirely indifferent between the conflicting claims.² But the plaintiff is not precluded from filing a bill of interpleader by defending a suit brought against him by one of the claimants to the fund if the defense is not too far persisted in.³

Plaintiff Claiming No Interest in Subject-matter. — The bill will not lie where the plaintiff asserts an interest in any part of the fund or other thing in dispute.⁴ Interest or want of interest is not a certificate and claimed the amount thereon, it was decided to be a proper case for interpleader at the instance of the association. There was the same debt to be litigated, for "while there may be two * * * written instruments outstanding, there was but one insurance effected, and but one set of premiums paid." McCormick v. Supreme Council, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 175. But see Conley v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 67 Ala. 472, cited in the preceding note.

Interested to Justify Erroneous Conduct. — A life insurance company, at the request of the assured, canceled his policies and issued them anew, changing only the names of the beneficiaries. Both sets of beneficiaries claimed the money arising from the policies. It was held that the situation was caused by the erroneous conduct of the company, and that it had such an interest in the defeat of one set of claimants as to prevent it from maintaining a bill of interpleader. *Conley v. In Jacobson v. Blackkurst, 2 John & H. 486, where a plaintiff in an interpleader suit had previously set up a claim of lien and had pleaded it in an action at law, it was held no bar to the interpleader when it was shown that he had, concurrently with filing the bill, withdrawn the plea.

"Notwithstanding what was said * * * in Atkinson v. Manks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 704, we think it is well settled, both in England and in this country, that a bill of interpleader cannot be maintained by a plaintiff who has a personal interest in the subject of the controversy." Bridesburg Mfg. Co.'s Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 276.

"In an action of interpleader the amount due from a plaintiff cannot be the subject of controversy." New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Odell, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 279; DuBois v. Union Dime Sav. Inst., 89 Hun (N. Y.) 382; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Arthur, 90 N. Y. 234; Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Corwith, 16 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 312; Van Zandt v. Van Zandt, 17 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 448; Crass v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 96 Ala. 447.

But if the property in dispute is definite and certain in character, this is sufficient to support the bill. Its exact value is wholly immaterial. Cady v. Potter, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 463.

In Mitchell v. Hayne, 2 Sim. & S. 63, and Diplock v. Hammond, 2 Sm. & G. 141, where the proceedings disclosed a contest between the plaintiff and defendants as to the amount of the debt due by the plaintiff, it was held that the bill could not be maintained. Moore v. Usher, 7 Sim. 390, and Bignold v. Audland, 11 Sim. 23, are to the same effect.

Plaintiff Denying Liability for Interest. — In Bridesburg Mfg. Co.'s Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 275, the circumstance that the plaintiff denied in his bill and the defendants affirmed in their answer that he was liable for interest on the fund in dispute was held to be fatal to the bill.

Plaintiff Claiming Commissions. — An auctioneer could not maintain a bill of interpleader where he claimed to deduct his commissions from the amount of the purchaser's deposit in his hands which was the subject of controversy. Mitchell v. Hayne, 2 Sim. & S. 63.

Plaintiff Disputing Amount of Tax. — Where trust property was taxed in two different towns, the tax in one town being upwards of double what it was in the other, it was held that the trustee could not maintain a bill of interpleader against the respective tax collectors of those towns to compel them to litigate with each other the right to tax the same property, because the trustee was interested in the question at issue to the whole amount of the difference between the two taxes. Greene v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 313.

Attorney Claiming Lien for Services. — In Wakeman v. Dickey, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 24, the plaintiffs, who were attorneys at law, had collected a demand and were sued by one person and threatened with suit by another, each claimant being insolvent and asserting sole title to the fund. The court would have sustained the plaintiff's bill of interpleader against these parties except for the fact that the plaintiffs claimed to retain out of the fund their compensation for services in collecting it, which was held alone sufficient to defeat their right to the relief asked. But see Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, where it was expressly held to be no objection to a bill of interpleader by an attorney that he claimed the bill,¹ and it is entirely immaterial at what stage of the controversy such interest in the litigation appears.²

e. PLAINTIFF NOT A WRONGDOER. — On the same principle the bill cannot be sustained where it appears that as to either of the defendants the plaintiff is a wrongdoer.³

to retain a part of the fund for his services in collecting it.

Lien of Carrier or Warehouseman. — In Crass v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 96 Ala. 447, a common carrier filed a bill of interpleader in respect of property which had been transported by it, but was held precluded from maintaining it by reason of setting up a lien upon the property for unpaid freight charges. Lawson v. Terminal Warehouse Co., 70 Hun (N. Y.) 281, is a similar case, where the plaintiff was a warehouseman.

Executor Interested as Residuary Legatee. — An executor who is also residuary legatee may maintain a bill for instructions as to the disposition of the funds in his hands, but his interest prevents him from maintaining a strict bill of interpleader for that purpose. Ladd v. Chase, 155 Mass. 417. Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619, was precisely like the foregoing case, except that the plaintiff was an administrator and distributee.

Plaintiff's Interest Extinguished by Decree. — The consequence of the rule stated in the text is that if a plaintiff prosecutes an interpleader suit to a decree requiring the defendants to interplead, he effectually extinguishes any right which he might otherwise have asserted to the fund in litigation. Supreme Council, etc. v. Bennett, 47 N. J. Eq. 39.

Plaintiff's Interest Admitted or Not Disputed. — Perhaps the assertion of a charge, lien, or claim upon the very thing or fund itself which is admitted to be valid by both the defendants will not defeat the plaintiff's bill. Crass v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 96 Ala. 447. In Bartlett v. Sultan, 23 Fed. Rep. 257, the plaintiff, a bailee, claimed a lien for storage which was held not to defeat his right to maintain a bill of interpleader so long as it appeared that neither of the defendants disputed the validity of his charge and lien.

But where the bill does not show that the defendants assent to the correctness of the charge or lien, and the prayer of the bill is that the decree for the delivery of the property to the defendant entitled thereto be conditioned upon payment of plaintiff's claim, the bill is bad on demurrer. Crass v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 96 Ala. 447.

Objection Cured by Amendment. — If one of the defendants claims a greater amount than is admitted to be due in the plaintiff's complaint, the objection that the plaintiff is interested to the amount of the excess may be removed by amending the complaint so as to admit the amount as claimed by the defendant. Orient Ins. Co. v. Reed, 81 Cal. 145.

Collateral Interest. — It is no objection to the bill that the plaintiff has an interest, in respect of other property which is not in the suit but might be litigated, that one party rather than the other should succeed in the interpleader in order to promote or establish his chance of success when a contest should arise as to such other property. Such interest may be termed an interest in the question, but not in the particular suit. Oppenheim v. Wolf, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 571.

In Salisbury Mills v. Townsend, 109 Mass. 115, a bill of interpleader was maintained to determine to which of two parties claiming to hold shares of stock in the plaintiff corporation a dividend which was then due belonged, but not to determine the question whether the corporation was liable to one of the parties who claimed to have been defrauded of his stock. It was said that the dividend which was the specific fund in controversy was not affected by the question whether the plaintiffs were so liable, but must be treated as a fund in which they had no beneficial interest, and which was claimed by the two defendants; but that the question whether the corporation by its own wrongful act had made itself liable to the owner of the stock could not be tried upon that bill. See also Sohier v. Burr, 127 Mass. 221.

f. PLAINTIFF NOT FAVORING OR COLLUDING WITH EITHER CLAIMANT. — A plaintiff in a bill of interpleader must not have lent himself in any way to further the claim of either party to the fund in controversy, or to aid one in obtaining the possession

Plaintiff Disobeying Injunction. — In Morgan v. Fillmore, 18 Abb. Pr. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 217, an order had been granted in supplementary proceedings against a debtor to examine the plaintiff relative to his indebtedness to the debtor, and enjoining him from paying or arranging the indebtedness until further order from the court in the premises. The examination disclosed an indebtedness from the plaintiff, and subsequently he was induced by the debtor's fraudulent representations to give him a note for the amount due, which had since been transferred to another person who claimed the amount and, in an interpleader suit by the plaintiff, was joined as a defendant with a receiver of the original debtor's property who claimed the same sum under the order appointing him. It was held that there was no ground for an interpleader. "If the plaintiff had obeyed the injunction," said the court, "there would have been no necessity for this action," and inasmuch as the necessity had been occasioned by the plaintiff's own wrongful act the court would not interfere.

A Plaintiff Liable for Conversion cannot interplead a party making the charge with others claiming adversely to him, under whom the plaintiff acted. American Tel., etc., Co. v. Day, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 128.

In U. S. v. Vietor, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 153, the real plaintiff had been sued by one of the defendants for detaining certain negotiable bonds which the plaintiff had received from him for inspection. It was alleged that the state of Texas also claimed the bonds, but as the plaintiff had become a wrongdoer by declining to return them to the other defendant when demanded, he was unable to maintain the suit.

A Sheriff Who Has Committed a Trespas by levying an execution upon the property of the wrong person cannot maintain a bill of interpleader against the owner and the execution creditor. Quinn v. Green, 1 Ired. Eq. (36 N. Car.) 229, where the court said: "Slingsby v. Boulton, 1 Ves. & B. 334, was a bill of interpleader by a sheriff, similar to the present, and on the motion for an injunction Lord Eldon inquired for an instance of such a bill by a sheriff, and none being cited, he declared the sheriff to be concluded from stating a case of interpleader, because in such a bill the plaintiff always admits a title against himself in all the defendants. He said, a person cannot file such a bill who is obliged to state that as to some of the defendants the plaintiff is a wrongdoer."

In Morristown First Nat. Bank v. Bininger, 26 N. J. Eq. 345, the court said: "A sheriff, where conflicting claims are made to property seized by him under execution, is never permitted to maintain an interpleader; first, because there can be no privity between him and the person claiming adversely to the judgment debtor, and secondly, because he owes no duty to such person, but if his claim is true, the sheriff, as to him, is a trespasser." Shaw v. Coster, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 339, affirming 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 405, supports the same doctrine and is the leading case in this country upon the subject. The court distinguishes Nash v. Smith, 6 Conn. 421, where a constable's bill of interpleader was sustained, by saying: "In that case neither of the defendants in the bill of interpleader claimed title to the property adversely to Silliman, against whom the process in the hands of the constable was issued. The constable therefore had no interest adverse to the claim of either party, as each had put into his hands process against the same property; the one claiming it as the individual property of Silliman, and the other as the partnership property of Silliman and Cook."

See, for instances of bills of interpleader properly filed by sheriffs, supra, II. 3. b. Privity of Title Between Claimants.

thereof to the exclusion of the other.¹ An indemnity from either claimant destroys the character of impartiality and entitles the other to a dismissal of the bill.² Where a defendant's answer is filed by the same solicitor who drew the bill, it creates a strong presumption of collusion.³

g. PLAINTIFF NOT LIABLE TO BOTH CLAIMANTS. — The office of the bill is not to protect a party against a double liability, but against a double vexation in respect of one liability.⁴

h. NO INDEPENDENT LIABILITY INCURRED TO ONE CLAIMANT — General Rule. — Interpleader will not lie if the plaintiff has incurred some personal obligation to either of the defendants, independent of the title or the right to possession, because such defendant would in that event have a claim against him which could not be settled in a litigation with the other defendant.⁵

1. Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 374, where the court said: "A person who is in possession of a fund which is claimed by two different parties, standing in the same relation to him in respect to such fund, may indeed receive an indemnity which is tendered to him by either, and may pay over the fund to the person giving such indemnity. But upon doing so his right to file a bill of interpleader is, of course, determined. And a simultaneous offer to both claimants, to pay over the fund to either who will fully indemnify him and save the expense of filing an interpleading bill, would not be considered collusion in case both neglected or refused to give him such indemnity. If both consented to give such indemnity, he could safely receive it from either. For the giving of the indemnity would relieve him from the necessity of filing a bill of interpleader, and the question of collusion would never arise."

2. Statham v. Hall, T. & R. 30. And so, it seems, does a promise to pay the debt to either party. See opinion in Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 Myl. & C. 19.

In Michener v. Lloyd, 16 N. J. Eq. 38, where the bill was dismissed on the ground of collusion, the court said that the plaintiffs "are, as the evidence shows, indemnified by * * * one of the contesting claimants to the fund. The bill is obviously filed, if not at his instance, yet in his interest and for his benefit. His answer is a mere echo to the charges and allegations of the bill."

For Essential Averments and objections at the hearing on the ground of collusion, see infra, II. 8. a. Objections at the Hearing.

4. "If the circumstances of the case show that the plaintiff is liable to both claimants, that is no case for interpleader. It is of the essence of an interpleading suit that the plaintiff shall be liable to one only of the claimants, and the relief which the court affords him is against the vexation of two proceedings on a matter which may be settled in a single suit." Crawford v. Fisher, 1 Hare 436, Cond. Ch. R. 441, quoted in Greene v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 313.

The same principle was recognized in McCormick v. Supreme Council, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 175, where it was held, however, under the facts of the case, that there was not a double liability.

Where it appeared that a trust fund created by will was lawfully taxed in one town for the amount thereof out of which issued the income by way of annuities payable, according to the direction of the will, to residents of that town, and also lawfully taxed in another town for the amount of the fund the income of which was payable to residents of that town, it was held that the trustee could not maintain an interpleader bill against the tax collectors of both towns. Greene v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 313.

5. Alabama. — Kyle v. Mary Lee Coal, etc., Co., 112 Ala. 606.

Nor does the fact that the plaintiff contends that his personal agreement was obtained by the fraud or misrepresentation of the claimant make a case of exception to this rule.¹

i. PLAINTIFF IN POSSESSION OF THE FUND. — A bill of interpleader can be filed only by one in possession or control of the fund or thing in dispute.² If he has paid or delivered it to one Waiver of Objection. — But this objection applies rather as against the plaintiff than between the defendants. If urged and established by either of the defendants it will produce a dismissal of the bill, but it loses much of its force where the defendants, without objection, consent to interplead and permit a decree discharging the plaintiff. Whitney v. Cowan, 55 Miss. 626.

Illustrations. — A deposited a quantity of iron with B & Co., who were wharfingers, and afterwards directed them to deliver it to C. The latter applied to B & Co. to know the particulars of the iron held by them on his account; and B & Co. then wrote a letter to C, saying that in compliance with his request they annexed a note of the landing-weights of the iron transferred into his name by, and now held by, them (B & Co.) at his (C's) disposal. B & Co. subsequently received notice from D that the iron belonged to him, and that it had been deposited with A as an agent for sale, and that he had, without authority, pledged it to C. B & Co. then filed a bill of interpleader against C and D. It was held on demurrer that after B & Co.'s letter to C they could not maintain a bill of interpleader against him. Lord Cottenham remarked that "if what has taken place amounts to an independent contract [between the wharfingers and the assignee of the original depositor], it is one which cannot be decided between the parties in this suit." Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 Myl. & C. 1. The case is cited with approval in Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 47, where an interpleader complaint was dismissed on the ground of an independent liability incurred by the plaintiff to one of the defendants.

A garnishee who has answered the process by admitting indebtedness and suffered judgment cannot maintain a bill of interpleader in respect of the debt, even though he may have thus incurred liability under a mistake. Mitchell v. Northwestern Mfg., etc., Co., 26 Ill. App. 295.

Liability Must Be Independent. — In Wells v. Miner, 25 Fed. Rep. 533, a party deposited a check in a bank and took a certificate of deposit payable to himself or order on return of the certificate properly indorsed. The indorsee of this certificate before maturity claimed the money, and the maker of the check asserted title to the certificate by reason of the fact that the check was obtained from him by fraud. It was held that the bank was a mere stakeholder, and under no liability independent of the certificate, and that it might properly cause the claimants to interplead.

Promise Without Consideration. — In Drake v. Woodford, (Supreme Ct.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 512, the court held that there was a proper case for interpleader although the plaintiff had promised one of the defendants to pay the fund to him, it appearing that the promise was without consideration.

j. PLAINTIFF IGNORANT OF CLAIMANTS' RIGHTS — CLAIMANTS' RIGHTS UNCERTAIN. — A bill of interpleader will lie only where the plaintiff standing in the position of a stakeholder is ignorant of the rights of the different claimants,² or where there is some doubt, at least, as to which of them is entitled to the fund, so that he cannot safely pay it to either.³

Maberry, 1 Dev. Eq. (16 N. Car.) 169, where the court said: "In such bills the equity of the plaintiff is to be indemnified in the delivery of property, of which he is in possession, and to which he claims no right. The plaintiff not having the possession is unable to do the only act for which an indemnity is given." See also, as illustrating the same principle, Sprague v. West, 127 Mass. 471; Hechmer v. Gilligan, 28 W. Va. 750; Hathaway v. Foy, 40 Mo. 540. The rule seems to have been ignored in Webster v. Hall, 60 N. H. 7.

Bill by Administrator Against Distributees in Possession. — Where an administrator has never reduced the assets into possession, but they are in possession of some of the distributees who claim adversely to him, a bill by him against the distributees, praying that they may interplead, is improper. Martin v. Maberry, 1 Dev. Eq. (16 N. Car.) 169.

1. Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 365. Contra, in Nash v. Smith, 6 Conn. 421, it was held that if the plaintiff has paid over the money to one of the defendants under a claim of right, this will not preclude him from sustaining the bill.

2. A bill to compel parties claiming a particular fund to interplead and settle the question of right to the fund between themselves will not lie where the plaintiff is fully advised of the grounds of their claims, as well as the nature and extent of his liability to each, for the reason, as stated in Morgan v. Fillmore, 18 Abb. Pr. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 217, that "being thus in possession of the requisite knowledge, it devolved upon himself to determine to which of the claimants he would pay." Trigg v. Hitz, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 436; Shaw v. Coster, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 339; Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Corwith, 16 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 312; Mohawk, etc., R. Co. v. Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 43; Parker v. Barker, 42 N. H. 78; Hechmer v. Gilligan, 28 W. Va. 750.

In Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 51, it was held that under the facts of the case the plaintiff could have no such reasonable doubt as to the law arising therefrom as to justify a resort to a bill of interpleader.

Thus a vendee of goods cannot allege ignorance of a fact about which the law does not permit him to be ignorant, viz., the right of the vendor to recover the purchase money, in order to give apparent jurisdiction in an action of interpleader. Trigg v. Hitz, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 436.

Rhode Island. — Koppinger v. O'Donnell, 16 R. I. 417.

Reasonable Doubt — Conflicting Decisions Creating Doubt. — According to the old rule, the stakeholder was entitled to be removed beyond the shadow of risk in paying over the money where antagonists' rights were asserted. That view was sustained by the opinion of the court in Atkinson v. Mauks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 705, where the court said in substance that where a party had for-

k. PLAINTIFF WITHOUT LACHES — INTERPLEADER AFTER JUDGMENT. — It is essential that the plaintiff shall make known his condition as a stakeholder by bringing suit within a reasonable time after being advised of the double claim against the fund.¹

After Judgment at Law. — It is partly upon the foregoing principle that, in a bill of interpleader, the right of either defendant to the fund should not have been previously determined by a judgment at law against the plaintiff.²

bidden a stakeholder to pay over money to another, and threatened him with a suit, the stakeholder was not bound to exercise any judgment upon the subject. But "the rule now is that a reasonable doubt must exist in order to justify the bringing of an action of interpleader, and that any doubt is not sufficient, as was said in the case" last cited. Per Van Brunt, P. J., in Nassau Bank v. Yandes, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 59.

In Dorn v. Fox, 61 N. Y. 264, the court said: "The rule requiring that in actions of interpleader the plaintiffs should be in doubt as to which of the claimants is in the right must be construed in a reasonable manner. It of course excludes all cases where the rights of parties are clearly settled. On the other hand, so long as a principle is still under discussion, * * * it would seem fair to hold that there was sufficient doubt and hazard to justify the protection which is afforded by the beneficent action of interpleader." The concluding sentence of the foregoing quotation was cited with approval in Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 648, where conflicting decisions of the courts were held to create a doubt sufficient to sustain an action of interpleader, the court declaring furthermore that "if the doubt rests upon a question of fact that is at all serious, it is obvious that the debtor cannot safely decide it for himself, because it might be decided the other way upon an actual trial."

It cannot be contended that one of the defendants was so clearly entitled to the fund that the plaintiff could not, in legal contemplation, be in doubt, where the trial court decided against the claim of the defendant, even though on appeal that decision was reversed. Mercantile Safe Deposit Co. v. Huntington, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 465. See, for other cases of reasonable doubt, Fitch v. Brower, 42 N. J. Eq. 300; Schell v. Lowe, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 43.

Kuhn*, 59 Miss. 186, where the court said: "It is well settled, both by reason and authority, that one who asks the interposition of a court of equity to compel others, claiming property in his hands, to interplead, must do so before putting them to the test of trials at law. Yarborough v. Thompson, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 291; Haseltine v. Brickey, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 116; Cornish v. Tanner, 1 Y. & J. 333. The remedy by interpleader is afforded to protect the party from the annoyance and hazard of two or more actions touching the same property or demand; but one who, with a knowledge of all the facts, neglects to avail himself of the relief, or elects to take the chances for success in the actions at law, ought to submit to the consequences of defeat. To permit an unsuccessful defendant to compel the successful plaintiffs to interplead, is to increase instead of to diminish the number of suits; to put upon the shoulders of others the burden which he asks may be taken from his own." See, for an exception to the rule, Lozier v. Van Saun, 3 N. J. Eq. 325.

After Decree of Surrogate Court. — Where an executor allows a decree of the Surrogate Court to be entered, directing the payment of a fund in the executor's hands and awarding execution, without advising the court of the fact that there are adverse claims, so that they may be adjusted by a proper order, he cannot maintain a bill of

4. Parties to the Bill.—The Plaintiff is, of course, the debtor or person in possession of the fund or other thing in dispute.¹

The Defendants are the parties who prefer the claims and are supposed to have the capacity of enforcing them.²

5. Frame of the Bill—a. THE ESSENTIAL AVERTMENTS. — The bill must show that there are proper persons in esse capable of interpleading and setting up opposite claims.³ The bill must interpleader against the claimants. Baker v. Brown, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 627.

Fraud or Accident.—But any fact which clearly proves it to be against conscience to execute a judgment at law, and of which the injured party could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself, but was prevented from doing so by fraud or accident unmixed with fault on his part, may authorize a court of equity to interfere. Cheever v. Hodgson, 9 Mo. App. 565.

1. Bill by Officer of Corporation.—The treasurer of an incorporated benefit association cannot file a bill of interpleader to have the several claimants of a death benefit set up their respective claims; in such a case the bill can be filed only by the corporation itself. Hechmer v. Gilligan, 28 W. Va. 750.

Bill by Attorney of Plaintiff.—In Provident Sav. Ins. v. White, 115 Mass. 112, it appeared that the bill was not filed by the plaintiff corporation for its protection, but by its attorney of record, at the expense and for the benefit of one of the two persons claiming the fund after the other had recovered judgment in an action at law brought by him against this plaintiff, in defense of which the same attorney had pleaded the right of the first. The court held that to maintain a bill of interpleader under such circumstances would contravene the general principles of equity, as well as the twenty-seventh rule in chancery in that court. 104 Mass. 573.

2. Conley v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 67 Ala. 472; McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 592.

One Who Makes No Claim and has no interest is not a proper defendant. Ketcham v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 515.

Persons Without Direct Interest.—In a bill of interpleader by the maker of a note to determine whether he shall pay it to one or the other of the defendants, a person from whom one of the defendants purchased the note is not a necessary party, although the other defendant claims that he had no title to the note which was transferred. Gill v. Cook, 42 Vt. 140.

Where there is a fund due to an insolvent bank, and the holder, a bank, brings an interpleader suit against the respective claimants, the proper defendants to such suit are the receiver of the insolvent bank, the attaching creditors, and the sheriff who has attached for them, but not the bill-holders or check-holders of such bank, because these latter have no lien upon the fund either as assignees in equity or otherwise. Finlay v. American Exch. Bank, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 468.

On Bill by Mortgagor.—A mortgagor brought a bill of interpleader alleging that one of the defendants demanded the money under a power of attorney executed by the mortgagee, and that the mortgagee was insane when she executed the power of attorney, for which reason the other defendant, the mortgagee's daughter, had forbidden payment of the money to the attorney. The court held that even if the bill could be maintained at all, which point was left undecided, the mortgagee herself was a necessary party. Blake v. Garwood, 42 N. J. Eq. 276.

Where an Injunction Is Prayed for, one who would not be a necessary party for the purpose of interpleading may be a proper party in order to make an order of injunction effective. Oil Run Petroleum Co. v. Gale, 6 W. Va. 525.

Objections on Appeal.—The defendants to a bill of interpleader will not be permitted to object on appeal that a third person was not made a defendant also, where the want of such a party could not in any manner affect their rights. Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281.

3. Where a bill was brought founded on a rumor that there was issue by a person, which issue was suggested to be entitled to the estate in question, and praying that if there was any such person he might interplead with the defendant, the bill was held to be of novel impression and fatally defective. Metcalf v. Hervey, 1 Ves. 248.

1. Stone v. Reed, 152 Mass. 179, an action by a treasurer of a corporation against the corporators and a creditor of the corporation to compel them to interplead as to the ownership of certain bonds. In sustaining a demurrer the court said: "Assuming that if he held the bonds as a stakeholder he would have a right to require the defendants to interplead, as in Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231, the bill must show what his relation to the bonds is, and that it is such as to entitle him to the relief. The only direct allegation in that respect is 'that said bonds came into the hands of this plaintiff.' This is consistent with a tortious possession, or with a possession as bailee or agent of one of the parties defendant. The absence of a direct allegation of the character of the plaintiff's possession of the bonds might be cured if there were allegations in the bill which afforded an inference that his possession was that of a stakeholder, or such as to entitle him to maintain a bill of interpleader. Upon reference to the allegations of the bill, it appears that no inference can be drawn from them in regard to the character of the plaintiff's possession of the bonds, unless one which shows that he has no title to the relief sought."

2. Conley v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 67 Ala. 472; Snodgrass v. Butler, 54 Miss. 45; McEwen v. Troost, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 186; National Bank v. Augusta Cotton, etc., Co., 99 Ga. 286. See also Warnock v. Harlow, 96 Cal. 298; Oil Run Petroleum Co. v. Gale, 6 W. Va. 525.

Specific Statement. — The claims of the defendants should be specifically set forth so that they may appear to be of the same nature and character, and the fit subject of a bill of interpleader. Story, Eq. Pl., § 293; Mohawk, etc., R. Co. v. Clute, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 384; Varrian v. Berrien, 42 N. J. Eq. 1, where the bill was dismissed on motion because, although it stated that one of the defendants claimed an interest in the fund, it did not state what that interest was, nor how it was obtained, whether by assignment or otherwise.

Must Show a Claim. — The bill must show that each of the defendants made a claim to the debt or duty concerning which the plaintiff desires to be relieved. Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619; Starling v. Brown, 7 Bush (Ky.) 164.

Averment on Information. — An allegation that the plaintiff is "informed" of a certain claim of right by one of the defendants, but that the plaintiff "is uncertain as to this point," is fatally defective. State Ins. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 82.

Privity of Claims. — The bill must show that all the adverse titles or claims to the thing or debt are dependent on or derived from a common source. Kyle v. Mary Lee Coal, etc., Co., 112 Ala. 606.

Degree of Certainty. — The plaintiff "only sets out the claim as exhibited or made to him, and cannot be supposed to do it with as much accuracy as the claimants themselves would do. It is enough for him to satisfy the court that there are opposing claims, against which he is in equity entitled to protection until they are settled, so that he can pay with safety." Lozier v. Van Saun, 3 N. J. Eq. 329.

Remedy for Uncertainty in Allegations. — Under the Codes, if the allegation in the complaint as to the nature of the title and claim of a defendant is not sufficiently full and clear, the remedy for the defect is by a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain by amendment. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Arthur, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 147; Van Zandt v. Van Zandt, 17 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 448. See also article DEFINITENESS AND CERTAINTY IN PLEADINGS, vol. 6, p. 246. Demurrer seems not to be the proper remedy. Van Zandt v. Van Zandt, 17 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 448.

Too Much Precision in Allegations. — In Shaw v. Coster, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 339, Chancellor Walworth says that if a bill states a case which shows that one defendant is entitled to the duty, and the other is not, both may demur; the one because the plaintiff has a defense at law against him, the other because the plaintiff has no legal or equitable defense against him. Therefore he and admit, or at least not deny, title in either of the claimants;¹ and show that the plaintiff is ignorant of the rights of the parties who are called upon to interplead,² or that there is some doubt, in point of law or fact, to which claimant the debt or duty belongs,³ and that the plaintiff disclaims any personal interest in the thing in controversy⁴ by stating his own rights so as to negative any warns plaintiffs in bills of this kind of the danger of stating affirmatively the facts on which the legal rights of the defendants depend, since the foundation of the relief asked is that the plaintiff, from ignorance of the rights and from doubts of the facts, is unable to ascertain to which of the defendants he is to account. To the same point see Briant v. Reed, 14 N. J. Eq. 271. And in Barker v. Swain, 4 Jones Eq. (57 N. Car.) 220, there were affirmative statements in the bill sufficient to show that in truth neither of the defendants had a right to the fund, and the bill was dismissed on demurrer. See also Mohawk, etc., R. Co. v. Clute, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 384; Blake v. Garwood, 42 N. J. Eq. 276. In Bell v. Hunt, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 391, the plaintiff's counsel was evidently cognizant of the rule of pleading in this behalf, and his bill was so framed as to withstand a demurrer.

Prayer for Injunction. — The bill also generally prays an injunction to restrain the proceedings of the claimants, or either of them, at law until the right is determined, ⁴ in which case there must be a Sufficiency of Averment. — There need not be a direct affirmative and positive assertion in the bill that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject-matter of litigation. It is sufficient that he states his own position in such a way as necessarily to negative any interest of his own. State Ins. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 82.

Summary Statement of Essential Averments. — "The nature of the allegations in every bill of interpleader are: 1st, that two or more persons have preferred a claim against the complainant; 2d, that they claim the same thing; 3d, that the complainant has no beneficial interest in the thing claimed; and 4th, that he cannot determine, without hazard to himself, to which of the defendants the thing of right belongs. Where Land Is the Subject of Controversy, the better practice is that the plaintiff should make out conveyances duly executed, purporting to convey the premises according to the several claims alleged in the bill, and should aver the preparation and execution of them, and his readiness and an offer to deliver the same in court for the use of such of the grantors named therein as may be adjudged entitled. Farley v. Blood, 30 N. H. 360.

3. Story Eq. Pl., § 297.

The plaintiff cannot claim affirmative relief against any of the claimant defendants, but can only ask leave of the court to pay the money or deliver the property to the one to whom it rightfully belongs, in order that he may thereafter be protected against the claims of all. *St. Louis L. The Common Form of the Prayer is given in Van Heythuysen's Equity Draftsman, p. 209, in a case of rent. It prays "that they [the defendants] may severally set forth and discover what right or title they and each of them claim or have in and to the said moiety of the said premises; and how they and each of them derive and make out the same, and that they may set forth to which of them the said rent and arrears of rent doth or do of right belong, or is or are payable, or ought to be paid, and may interplead and settle, and adjust their said demands between themselves. Your orator being ready and distinct prayer for the process of injunction.¹

No Other Specific Relief. — In a bill of interpleader, strictly so called, the plaintiff should seek no relief other than as above mentioned against either of the defendants.²

For General Relief. — The prudent pleader should not omit the prayer for general relief.³

c. VERIFICATION. — Where the bill prays for an injunction it should conform to the general rule which requires injunction bills to be verified.⁴

d. AFFIDAVIT DENYING COLLUSION. — In bills of interpleader an affidavit is always required of the plaintiff⁵ that he does not collude with either of the defendants,⁶ and if the bill is filed by willing, and hereby offering to pay the said rent and arrears of rent to such of the said confederates, to whom the same shall appear to belong, being indemnified. And that your orator may be at liberty to bring the same into this honorable court, which your orator doth hereby offer to do, for the benefit of such of the several parties who shall appear to be entitled thereto. And that the said several defendants, and each and every of them, may be restrained by the injunction of this honorable court from all proceedings at law against your orator for the said rent and arrears of rent and for further relief, etc."

Averment in the Bill. — In Nofsinger v. Reynolds, 52 Ind. 218, the court said: "We do not find that it was necessary in chancery to deny in the bill the existence of collusion." But if the an officer on behalf of the company, he must annex a like affidavit, and add that to the best of his knowledge and belief the company does not collude with the defendant.¹

6. Amendment of Bill. — If the bill does not allege all the facts requisite to sustain it as a bill of interpleader, the defect may be cured by amendment;² and the omission of an offer to bring the fund into court,³ or failure to annex an affidavit negating collusion,⁴ may be rectified in like manner.

7. Defendant's Pleadings, and Proceedings Before Hearing —

a. DEMURRER OR MOTION TO DISMISS — Grounds of Demurrer. — If it appears upon the face of the bill that the case is not proper for interpleader, demurrer will lie;⁵ and the absence of an offer bill itself is verified and contains a sufficient averment of no collusion, it would seem to be unnecessary to annex a separate affidavit. It appears that such a practice was adopted by the pleader, and without adverse criticism, in Curtis v. Williams, 35 Ill. App. 518; Fahie v. Lindsay, 8 Oregon 474.

Amplified Statement of Rule. — If the plaintiff states a case in his bill which shows that one of the defendants is entitled to the debt or duty, both defendants may demur; the one upon the ground that the plaintiff has a perfect defense at law against his claim, and the other on the ground that the plaintiff has neither a legal nor an equitable defense to his claim, and has therefore no right to call upon him to interplead with a third person who claims without right. Shaw v. Clark, 46 Vt. 22, where the defendant had incurred an independent liability to one of the defendants.

In Code Practice the objection may be taken by demurrer for want of sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. U. S. Trust Co. v. Wiley, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 477; Baker v. Brown, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 627; Cromwell v. American L. & T. Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 149, where the plaintiff incurred an independent liability to one of the defendants; Bassett v. Leslie, 123 N. Y. 396, affirming (Supreme Ct.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 483, where one of the defendants was clearly entitled to the debt to the ex-to bring the fund into court,¹ or the omission to annex to the bill an affidavit negating collusion,² are also grounds of demurrer.

Motion to Dismiss. — In some jurisdictions motions to dismiss for want of equity perform the same office as demurrers.³

b. PLEA. — Matter in bar of the suit may properly be set up by plea.⁴

c. ANSWER. — The defendant may by answer deny the allegations in the bill, or may set up distinct facts in bar of the suit.⁵

clusion of the other; Morgan v. Fillmore, 18 Abb. Pr. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 217, where the plaintiff was fully advised as to his liability to the different claimants; McDonald v. Allen, 37 Wis., 108, where it appeared that there was an adequate remedy at law.

Motion to Make More Specific. — If the allegations are merely deficient in certainty or fullness, the defendant, instead of demurring, should move that the plaintiff be required to make them more definite and certain by amendment. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Arthur, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 147; Van Zandt v. Van Zandt, 17 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 448. See also article DEFINITENESS AND CERTAINTY IN PLEADINGS, vol. 6, p. 246.

Demurrer by One, Answer by Another. — If, upon the demurrer of either defendant, it appears that neither of the defendants has any right to the fund, the bill must be dismissed, although another defendant answers. Barker v. Swain, 4 Jones Eq. (57 N. Car.) 220.

Demurrer Too Broad. — Where a demurrer to the whole bill points out a demurrable defect, it must be overruled if the bill is good as respects several of the other defendants. The demurrer should be confined to the objectionable part of the bill. State Ins. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 82. See also Hatfield v. McWhorter, 40 Ga. 269.

Leave to Amend May Be Given on Sustaining a Demurrer. — Bassett v. Leslie, (Supreme Ct.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 483; Baker v. Brown, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 627. See also *Williams v. Upon Demurrer Overruled a pro confesso cannot be taken against the defendant, and a decree to interplead be rendered, until he has had an opportunity to answer. Crass v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 96 Ala. 447.

Retaining Bill for Other Relief. — A general demurrer to the whole bill will be overruled, although the bill may not be sufficient as a pure bill of interpleader, where the bill shows that the plaintiff is entitled to other equitable relief. Hatfield v. McWhorter, 40 Ga. 269. See infra, II. 9. Retaining the Bill for Other Relief.

In Nofsinger v. Reynolds, 52 Ind. 218, the court said: "As a demurrer under the code can be sustained for specified causes only, and as the want of verification of a pleading is not one of them, we conclude that the objection of want of affidavit in such case [denying conclusion] is not cause of demurrer."

d. CROSS-BILL. — In a strict interpleader suit a cross-bill has no legitimate place, as a defendant is not entitled to any affirmative relief against the plaintiff.¹

e. REPLICATION AND PREPARING CAUSE FOR HEARING. — Where the defendants or either of them deny the allegations in the bill, or set up distinct facts in bar thereof, the plaintiff must file a replication,² give rules to produce witnesses, and close the proofs in the usual manner before the cause is heard.³ But if the defendants admit the facts on which the right to file the bill of interpleader rests, and set up no defense which requires the taking of testimony on either side, it seems to be sufficient for the plaintiff to file a replication to the answers, and then to set down the cause for hearing without waiting until the cause is ripe for a decision as between the defendants.⁴

f. BRINGING THE MONEY INTO COURT. — If the fund is not brought into court upon filing the bill the court may order the plaintiff to bring it in upon the application of either of the

J. Eq. 858; Richards v. Salter, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 445; Ketcham v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 520.

"The mere allegations of a bill, however strong, do not authorize a decree that the parties interplead. They may deny in their answers (and sustain by proof their denial) every averment upon which the bill rests for relief as a bill of interpleader." Crass v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 96 Ala. 447.

Where the Bill is Demurrable, if the defendant answers instead of demurring and the bill is finally dismissed, he will recover only such costs as he would have been entitled to on a demurrer sustained. Quinn v. Patton, 2 Ired. Eq. (37 N. Car.) 48; Shaw v. Coster, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 339.

Cannot Ask Specific Relief. — If an answer prays for specific relief against the plaintiff that part of it will be stricken out on motion. Williams v. Matthews, 47 N. J. Eq. 196, citing Wakeman v. Kingsland, 46 N. J. Eq. 113.

In Atkinson v. Manks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 696, the cause was brought to a hearing on a bill and answer only, but whether this was done by consent of parties or otherwise does not appear.

Waiver of Irregularity. — If no replication is filed, but the parties proceed to a hearing on the merits without objection, the irregularity is waived. Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231. See also article HEARING, vol. 10, p. 8.

In Jones v. Gilham, Cooper 49, the plaintiff filed a replication to the answers and served subpoenas to rejoin, according to the English practice as stated in Dick, 291, note.

It also appears from the English reports that the testimony is sometimes taken as to the rights of the defendants between themselves, previous to a decree to interplead. Brymer v. Buchanan, 1 Cox 425; Bolton v. Williams, 4 Bro. C. C. 297.

"It is admissible that the whole controversy between the parties to the action, including as well the issues between the plaintiff and the defendants as the issues between the defendants, be submitted upon one trial." Cullen v. Dawson, 24 Minn. 66.

defendants.¹ The court may refuse to allow the plaintiff to proceed until this is done,² and will not ordinarily act upon a prayer for injunction until the money is brought in, or at least bond and security given for its ultimate payment according to the decree.³

8. Hearing and Decree on the Bill—a. OBJECTIONS AT THE HEARING.—A defendant may object at the hearing, before a decree of interpleader, that the case is not one proper for requiring the defendants to interplead, even though the objection were not taken in the pleadings or other prior proceedings.⁴ But it

2. Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619.

3. Biggs v. Kouns, 7 Dana (Ky.) 405.

4. Interest of Plaintiff, Collusion, etc.—In Wing v. Spaulding, 64 Vt. 83, the court said: "It is claimed that the objection of interest in the orator cannot be made now, but should have been made at an earlier stage of the case, before answer and trial on the merits. But in the absence of a decree of interpleader we think the objection can be taken at the hearing. How it would be if such a decree had been made, we have no occasion to determine. * * * In Toulmin v. Reid, 14 Beav. 499, 21 L. J. N. S. Ch. 391, Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, held that it is open to a defendant in an interpleader suit to show at the hearing that the case is not one proper for requiring the defendants to interplead, and that he is not precluded by not objecting by demurrer nor on motion to pay the money into court. He says that otherwise, assuming the case to be one not proper for a bill of interpleader the orator would have nothing to do but to suppress part of the facts, or to misstate them in such a way that the bill would not be demurrable. It is true that the bill in that case was not dismissed, but it was because no one asked to have it dismissed. Statham v. Hall, T. & R. 30, was a bill to compel the defendants to interplead in respect of a bond that had been deposited with the plaintiff for safe keeping. On the part of some of the defendants evidence was offered that plaintiff retained the bond under an indemnity from the other defendants. It was objected by the plaintiff that the evidence was not admissible, and in support of the objection it was argued that no evidence could be admitted on a bill of this description to affect the plaintiff, and the question of indemnity was not in issue between the parties. But the evidence was admitted as forming a material feature of the case, and the case was afterwards argued on the merits and the bill dismissed with costs. In Yates v. Tisdale, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 71, the bill was answered, and instead of taking the usual course of practice applicable to bills of interpleader, replications were filed and proofs taken, and the case fully heard on the merits. The vice-chancellor held it allowable practice to object at the hearing to the propriety of filing the bill, and considered and adjudged that question. In Mount Holly, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Ferree, 17 N. J. Eq. 117, no demurrer was filed and the answers were addressed solely to the question of right raised by the bill. No objection was made as to the propriety of the remedy. Evidence was taken and the question elaborately discussed on its merits. On final hearing objection was first made to the form of the remedy. Supposing that the failure to file a demurrer and the acquiescence of the defendants had cured the difficulty, and that the rights of all parties could be finally determined by the decree, the chancellor prepared an opinion on the merits, holding the right to be clearly with the defendant Ferree, but on reflection he became satisfied that no final decree of that character could be made, and that it was not a case for interpleader at all, because the evidence afforded strong ground for presuming that there was collusion between the complainant and one of the defendants; and for that reason the bill was dismissed with costs." See also, as to objection for collusion, Michener v. Lloyd, 16 N. J. Eq. 38.

After Decree of Interpleader.—In Fahie v. Lindsay, 8 Oregon 474, it was averred in a sworn complaint that there was no collusion between the plaintiff and either of the defendants, and it was cannot be objected for the first time at the hearing that the bill is not accompanied by an affidavit negating collusion,¹ or that the bill contained no offer to bring the fund into court,² or that no replication was filed to the defendant's answer.³

b. DECREE—Dismissal of Plaintiff.—At the hearing if the defendants agree that the bill is properly filed,⁴ or the fact appears by the pleadings and proofs, the usual decree is that upon bringing the money or other thing into court, the plaintiff be dismissed with costs⁵ and that the defendant interplead.⁶ That settles the case so far as the plaintiff is concerned,⁷ and held that after an order requiring the defendants to interplead evidence to prove collusion could not be received.

1. Biggs v. Kouns, 7 Dana (Ky.) 405; Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231.

It was said in Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, that if the defendants submit to answer the bill without objecting that the plaintiff has not negated collusion by affidavit annexed to his bill, neither of them can at the hearing or on error object that it was irregularly exhibited; that "as the affidavit was intended for their benefit, and to prevent injury or inconvenience to the defendant who has the superior right, they may dispense with it, and their answers amount to an implied waiver."

No Affirmative Relief can be given to the plaintiff in a strict bill of interpleader. Bedell v. Hoffman, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 199; Illingworth v. Rowe, 52 N. J. Eq. 360; Newhall v. Kastens, 70 Ill. 156; Wakeman v. Kingsland, 46 N. J. Eq. 113.

It is error, however, to dismiss the bill, even without prejudice, where it shows that the plaintiff has a right to the ordinary decree rendered upon a bill which is properly filed. Alley v. Adams County, 76 Ill. 101.

Answer of One Defendant as Evidence Against the Other.—See Balchen v. Crawford, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 380;

Separate Decree of Interpleader.—Although it is better practice to enter a separate decree or order of interpleader, it is sufficient if the decree actually entered amounts to the same thing. People's Sav. Bank v. Look, 95 Mich. 7.

The Decree to Interplead Is Interlocutory and therefore subject to revision and correction, and it may, before final decree, be reviewed as having been improvidently and prematurely passed. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 604. See also article DECREES, vol. 5, p. 946.

Delay and Collusion.—Where one of the defendants answers, disclaiming interest, any improper delay in preparing the cause for hearing will authorize the other defendant who has answered to apply for the money if there is any fraudulent purpose or collusion. Michigan, etc., Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25, citing Hyde v. Warren, 19 Ves. Jr. 322.

Pilcher*, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 299, holding, however, that the plaintiff is not wholly out of the case until he has rendered the debt, duty, or other thing required of him as a condition precedent to his discharge. See also Horton v. Baptist Church, etc., 34 Vt. 309.

After the plaintiff has been dismissed and defendants ordered to interplead, the plaintiff is altogether out of the suit and cannot thereafter participate in the litigation between the defendants, nor is usually accomplished in England by motion.¹

If the Bill Is Dismissed, it should be without prejudice to the rights of the plaintiff in any future litigation with either of the defendants,² and the court does not decide the right to the fund in dispute.³

Decree Between Defendants. — If the case between the defendants is ripe for a decision, the court will decide it and make a final decree settling the conflicting claims of the defendants at once.⁴

Directing Action, Issue, or Reference. — If the case is not ripe for decision, the court upon dismissing the plaintiff will direct an action or an issue or a reference to a master, as may be best suited to the nature of the case,⁵ or the court object to any ruling or decision made in the action affecting alone their rights as between themselves. St. Louis L. Ins. Co. v. Alliance Mut. L. Ins. Co., 23 Minn. 7.

He cannot take part in the argument of the questions involved between the defendants. Houghton v. Kendall, 7 Allen (Mass.) 72; Provident Sav. Inst. v. White, 115 Mass. 112; Andrews v. Halliday, 63 Ga. 263.

Before the Hearing. — In Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 435, it was held that on a bill of interpleader under the former chancery practice, or an action of interpleader under the code practice, the plaintiff was not entitled on motion to an order granting the relief prayed for until the time to answer had expired and all the defendants had been defaulted. *Aymer v. may find the facts for itself.¹

9. Retaining the Bill for Other Relief, or the Same Relief on Other Grounds. — Where the bill is defective as a strict bill of interpleader it may be retained, and under the prayer for general relief² the court may grant the proper equitable relief to which the allegations of the bill show that the plaintiff is entitled.³ Thus Tennessee. — State Ins. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 100.

Vermont. — Brattleboro First Nat. Bank v. West River R. Co., 46 Vt. 633.

In Bleeker v. Graham, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 647, an action at law already commenced against the plaintiff by one of the defendants was allowed to proceed, but to be defended by the other defendant, and judgment not to be rendered on the verdict, nor execution issued until the further hearing of the cause in chancery upon the postea.

"Or the court may leave it to the defendants to prepare the case between them as they may be advised, which would be the effect of a general order to interplead." State Ins. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 100.

In Farley v. Blood, 30 N. H. 354, the questions of fact were referred to a master, but the court said: "Perhaps in this state, if an action be not ordered and there be facts in dispute, it may be the right of either party to have an issue framed, embracing the merits of the case, and to have it sent to the court below for trial by the jury, if application be seasonably made to the court for that purpose." Citing Marston v. Brackett, 9 N. H. 336; Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 311; Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573.

Issues to the Jury. — Under the Codes the general rule is that interpleader suits are of exclusive equitable cognizance, and if issues of fact are submitted to a jury, the verdict thereon is merely advisory to the court as in ordinary chancery practice. Ketcham v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 515.

A jury trial is not a matter of right unless by statutory or constitutional provision. Grand Lodge, etc., v. Elsner, 26 Mo. App. 108.

Cross-Complaint and Answer. — In Nofsinger v. Reynolds, 52 Ind. 218, and Ketcham v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 521, the issues between the defendants were made by a cross-complaint and answer thereto, and submitted to a jury.

Proceeding by Bill or by Action. — In City Bank v. Bangs, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 570, the defendants admitted that the case was proper for an interpleader, and one of them asked that this be done by filing a bill for that purpose, and that he be the plaintiff therein, but the court said: "In this stage of the suit an issue or a reference will, in general, be the most cheap and efficacious mode of settling the controversy between the defendants, and the expense of an action at law or of an original bill, filed under the direction of this court, can seldom be necessary." See also Goddard v. Leech, Wright (Ohio) 476.

In Balchen v. Crawford, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 380, the parties were directed to interplead in the court of chancery and to proceed by bill, which the court thought to be more suitable to the circumstances.

On a Reference to a Master the court will give the defendants the benefit of a discovery as against each other, if they, or either of them, desire it. City Bank v. Bangs, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 570.

Accounting by Successful Defendant. — Defendants who fail in establishing any right to the fund are not entitled to an account from the defendant whose claims are allowed, of the amount and origin of those claims. Spring v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 268.

1. Goddard v. Leech, Wright (Ohio) 476, where, however, the court directed a reference to a master, which was said to be the most usual course and the most convenient.

Eq. 267, where the bill had been pending for several years, and the court was loath to dismiss the bill and leave the parties "with nothing settled but liability for costs, to commence litigation anew;" Martin v. Maberry, 1 Dev. Eq. (16 N. Car.) 171, where the plaintiff had an equity "growing out of the motion to dismiss the bill at this such a bill may be treated as a bill in the nature of interpleader¹ where its allegations make a case appropriate to that remedy.²

10. Final Decree Between Defendants. — Where the court has properly acquired jurisdiction of the cause as between the defendants, it is not bound to award the fund or other thing in dispute wholly to him who has the legal title, but may so shape its decree as to do complete equity between the parties.³

11. Costs — a. ON SUSTAINING THE BILL — Plaintiff Proceeding in Good Faith. — If the plaintiff has properly brought the suit and his conduct has been fair, upon dismissing him his costs up to that time will ordinarily be awarded to him out of the funds in his late period after the defendant has submitted to the jurisdiction of the court;" Leddel v. Starr, 20 N. J. Eq. 274, where a bill by an executor was retained for the purpose of settling his account, all the parties interested being before the court; Ladd v. Chase, 155 Mass. 417, and Stevens v. Warren, 101 Mass. 564, where the court took jurisdiction as of a bill by an administrator seeking the instruction and protection of the court. But it was not retained as against a demurrer where it was not filed for the substantial purpose of obtaining the aid and direction of the court. Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619.

In Saratoga County v. Deyoe, 77 N. Y. 219, the court said: "It may not be a case of interpleader strictly, or which meets all the definitions of a bill of peace, nor a case which could be maintained solely as one for the cancellation of written instruments, but it combines to a greater or less extent, elements of jurisdiction in each of these cases, and the action, we think, may be sustained without a violation of principle, and without interfering with the substantial rights of the defendants."

In Finlay v. American Exch. Bank, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 468, the court said: "This bill has not all the essential features of a bill of interpleader, for the amount of the fund is not ascertained with sufficient certainty to enable it now to be brought into court, and allow the plaintiff to be discharged from the further proceedings in the suit. But with the understanding which was entered into in that respect on the trial, the amount of the fund can be hereafter settled, and the bill is thus so far in the nature of an interpleader suit that the court can take jurisdiction of the case and settle the equities between all of the parties."

In Hatfield v. McWhorter, 40 Ga. 269, the court said: "Although the complainant cannot maintain his bill as a bill of interpleader, yet, as there are other grounds for equitable relief in regard to the partnership claims, in the adjustment of which a court of equity can afford more adequate relief than a court of law, and that court having first taken jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy between the parties, it will be allowed to retain it for the purpose of doing full and complete justice between them, and a general demurrer to the whole bill was properly overruled."

Retained Only for Equitable Relief. — Where the bill cannot be sustained as a bill of interpleader, and there are no averments which disclose any other grounds of equity jurisdiction, it cannot be retained for the purpose of granting relief which can be obtained in an action of ejectment. Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568.

3. Whitney v. Cowan, 55 Miss. 626, where the court said: "The court may, at the final hearing, having the fund in its hands or under its control, fasten upon it, either in whole or in part, any equitable lien or trust which one of the parties may have established, though the proprietary legal title and ownership belongs to the other."

Decree upon Stipulation. — The court may decree that the fund be divided according to an agreement of the parties. Webster v. Hall, 60 N. H. 7.

hands, when there are any such that can be made available,¹ or against some of the parties made defendants in the bill.² And in reference to the question who among the defendants shall pay, the rule is that the defendant who improperly raises the double claim, making the bill of interpleader necessary, shall pay the costs of the plaintiff and of the defendant who is the successful party.³

Counsel Fees and Expenses. — Where a lottery company filed a bill of interpleader against conflicting claimants to a ticket which had drawn a prize, and the court, holding that the bill was properly brought, ordered the money to be paid over by the company to the defendants, who had compromised their differences, the lottery company was allowed counsel fees for bringing the suit. The court said: "In the case before us a mere stakeholder, without fault himself, in possession of a fund claimed entire by contending parties, * * * brings the same into court, thereby promoting the litigation and securing the due application of the property. From the nature of the contending claims and the circumstances of the case, he incurs expense and counsel fees in bringing the fund into court. There is no equity in compelling him to bear these charges. On the contrary, the parties who have benefited thereby should bear them. And this we understand to be in accord with the principles laid down in the case of Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 535." Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Clark, 16 Fed. Rep. 20.

In Glaser v. Priest, 29 Mo. App. 1, the court said that the plaintiff, "if entitled to maintain the suit, * * * was entitled to have his reasonable expenses therein charged as costs in the case; such is the practice in equity." Adams Eq. 206. And such has always been the practice in this state."

In New Jersey, by the Laws of 1893, c. 136, § 1, it is provided "that in all cases in which the court of chancery shall decree interpleader, as between the defendants to a bill of interpleader, bad faith,¹ or delayed the cause by collusive conduct,² costs may be granted against him in favor of the defendant to whom the fund is decreed.

Obtained on Motion or at the Hearing. — When the right to compel the defendants to interplead is not disputed, the plaintiff may obtain his costs on motion.³ When the right is disputed, costs will not be given to the plaintiff before the hearing.⁴

b. ON DISMISSAL OF BILL. — Where a bill of interpleader is dismissed as improperly filed, the defendants are entitled to their costs,⁵ unless under special circumstances.⁶

the said court shall award to the complainant a counsel fee commensurate with the services of his counsel in the cause, to be taxed in the bill of costs, and collected therewith."

Where a bill is so ambiguous as to render it necessary for the executor to file a bill of interpleader to ascertain which of two persons is entitled to a legacy, costs as between solicitor and client of all the parties will be ordered to be paid out of the general estate of the testator. Morse v. Stearns, 131 Mass. 389.

In German Exch. Bank v. Excise Com'rs, 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 394, which was found to be a proper case for interpleader, the plaintiff was allowed to pay the money into court, deducting therefrom a reasonable allowance for its costs and counsel fees.

The rule that the plaintiff in a proper case has his costs out of the fund, and that these costs eventually fall upon the defendant who was in the wrong, will not be departed from so as to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, because the defendant who was in the wrong is outside the jurisdiction of the court. Canfield v. Morgan, Hopk. (N. Y.) 224.

Contra. — In Temple v. Lawson, 19 Ark. 148, the court held that it was improper to allow attorney's fees to the successful plaintiff in an interpleader suit, where there was no fraud on the part of the defendant; citing Dunlop v. Hubbard, 19 Ves. Jr. 205, where the chancellor said he did not recollect a single instance where an interpleader has been allowed his attorney's fees.

Costs, but Not Out of the Fund. — In Badeau v. Rogers, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 209, where it appeared that the bill was properly filed as to one of the defendants — a pro confesso against him being deemed sufficient to establish the fact that he had made an unjust claim upon the fund — but unnecessarily filed against the other defendant, the plaintiff was granted relief against the former, together with costs against him personally, but not out of the fund.

Defendant Having Reasonable Grounds for Claim. — In People's Sav. Bank v. Wilcox, 15 R. I. 258, the fund was ordered to be paid to one of the defendants, but the other defendant having had a reasonable ground for making his claim, which depended upon a difficult question of law, no costs were given against him.

2. Michigan, etc., Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

3. Jones v. Gilham, Cooper 49.

4. Application After Decree. — Applications for costs should be made at the hearing or before the decree; as after the decree has passed and become final as to the party, the court has no power to make him any allowance for costs. Temple v. Lawson, 19 Ark. 148; Jones v. Gilham, Cooper 49.

Reservation for Further Directions. — The decree directing the defendants to interplead and discharge the defendant provides for costs to the latter. All further directions as to costs are to be reserved. Balchen v. Crawford, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 380.

5. Shaw v. Coster, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 339, affirming 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 405; Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 365; Quinn v. Patton, 2 Ired. Eq. (37 N. Car.) 48; Dodd v. Bellows, 29 N. J. Eq. 127; Michener v. Lloyd, 16 N. J. Eq. 42.

Costs as Between Solicitor and Client. — In Dungey v. Angove, 2 Ves. Jr. 313, which was a case of fraudulent collusion, the plaintiff and his solicitor were ordered to pay the defendant to a bill of interpleader, which was dismissed, all his expenses as between solicitor and client.

6. Where Defendant Answers Instead of Demurring. — In Shaw v. Coster, 8

12. Removal of Cause to Federal Court. — Under the Acts of Congress for removal of causes from state to federal courts,¹ an interpleader suit in which the plaintiff and one of the defendants are citizens of the same state cannot be removed to a federal court until the plaintiff has been dismissed,² and has fully rendered the debt, duty, or other thing required of him by the decree dismissing him.³

III. CODE COMPLAINTS OF INTERPLEADER — 1. Coextensive with Bills of Interpleader. — A code complaint of interpleader will lie upon the same grounds as those which sustain a bill of interpleader in chancery.⁴

2. Concurrent with Statutory Interpleader. — The remedy by

Paige (N. Y.) 339, it appeared upon the face of a bill of interpleader that it was not a proper case for such a bill, and the defendants, instead of demurring, put in answers and went to a hearing upon pleadings and proofs, insisting in their answers, however, that the bill was improperly filed. The chancellor, upon a dismissal of the bill, allowed the defendants only the costs to which they would have been entitled if they had demurred, and the bill had been dismissed upon the allowance of the demurrers. The same principle was alluded to as sound in Quinn v. Patton, 2 Ired. Eq. (37 N. Car.) 48.

Where One Defendant Colludes with Plaintiff. — Upon dismissal of the bill, costs will not be awarded in favor of a defendant who seems to have been in collusion with the plaintiff. Thus in Quinn v. Patton, 2 Ired. Eq. (37 N. Car.) 48, where the bill was dismissed, costs were given to one of the defendants, but with regard to the other defendant the court said: "Costs would likewise be given to the other defendants but for the fact that they are represented by the same solicitor who drew the bill; from which it is inferred that those parties and the plaintiff were at a good understanding, and did not deem the controversy between them very serious." So in Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 365, no costs were given as between one of the defendants and the plaintiff, who were in plain collusion.

Where Defendants Obtained Advice of Court. — In Greene v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 313, the court seems to have inferred that the suit was collusive partly from the circumstance that the defendants answered a bill which would have been plainly bad on demurrer. At any rate, the bill having served the turn of all the parties by eliciting the opinion of the court on the points of law raised, no costs were given to either party upon its dismissal.

Plaintiff's Interest Known to but Undisclosed by One Defendant. — Where a decree of interpleader was reversed on appeal, and the plaintiff's bill ordered to be dismissed on the ground of the plaintiff's interest, no costs were given in the appellate court to one of the defendants, who knew of the plaintiff's interest but did not disclose it. Wing v. Spaulding, 64 Vt. 83.

1. 14 Stat. at L., p. 306; 14 Stat. at L., p. 558; Judiciary Act, 1789, §§ 11, 12.

2. Leonard v. Jamison, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 136.

3. George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 299, holding that until then he continues to be a substantial and necessary party, and, being a citizen of the same state as one of the defendants, the cause cannot be removed upon petition of that defendant, although the other defendant is a citizen of a different state. See Sewing Mach. Co.'s Case, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 553.

4. Therefore, consult the preceding part of this article, the code cases being there cited indiscriminately with cases in chancery. For cases conspicuously illustrating the substantive identity of complaints of interpleader and bills of interpleader, see Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 648; Beck v. Stephani, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 193; DuBois v. Union Dime Sav. Inst., 89 Hun (N. Y.) 382; Board of Education v. Scoville, 13 Kan. 17; Cullen v. Dawson, 24 Minn. 66; Carrico v. Tomlinson, 17 Mo. 499; Freeland v. Wilson, 18 Mo. 380; Fahie v. Lindsay, 8 Oregon 474.

action of interpleader is concurrent with and not superseded by statutory remedies afforded to a defendant in an action at law whereby he may obtain an order substituting another claimant as defendant.¹

3. Pleadings, Hearing, and Decree. — The rules of pleading and practice incidental to bills of interpleader and to code complaints of interpleader differ so little from each other that what has been said in respect of the first² may be considered as applicable to both,³ except where a distinction has been specifically pointed out.⁴

4. Costs. — See supra, II. 11. Costs.

IV. BILLS IN THE NATURE OF INTERPLEADER — 1. Object of the Bill. — In a bill of interpleader the plaintiff asks only that he may be at liberty to pay the money or deliver the property to the one to whom it of right belongs, and be protected against the claims of both.⁵ But a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader will lie by a party in interest, to ascertain and establish his own rights, where there are other conflicting rights between third persons.⁶

1. Board of Education v. Scoville, 13 Kan. 17, an excellent case on this subject, as the plaintiff's interpleader action and the action at law against him were pending at the same time. Beck v. Stephani, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 193; Nofsinger v. Reynolds, 52 Ind. 218. See also Crane v. McDonald, 118 N. Y. 648; Barry v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 536. "In strict actions of interpleader legal rights are only enforced; in actions in the nature of interpleader equitable relief in addition is sometimes given, and that seems to be the whole of the distinction." New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Odell, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 279.

Use of the Remedy Illustrated — To Redeem, etc. — A bill in the nature of interpleader is a proper remedy where the plaintiff is a mortgagor seeking to redeem, and there are conflicting claims to the mortgage money. Koppinger v. O'Donnell, 16 R. I. 417; Bedell v. Hoffman, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 199. See also Badeau v. Rogers, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 209; Crane v. McDonald, (Supreme Ct.) 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 150.

To Remove Liens. — The owner of a house may file a bill in the nature of interpleader against the builder and a person who has furnished material, to have it determined who is entitled to the balance due under the contract, and for a decree that upon paying the same all right of lien against the house and land shall become extinct. Illingworth v. Rowe, 52 N. J. Eq. 360. See also Newhall v. Kastens, 70 Ill. 156.

To Obtain Legal Title. — Where a purchaser of land takes possession and makes permanent improvements before acquiring title by deed and before the payment of the purchase money, and then a dispute arises as to whether the title of his vendor is not void as against the creditors of the person who conveyed to his vendor, he may file a bill in the nature of interpleader to have it

2. Conditions Essential to Maintenance of Bill. — The bill cannot be maintained where the plaintiff alleges that neither of the defendants has any right or title to or any interest in the subject-matter of the action,¹ nor unless the relief sought is equitable relief.² But it is not essential that there should be a legal doubt as to the plaintiff's rights.³

3. Frame of the Bill. — The bill differs from a strict bill of interpleader in that no affidavit negating collusion is required.⁴

Prayer. — The bill should pray that the defendants may interplead, and that the court may adjudge to whom the money or other property belongs.⁵

4. Decree. — The decree must be consistent with the allegations and prayer of the bill, and the issues submitted by the answers.⁶

5. Costs. — On a bill in the nature of interpleader costs are in the discretion of the court,⁷ and are not necessarily given to the determined to whom he shall pay the purchase money, and what, on payment thereof, shall be done to invest him with a good title to the land. Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 450. This case was distinguished in Carrico v. Tomlinson, 17 Mo. 499, where it was held that a purchaser of land could not enforce the specific performance of his contract by a bill in the nature of an interpleader, bringing in all those who claimed title to the land and requiring them to interplead.

Trustees Seeking Directions. — Where there are conflicting claims to a trust estate, the trustee, by filing a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader, to which those who claim to have an interest in the trust estate are made parties, can ask the direction of the court as to the proper mode of administering the trust, and can also be protected in the disposal of the property in his hands. Fairbanks v. Belknap, 135 Mass. 182.

But a party in interest under a trust cannot maintain a bill in the nature of interpleader against the trustee and an adverse claimant under the trust. Sprague v. West, 127 Mass. 471.

To Determine Liability for Tax. — In Dorn v. Fox, 61 N. Y. 264, it was held that where warrants for the collection of taxes upon a farm lying in each of two adjoining towns were placed in the hands of the respective town collectors, an action in the nature of a bill of interpleader could be maintained by the owner against the two collectors for the purpose of determining in which town his farm was properly taxed. See also Thomson v. Ebbets, Hopk. (N. Y.) 272, where actions were brought by taxpayers to compel the collectors of different towns in which the plaintiff was taxed for the same property to interplead. Redfield v. Genesee County, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 42; Mohawk, etc., R. Co. v. Clute, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 385.

Memphis, etc., R. Co.*, 96 Ala. 447. See also Blue v. Watson, 59 Miss. 619.

6. Heath v. Hurless, 73 Ill. 323.

7. In Bedell v. Hoffman, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 199, speaking of a bill in the nature of interpleader to redeem and be let into possession of mortgaged premises, the court said: "And in a case where the complainant had been obliged to resort to such a suit in consequence of the conflicting claims of the defendants, he was allowed his costs, contrary to the usual practice in suits to redeem. Goodrick v. Shotbolt, Prec. Ch. 333. Costs in such cases, however, rest in the discretion of the court, and are not a matter of right; and where the complainant is in full possession of the mortgaged premises; and cannot be dispossessed by an action at plaintiff, though his bill be sustained.¹

V. CODE COMPLAINTS IN THE NATURE OF INTERPLEADER. — The remedy by complaint in the nature of interpleader is essentially the same as that by bill in equity in the nature of interpleader,² which has been heretofore discussed.³

VI. STATUTORY INTERPLEADER BY SUBSTITUTION OF CLAIMANT. — See article RIGHT OF PROPERTY, TRIAL OF.

law in favor of either of the parties claiming the mortgage money, the party who has offered to receive the amount due and give an adequate indemnity ought not to be charged with the complainant's costs, if in the end it appears he was in the right."

I. PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

— 1. Jurisdiction of the Commission. — The jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission is strictly statutory and cannot be extended over other subjects than those defined by the act under which such commission is organized.¹ Under the provision

1. Matter of Express Companies, 1 Interstate C. C. Rep. 369.

Every ground of the commission's jurisdiction as defined by the statute "relates directly or indirectly to the transportation of persons and freight by carriers at fair and reasonable rates and with absolute impartiality as to facilities and accommodations." Traders', etc., Union v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 1 Interstate Com. Rep. 371.

In Mattingly v. Pennsylvania Co., 3 Interstate C. C. Rep. 592, it was held that the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce must be understood to regulate all the commerce subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, including the agents and instrumentalities employed and commodities carried, with only such limitations as are found in the act itself.

Commerce between Points in Same State Passing through Another State. — Commerce between points in the same state, but which in being conducted from one point to another passes through another state, is interstate commerce, and subject to regulations by the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce. New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 2 Interstate C. C. Rep. 375.

Merchandise Intended to be Transported to Another State by Second Carrier. — The fact that merchandise offered to a carrier for transportation from one point to another in the same state is intended to be further transported by a second carrier into another state does not make such first transportation interstate commerce, or render the carrier subject to the control of the commission in respect thereto, even though such first carrier may be informed of the ultimate destination of the merchandise. Missouri, etc., Railroad Tie, etc., Co. v. Cape Girardeau, etc., R. Co., 1 Interstate C. C. Rep. 30. See also, to the of the Act to Regulate Commerce authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to institute an inquiry on its own motion in the same manner and to the same effect as though complaint had been made, neither complaint nor complainant is necessary to give the commission jurisdiction.¹ The jurisdiction of the commission as usually exercised is limited to the decision of complaints for alleged violations of the law upon hearing of the parties interested; it will not express opinions upon an ex parte statement of fact where there has been no complaint of any violation of the law.²

2. Parties — Complaint Concerning Single Carrier. — Where a complaint for the violation of the Interstate Commerce Law concerns only an act or omission by a single carrier, such carrier only need be made a party.³

Complaint Concerning Several Carriers or Lines. — Where, however, the complaint relates to matters in which two or more carriers, doing business under a common control or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment, are interested, all such carriers must be made parties.⁴ When the subject-matter of the complaint involves substantially the same alleged violations of the Interstate Commerce Law by several carriers, or lines operated separately, such carriers or lines may be embraced by the complainant in the same proceeding.⁵

same effect, New Jersey Fruit Exchange v. Central R. Co., 2 Interstate C. C. Rep. 142.

Foreign Carriers. — The Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction of foreign carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers and property for a continuous carriage or shipment from places in the United States to places in adjacent foreign countries. Matter of Acts, etc., of Grand Trunk R. Co., 3 Interstate C. C. Rep. 89.

Jurisdiction as to Receivers. — The fact that a receiver has been appointed for a railroad company does not affect the jurisdiction of the commission. Board of Trade v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 4 Interstate Com. Rep. 348.

And prior leave of a court which has appointed a receiver of a railroad company is not necessary to entitle a shipper to complain against such receiver in a proceeding before the commission or to give the commission jurisdiction in such proceeding. *Evans v. Intervention. — All persons or carriers, although not made formal parties, may, if they have an interest in a question pending before the commission, apply for leave to intervene and be heard upon the questions involved.¹

Interest of Complainant. — A complaint by a party having no apparent interest in the transaction will not be entertained,² but one may complain upon public grounds of a violation of the law amounting to a public grievance.³

3. Complaints—a. MUST BE BY PETITION. — Complaints of any acts or omissions by any common carrier in violation of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Law must be made by petition,⁴ briefly stating the facts claimed to constitute a violation.⁵

b. VERIFICATION. — The petition must be verified by the petitioner, or by some officer or agent of the corporation or other organization making the complaint, to the effect that the averments of the petition are true to the knowledge or belief of the affiant.⁶

c. MUST BE SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE. — No order can be made against a railroad company on a complaint which is not supported by evidence.⁷ In such case, the complaint will be dismissed for want of proof.⁸

d. NAMES OF PARTIES. — The name of the party or parties complained against must be set forth in full;⁹ and the address of the petitioner, and the name and address of his attorney or counsel, if any, should be indorsed upon the complaint.¹⁰

Affidavits — Where Taken. — An affidavit to a petition, complaint, or answer may be taken before any officer of the United States or of any state or territory who is authorized to administer oaths. 1 Int. Com. Rep., app. 1, rule 12, p. 842.

e. AMENDMENT.— Upon the application of a petitioner, the commission may, in its discretion, allow an amendment to the petition,¹ and as a rule the commission is liberal in its allowance of such amendments,² but it will not allow an amendment which would in effect be making a new case.³ An amendment to the complaint is not necessary in order to introduce evidence which would have been admissible under the complaint as originally filed.⁴

4. Method of Demurring.— If the carrier complained against deems the complaint insufficient to show a breach of legal dealing, it may, instead of filing an answer, serve notice on the complainant for a hearing of the case on the complaint, thereby admitting the facts stated in the complaint.⁵ A copy of such notice must also be filed with the commission.⁶

5. Answer—a. CONTENTS, AND EFFECT OF FAILURE TO ANSWER.— The party complained against must answer the complaint within the time prescribed by the commission,⁷ either admitting or denying the material allegations of the complaint and setting forth any additional facts claimed to be material.⁸

In Case of a Failure to Answer the commission may take such proof of the charge as it deems reasonable and proper, and make such order thereon as the circumstances of the case appear to demand.⁹

If the Respondent Makes Satisfaction Before Answering, the written acknowledgment thereof must be filed with the commission, and may be set forth in the answer; if, however, the satisfaction is made after the filing and service of the answer, a supplemental answer setting forth the facts of satisfaction may be filed and served.¹⁰

b.* VERIFICATION.— The answer must be verified in the same manner as the complaint.¹¹

c. AMENDMENT. — As in the case of complaints, an amendment may be allowed to an answer, in the discretion of the commission.¹

6. Replication. — The rules of practice issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission not only do not provide for a replication to the answer, but in effect, though not in terms, exclude it.²

7. Service of Papers. — Copies of notice or other papers must be served upon the opposing parties, either personally or by mail; and where the party has appeared by attorney, service upon such attorney shall be deemed sufficient service upon the party.³

8. Depositions. — Where a case is at issue upon petition and answer, each party may take depositions of witnesses in the manner provided by statute,⁴ and transmit the same to the secretary of the commission, without obtaining any authority from the commission for that purpose.⁵

9. Hearing — Time and Place. — When issue has been joined by the service of the answer, the time and place will be assigned by the commission for hearing the same.⁶ The place for such hearing is at the office of the commission, unless otherwise ordered.⁷

The Granting of Adjournments and Extensions of Time upon the application of parties rests within the discretion of the commission.⁸

If, at the Hearing, the Defendant Avers Its Purpose to Comply with the Law, it must be presumed that it will do so, and the commission must act upon such an assumption until it is evidenced that such purpose is not being carried out.⁹

Stay of Proceedings. — All cases before the commission will be stayed until final determination of other similar suits at the same

Hearing Ordered at Point Immediately Affected. — In Delaware State Grange v. New York, etc., R. Co., 2 Interstate Com. Rep. 187, a case which involved local rates was ordered to be heard before the commission at a central point in the region immediately affected by the rates under consideration.

Publication of Notice of Hearing. — In the Matter of Chicago, etc., R. Co., 2 Interstate Com. Rep. 55, 137, where a railroad company was called upon to justify its rate sheets at a public hearing, notice was ordered to be published of such hearing, in order that other competing carriers and the public generally might be afforded an opportunity to attend.

Dilatory Motions Not Favored. — In Associated Wholesale Grocers v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 1 Interstate Com. Rep. 321, it was stated by the commission that "it is the desire of the commission that the practice and proceedings in cases before us shall be in the simplest form possible consistent with justice, and that, without dilatory motions, pleas in abatement, or other interlocutory proceedings, the matter in question may be brought to an issue at the earliest practicable day, when a final hearing may be had forthwith, and all proper questions will then be entertained, whether jurisdictional or going to the merits of the controversy."

time pending in the courts for the enforcement of an order of the commission, where such order, if enforced, will probably remove all grounds for complaint in the cases under consideration.¹

10. Submission of Proposed Findings.—When a case is finally submitted to the commission it is the right of either party to submit proposed findings of fact, which findings must embrace only the material facts supposed to be established by the testimony.²

11. Stipulation as to Facts.—Parties to proceedings before the commission may, by stipulation duly signed and filed, agree upon such facts as they deem to be involved in the controversy, and such statement shall be recorded and used as evidence.³

12. Dismissal and Discontinuance.—When a copy of the defendant's answer and notice of the time of hearing have been sent to the complainant, but the latter has not appeared, it will be assumed that he is satisfied with the answer and the case will be dismissed.⁴ So, also, where there is no evidence of any overt act of misconduct on the part of the defendant which could support any judgment by the commission or any mandatory order, the complaint must be dismissed.⁵ Where rates complained of in a petition are reduced before the hearing, such petition will be dismissed.⁶ Where, in the absence of proof, it is impossible to say that if all the facts were before the commission a charge complained of as excessive could not be justified, the case must be dismissed without prejudice.⁷

A Motion to Dismiss a Complaint for Insufficiency may be made at the hearing although an answer has been filed, as such fact will not be deemed an admission of the sufficiency of the complaint.⁸

13. Rehearing—In General.—Either party desiring a rehearing must make an application within the time prescribed after a decision has been filed and made public in any case decided by the commission.⁹

Petition.—Such application must be by petition, stating the findings of fact and conclusions of law supposed to be erroneous;¹⁰ otherwise the application will be denied.¹¹ Where a petition is for a rehearing for the purpose of further testimony, it should indicate the nature of the additional testimony,¹ and should be verified.²

Application by One Not a Party. — After the hearing and determination of a complaint, no party to the proceeding having applied for a rehearing, a rehearing will not be granted at the instance of one who was not a party to the original proceeding.³

Consideration of Petition. — The application for a rehearing will be carefully considered by the commission, and where it appears possible that any argument of counsel might change the result, it will be granted.⁴ If, upon a rehearing of the case, the additional evidence introduced would justify a finding contrary to that in the original hearing, the original order may be vacated.⁵

Reopening Case Without Application. — Where the motion to be decided is one of public interest the commission may reopen the case for further investigation without an application for the purpose and without previous notice to either party.⁶

14. Orders. — Where matters complained of are cured at any stage of the proceedings before the final opinion is rendered by the commission, so as to conform to the relief prayed for, the commission will make no order and render no opinion.⁷ Where

Refusal of Federal Court to Enforce Order. — The commission may, upon the rehearing of the case, modify its original order, even though a federal court has refused to enforce such order against the party affected. Page v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 6 Interstate C. C. Rep. 548, where it was said, in the opinion of the commission, that "the commission is not a court; it is a special tribunal continually engaged, in an administrative and semi-judicial capacity, in investigating railway rates and practices the propriety of which may be and often is affected by changes in commercial and transportation conditions; and it is not precluded from rehearing a particular case and amending or modifying its original order therein by the refusal of a Circuit Court of the United States to enforce such order against the carriers affected thereby — especially when the reasons assigned for such refusal do not relate to the principal question in controversy and are consistent with an approval of the amended or modified order."

Amendment of Final Order Several Years After Rendition. — In Rice v. Western New York, etc., R. Co., 6 Interstate C. C. Rep. 455, it was held that "as to reparation now demanded for damages claimed to have resulted from practices found unlawful by said decision, we think it would be unwise, as a matter of practice, and also unjust to the defendant, to amend the final order entered herein nearly four years ago and promptly obeyed by that company, so as to subject the carrier to further requirements in favor of these complainants in respect of violations which were corrected under said order."

an investigation by the commission has been finished as to some matters, but not as to others, it may make an order pendente lite as to the matters in which the investigation has been concluded, and the case may be retained for further consideration as to the matters in which it is unfinished.¹

15. Reparation. — Prior to the amendment of March 2, 1889, of the sixteenth section of the Act to Regulate Commerce, it was held that since the statute provided for no trial by jury in the courts to enforce the awards of the commission in controversies such as were triable at common law, the commission could award no reparation for past damages.² The section as amended, however, now provides, in cases involving right to jury trial, for proceedings to enforce the commission's orders on the law side of the court, and for a trial and judgment as at common law.³

16. Report — Necessity for Report. — In a complaint before the commission, the latter is required to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which report shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, and in any judicial proceeding had thereunder such findings are to be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found.⁴

Essentials of Report. — It is not sufficient that the report of the commission should be made up of mere conclusions, either of law or fact, but it should show what the issues of the case are and what facts it finds in regard to such issues.⁵

It is contemplated by the statute that when complaint of exorbitant rates is made the carrier may change its rates before the hearing so as to remedy the matter complained of, if it shall see proper to do so; in which case, if there is no complaint against the modified rates, and there is nothing to show that they are unreasonable, the complaint will be dismissed. Fulton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 1 Interstate Com. Rep. 375, 1 Interstate C. C. Rep. 104.

17. Effect of Decision of Commission as a Precedent.—In making a decision upon a question of fact in respect to traffic of one section of the country, the commission does not thereby necessarily lay down a principle for application in other sections of the country where the nature of the traffic is so different as to require altogether different rulings.¹

II. PROCEEDINGS IN UNITED STATES COURTS—1. Generally.—Compliance with the Interstate Commerce Law may be enforced in two ways: One by civil proceedings in federal courts to compel obedience to “the lawful order or requirement” of the commission; the other by the imposition of criminal penalties for infractions of the law.²

2. Civil Actions — a. TO ENFORCE ORDERS OF COMMISSION — Jurisdiction.—The right to ask the federal court to enforce an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission arises under a law of the United States relating to a subject-matter over which Congress has exclusive control; and this is sufficient to sustain the court’s jurisdiction, regardless of the citizenship of the parties.³

Who May Institute Proceedings.—Upon the refusal or neglect to perform any lawful order of the commission, the commission, or any person interested in such order, may apply by a petition to the Circuit Court of the United States, alleging such disobedience.⁴

where there is a conflict in the proof, showing how the commission settles the disputed fact, or, if the evidence in regard to any issue is undisputed, state that fact. In other words, the report should give the parties to be affected, as well as the court, in any judicial proceeding afterwards instituted, definite and distinct information as to what was found as facts and the commission’s opinion thereon, such as would be necessary to make a judicial opinion sufficient and satisfactory for the purpose of ordinary litigation.”

Cumulative or Immaterial Evidence.—The opinion in Riddle v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 1 Interstate C. C. Rep. 490, contains the following: “In every case before us our findings upon the evidence relate only to the ascertainment of all the material facts necessary to fairly and justly present the merits of the controversy, and * * * to such facts as arise from immaterial or irrelevant evidence we give * * * no place in our reports and opinions.”

Court May Not Modify or Change Order.—The Circuit Court has no power to modify or change the order of the commission; its jurisdiction is limited and can go no further than to grant or refuse compulsory obedience to the lawful orders of the commission. Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 74 Fed. Rep. 803. See also Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 73 Fed. Rep. 409.

Jurisdiction in Cases Growing Out of Interstate Commerce.—The fact that a given subject, like interstate commerce, is beyond the state legislative control does not ipso facto prevent the courts of the state from exercising jurisdiction over cases which grow out of this commerce. Murray v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 62 Fed. Rep. 24, 4 Interstate Com. Rep. 806.

4. 25 U. S. Stat. at L. 859, amending

Nature of Remedy.— A suit brought in the United States Circuit Court to enforce an order of the commission is an original and independent proceeding, in which the commission's report is prima facie evidence of the matters of fact therein stated. The court is not confined to a mere re-examination of the case as held and reported by the commission, but hears and determines the case de novo, upon proper pleadings and proof, the latter including not only the prima facie facts reported by the commission, but all such further testimony as either party may introduce bearing upon the matters in controversy.¹

Necessary Parties.— In a proceeding to enforce the order of the commission against a single carrier, it is not necessary that another carrier making the forbidden rate jointly with the defendant be made a party.²

Appeal.— The Judiciary Act of March 3, 1891, repealed section 16 of the Act to Regulate Commerce as amended by the Act of March 2, 1889, as to the allowance of an appeal to the Supreme Court direct when the matter in question exceeds two thousand dollars, and an appeal must now be taken in such cases to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and not directly to the Supreme Court.³

Institution of Proceedings by District Attorney.— Upon the request of the commission it is the duty of any district attorney to whom the commission may apply to institute in the proper court, and to prosecute under the direction of the attorney-general of the United States, all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Jurisdiction of State Courts.— A party who seeks damages alleged to have been sustained in consequence of a violation by a common carrier of the Interstate Commerce Law, as the act provides for redress by procedure either before the commission or by suit before the federal court, cannot bring suit before the state court, which is without jurisdiction to enforce the right, but is relegated exclusively to the commission or the federal court; otherwise, the party would have a third alternative or

Complaint.—In such suits it must be alleged and proved not only that there has been a violation of the law by the defendant, but also that it has worked an injury to the plaintiff.¹

3. Criminal Proceedings—a. GENERALLY.—By the tenth section of the Act to Regulate Commerce, the violations of the provisions of the act by any common carrier subject to such provisions, or, where such carrier is a corporation, by any agent of such corporation, will constitute a misdemeanor for which an indictment will lie.² Thus an indictment will lie for the giving of any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, firm, or corporation;³ for granting free transportation to one passenger while denying it to another;⁴ for carrying passengers at less than lawful rates;⁵ for falsely billing for transportation;⁶ for false weighing;⁷ or for obtaining less than regular or schedule rates.⁸

b. INDICTMENT OF AGENTS.—In an indictment against a defendant as agent for a violation of the Interstate Commerce Law, it is sufficient to show that the offense was committed under color of his agency, and it is not necessary to allege that the unlawful act was done under the direction or authority of the company.⁹

I. DEFINITION. — Intervention is the act or proceeding by which one on his own motion becomes a party to a suit pending between others.¹

II. JURISDICTION. — A demand in intervention must be presented to the court in which the main action lies, and must follow that jurisdiction although such court has not original jurisdiction of the claim in intervention.² The fact that the intervener and one of the parties to the suit are citizens of the same state is no objection, where the suit is in a federal court.³ Where a petition for intervention is filed, the applicant thereby submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court⁴ to the same extent as in the case of an original action. He assumes the position of plaintiff against those who are called upon to answer his complaint in intervention, and is subject to all the rules which regulate pleading and practice between plaintiffs and defendants in similar cases.⁵

III. WHO MAY INTERVENE — 1. Generally — a. UNDER STATUTES — In Actions to Recover Property. — In a few states the right of

1. Anderson's Law Dict., tit. Intervention.

Intervention, in civil law, is the act by which a third party demands to be received as a party in a suit pending between other persons. Black's Law Dict., tit. Intervention.

Distinguished from Interpleader. — "Intervention is a civil law term, a pleading familiar in that system. It is the act by which a person not originally a party 'comes between them,' claiming an interest in the subject-matter, and interposes his claim, which is generally adverse to one or both of the original litigants. * * * The bill of interpleader rests upon the fundamental principle that the complainant is the mere holder of a stake which is to be contested for by the other parties, he standing wholly indifferent between them. If the complainant seeks relief in the premises against either party, or asserts a right or claim against either or both of them, it would be fatal to his bill." Hyman v. Cameron, 46 Miss. 727. See generally article INTERPLEADER, ante, p. 444.

Removal from State to Federal Court. — In Hack v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 23 Fed. Rep. 356, a necessary party to the cause was excluded, and was not allowed to file a cross-bill and answer, or to present a motion and bond to remove the cause to the federal court. It was held that the federal court would treat such person as if he were a party and determine the motion for removal accordingly. See, however, in this connection, Iowa Homestead Co. v. Des Moines Nav., etc., Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 97, in which it was held that where a controversy between citizens of one state is united with one between the plaintiff and a citizen of a different state, such union not being due to the plaintiff, the federal court has no jurisdiction.

a third party to intervene, so far as it is regulated by statute, is confined to actions for the recovery of real or personal property,¹ and the applicant must have an interest in the object of the suit in which he desires to intervene. The fact that he has an interest in the thing which is the subject of controversy will not be sufficient.²

Party Having an Interest Generally.—In many of the other states, however, any person having an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either party, or who has an interest adverse to both parties, may intervene.³ The numerous definitions of the

In New York, "where a person not a party to the action has an interest in the subject thereof, or in real property, the title to which may in any manner be affected by the judgment, and makes application to the court to be made a party, it must direct him to be brought in by the proper amendment." Under section 122 of the old Code, which differed slightly in phraseology from the section of the Code Civ. Pro. above quoted, it was held that an action to recover moneys claimed to be due could not be considered as an action for the recovery of personal property, and therefore third parties could not ask to be brought in as parties to such action. Kelsey v. Murray, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 294; Judd v. Young, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 79; Tall-

In an Action for Divorcement would seem that a co-respondent cannot intervene, or, if he can, he will not be permitted to do so when guilty of laches in making his application. Quigley v. Quigley, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 23. See also Burke v. Burke, 5 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 319.

In Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 664, § 31 provides that, in actions to recover deposits in savings banks, "if it appears that the same fund is claimed by another party than the plaintiff * * * the court * * * may order the proceedings to be amended by making such claimants parties defendant thereto." Thus a claimant to lands in dispute between other parties to a suit who is not interested in that controversy, but claims by a different title, may not intervene. Asheville Div. No. 15 v. Aston, 92 N. Car. 588.

Nor may an assignee for creditors intervene in an attachment proceeding brought against his assignor before the assignment is recorded. His right must be asserted in an independent suit. Haynes v. Rizer, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 246.

In Louisiana and Texas third parties have always had the right to intervene in any suit. Garland's Rev. Code La. (1894), § 389 et seq.; Whitman v. Willis, 51 Tex. 425; Pool v. Sanford, 52 Tex. 621, where the court says: "We have no statute providing for the right of intervention, but our practice on this subject * * * is probably derived through the ecclesiastical courts of England and the modifications of the civil law as found in the state of Louisiana, and rests upon the principle that a party should be permitted to do that voluntarily which, if known, a court of equity would require to be done."

In Iowa and California the statutes governing the right of intervention have been liberally construed, and many innovations have been made upon the systems in use in other states; and this liberality of construction seems to be productive of great benefit, inasmuch as it allows the settling of controversies in a single action. As illustrative of the principles of the new system of procedure in these states, see Taylor v. Adair, 22 Iowa 279; Stich v. Dickinson, 38 Cal. 608; Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 62.

In Missouri and Indiana, also, the courts have, though to a less extent, relaxed the strictness of their construction of the statutes authorizing proceedings in intervention. Carter v. Mills, 30 Mo. 432; Summers v. Hutson, 48 Ind. 228.

1. California. — "The interest mentioned in the statute which entitles a person to intervene in a suit between other parties must be in the matter in litigation, and of such a direct and immediate character that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment. The provisions of our statute are taken substantially from the Code of Procedure of Louisiana. * * * To authorize an intervention, therefore, the interest must be that created by a claim to the demand, or some part thereof, in suit, or a claim to or lien upon the property, or some part thereof, which is the subject of litigation." Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 70.

Minnesota. — The opinion, quoted in the preceding paragraph, was referred to with approval in Bennett v. Whitcomb, 25 Minn. 148. In Lewis v. Harwood, 28 Minn. 428, the court said: "The broad interpretation given to the statute relating to intervention in California may, we think, be said, as intimated in Speyer v. Ihmels, 21 Cal. 281, to rest on the doctrine of stare decisis rather than on the natural strength and meaning of the language as ably expounded in Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 70."

Louisiana. — In Brown v. Saul, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 434, it was held that a person must have an interest that is direct and closely connected with the object in dispute, founded on some

In Attachment Proceedings. — In a few states, one who disputes the validity of an attachment, or claims the property attached, or an interest therein, or lien thereon, may intervene.¹

b. IN EQUITY — The General Rule. — In equity, although no one is entitled to be made or to become a party to the suit who has not an interest in its object,² it is the usual practice to permit right, claim, or lien, either conventional or legal, to be allowed to intervene. In Boyd v. Heine, 4 La. Ann. 393, it was held that it is only necessary to have an interest in the success of either party to authorize an intervention.

In Texas the rule laid down in Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 430, has been adopted. This rule is to the effect that "the intervener's interest must be such that if the original action had never been commenced and he had first brought it as the sole plaintiff, he would have been entitled to recover in his own name, to the extent at least of a part of the relief sought; or, if the action had first been brought against him as defendant, he would have been able to defeat the recovery, in part at least. His interest may be either legal or equitable." Pool v. Sanford, 52 Tex. 621. See also Del Rio Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. King, 71 Tex. 729.

1. "Any person other than the defendant may, before the sale of any attached property, or before the payment to the plaintiff of the proceeds thereof, or any attached debt, present his petition, verified by oath, to the court, disputing the validity of the attachment, or stating a claim to the property or money, or to an interest in or lien on it under any other attachment or otherwise, and setting forth the facts upon which such claim is founded; and the petitioner's claim shall be in a summary manner investigated. The court may hear the proof or order a reference, or may impanel a jury to inquire into the facts. If it is found that the petitioner has title to, a lien on, or any interest in, such property, the court shall make such order as may be necessary to protect his rights. The costs of such proceedings shall be paid by either party at the discretion of the court." Annot. Code of Iowa (1897), § 3928. To the same effect see Gen. Stat. Kansas (1897), c. 95, § 39; Kentucky Code, § 29.

In Tuttle v. Wheaton, 57 Iowa 304, it was held that though such person has replevied the goods, he may, notwithstanding, intervene under the statute.

In Loving v. Edes, 8 Iowa 427, it was held that when realty is attached, one claiming to be the owner cannot intervene. Contra, under Kentucky Code, § 29.

A mortgagee thereon may intervene. Bodwell v. Heaton, 40 Kan. 36.

Creditors who claim under a deed of trust made by the defendant in the attachment, after service upon him, have such an interest as will authorize their intervention under the Kentucky statute. Bamberger v. Halberg, 78 Ky. 376.

In Columbia Bank v. Overstreet, 10 Bush (Ky.) 148, it is held that a claimant, having acquired the legal title to the property attached, may, by intervention, recover the property by showing either the invalidity of the attachment or that it had been dissolved after levy by operation of law.

2. Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276.

In the federal courts the general rule is that "persons who are not parties to a suit have no standing in court to enable them to file a petition in said suit. If they have any occasion to ask any relief in relation to the matters involved in said suit, or to the proceedings therein, they must file an original bill. * * * Strangers to a cause cannot be heard therein either by petition or motion, except in certain cases arising from necessity, as where the pleadings contain scandal against a stranger, or where a stranger purchases the subject of litigation pending the suit, and the like. * * * Creditors who are allowed to prove debts, and persons belonging to a class on whose behalf a suit is brought, are regarded as quasi parties, and of course may have a standing in court." Per Bradley, J., in Anderson v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 2 Woods (U. S.) 628. To the same effect see Drake v. Goodridge, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 151; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. (U. S.) 130; Page v. Holmes Burglar Alarm Tel. Co., 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 118.

Suits in Personam. — A person who has no interest, in a legal sense, in the subject-matter of a suit in personam, strangers to the litigation who claim an interest in the subject-matter to intervene and assert their titles on their own behalf.¹

A Party Having a Beneficial Interest in the Decree sought to be obtained has a right to intervene by petition filed for that purpose.²

Persons Who Belong to a Class Represented in the Suit may be heard on petition or motion.³

and who is not a party to it, cannot compel the plaintiff to make him a party. Coleman v. Martin, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 119, where the court said: "In a suit in rem, where a court has jurisdiction over the res, and its decree affects the interest in the res of all persons who have any interest in the res, a person who has a claim upon or other interest in the res is allowed to intervene and be heard for his own interest in the res. The theory of this is, that the person, by his interest in the res, has an interest, in a legal sense, in the subject-matter of the controversy. But in a suit in personam a person not a party to the suit can have no interest, in a legal sense, in a personal claim made, in the suit, against a defendant therein, unless it is necessary that such person, not a party, should be made a party, in order to properly enforce such claim."

1. Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276; French v. Gapen, 105 U. S. 509.

In Billings v. Aspen Min., etc., Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 338, it was held error to refuse a petition by the representative of a deceased daughter of the alien to become a party complainant, since the decree should be in such shape as to settle the rights of all parties claiming under such alien.

Mortgagees. — In Everett v. Edwards, 149 Mass. 588, it was held that mortgagees of real estate may be properly admitted as parties defendant to a suit in equity by the result of which their security might be impaired.

Apparent Owner of Subject-Matter. — In Barner v. Bayless, 134 Ind. 600, it was held that no error can be assigned on appeal in permitting the apparent owner of the subject-matter of the suit to intervene, where no exception or objection was taken in the court below.

Parties Having Interest in Funds in Custody of Court. — Where a person has an interest in a fund which is in the custody or under the control of the court, and he desires to secure its proper administration and distribution, he may intervene for that purpose.

Ex p. Printup, 87 Ala. 148; Carlin v. Jones, 55 Ala. 630.

Claimant to Title of Property Held by Receiver. — One who claims the title to property which is in the hands of a receiver may intervene. Pelham v. Newcastle, 3 Swanst. 290.

In Cutting v. Florida R., etc., Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 444, it was held that leave to intervene was properly denied where the intervener claimed the equitable title to land of a railroad company which had been excepted by the orders appointing the receiver, and had never come into his possession.

A Judgment Creditor, having levied on his debtor's property after the same has come into the possession of a receiver appointed in a foreclosure suit, which is claimed by the creditor to have been brought collusively for the purpose of defeating his recovery, may, upon disclaiming any purpose of interfering with the receiver's possession, be allowed to intervene in the foreclosure suit. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 223.

Intervention by United States. — The United States will generally be allowed to intervene summarily, or by a supplemental information or bill, for protecting property rights involved in a pending suit in equity. Florida v. Georgia, 17 How. (U. S.) 478, cited in Potter v. Beal, 50 Fed. Rep. 860.

As, for instance, mortgage creditors represented by the trustees of the mortgage, who are regarded as quasi par-

Beneficiaries of a Trust will also be allowed to intervene to protect their own interests in suits affecting the trust property, as for instance in suits by or against trustees,¹ but only where the trustee is alleged to have acted in bad faith, or has failed or refused properly to represent their interest.²

Parties in Privity. — One having an interest in the event of a suit, and who is in privity with the person sued, may on petition be allowed to intervene and defend.³

Party Without Privity or Interest. — Where, however, a person is not in direct privity with a party to the suit, or has no direct interest in the event thereof, he is not entitled to intervene.⁴

Petition as Substitute for Bill of Revivor. — In Massachusetts other parties standing in like relation to the suit,* such as executors, administrators, etc., are permitted to intervene by a petition which is thus made a substitute for a bill of revivor. *Murray v. Intervention by Stockholders. — Where any fraud has been perpetrated by the directors of a company, by which the property or interest of the stockholders is affected, the stockholders have a right to come in as parties to the suit against the company and ask that their property shall be relieved from the effect of such fraud. Bayliss v. Lafayette, etc., R. Co., 8 Biss. (U. S.) 193.

In Bronson v. La Crosse, etc., R. Co., 2 Wall. (U. S.) 283, it was held that while stockholders who have been allowed to put in answers in the name of a corporation cannot be regarded as answering for the corporation itself, yet in a special case, where there is an allegation that the directors fraudulently refused to attend to the interests of the corporation, a court of equity will, in its discretion, allow a stockholder to become a party defendant for the purpose of protecting, from unfounded and illegal claims against the company, his own interest and the interest of such other stockholders as choose to join him in the defense. Stranger Seeking to Litigate with Plaintiff. — A court of equity cannot, in the absence of statute or rule, on the application of a stranger, make him a party to a pending suit, without the consent of the plaintiff, for the purpose of allowing such party to litigate with the plaintiff the right or title of the latter to any relief whatever. A party cannot be made a defendant on his own application.¹

that could be inferred from the matters stated in the petition was that the petitioner had a common interest with the defendant in defeating the suit, because if successful in that suit the complainant might sue the petitioner. The petition was held to have been properly denied.

In Ex p. Mensing, 55 Fed. Rep. 17, it was held that after an execution has been issued in a suit and a levy and sale has been made of certain lands, a party claiming to be the true owner cannot intervene to move to set aside such execution, there being no privity between the petitioner and the party against whom it has issued.

Purchaser of Property in Hands of Receiver. — One who has purchased a railroad in the hands of a receiver cannot object to the refusal of the court to allow him to be made plaintiff in a case prepared by the receiver against another railroad, when this would result in reopening the litigation. Ritchie v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (Ky. 1893) 21 S. W. Rep. 641.

Claim by Stranger of Money Paid into Court. — A petition filed by a stranger to the suit, claiming money paid into court in the cause, is properly dismissed. His proceedings should be by bill. Esterbrook Steel Pen Mfg. Co. v. Ahern, 31 N. J. Eq. 3.

Assignees of Parties' Interests in Fund. — In Massachusetts it was held that "persons who hold assignments of the interest of parties in a fund in court, or liens upon it, have been permitted in equity to appear as claimants, but creditors who have acquired neither an assignment of nor a lien on the fund have never * * * been permitted to intervene, and to admit them would interfere with the final determination of causes, and would convert suits in which money has been deposited in court into proceedings for the benefit of creditors of one or more of the parties." Per Field, J., in Tuck v. Manning, 150 Mass. 211.

1. Renfro v. Goetter, 78 Ala. 313; Drake v. Goodridge, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 151.

In Renfro v. Goetter, 78 Ala. 311, the court said: "Generally, a complainant may elect whom he will make parties, and with whom he will litigate, under the rules governing proper and necessary parties. Whenever, during the progress of the cause, it is disclosed or made known that an absent person is a necessary party in order that an effective decree may be rendered, or that a decree cannot be rendered without affecting such person's rights, it is competent for the court to order that the complainant amend so as to make him a party, and, on failure or refusal, to dismiss his bill; but the court cannot make a party without action taken by the complainant. When a person not a party to a pending suit, between whom and the complainant there is no privity, but who has a claim or lien on the property — a new and independent claim — or is interested in the subject-matter of the suit, desires, for his own protection, to present his new claim, to assert his independent rights, and raise new issues, he must do so by a formal bill containing appropriate allegations — an original bill in the nature of a cross-bill, or of a supplemental bill, as the case may authorize." See also Cowles v. Andrews, 39 Ala. 125; Carow v. Mowatt, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 9; Anderson v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 2 Woods (U. S.) 628; Stretch v. Stretch, 2 Tenn. Ch. 140.

In Ex p. Printup, 87 Ala. 148, it was held that by the general rule of practice in courts of equity, third persons cannot be allowed to come in as parties to a pending suit on their own motion, or by petition, against the objection of the complainant; but are required to propound their interests by original bill in the nature of a cross-bill, or in the nature of a supplemental bill.

In Drake v. Goodridge, 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 151, it is said that no such practice is known in equity as making a person a defendant to a suit on his own application, or as compelling a plaintiff to join as coplaintiff a person not a party, on the application of such person.

Intervention by Consent. — Where persons have petitioned to intervene, it is always in the power of the court to make them defendants with the consent of the original parties.¹

2. Existence of Another Remedy. — The fact that a party has another remedy does not affect his right to intervene.² On the other hand, the right of a party to intervene is not such an adequate remedy as will prevent his application to a court of equity to enjoin the suit in a proper case.³

3. Exercise of Right Optional. — Although one has the right to intervene in a suit between other parties, he cannot be compelled to do so.⁴

4. Compliance with Statutory Requirements. — One who attempts to intervene in an action pending between other parties without bringing himself within the provision of the statute allowing such intervention is a mere interloper, who acquires no rights by his unauthorized interference, unless objection thereto is waived. His pleadings are unknown to the law and can have no legal effect.⁵

1. French v. Gapen, 105 U. S. 525; Galveston R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 464.

2. Any interest is sufficient to authorize a party to intervene. The fact that he has another means of protecting that interest is immaterial. Coffey v. Greenfield, 55 Cal. 382.

In Whitman v. Willis, 51 Tex. 422, it was held that where the right to personal property levied upon is involved in a suit, it is, as a general rule, the proper practice to require a claimant to resort to the statutory remedy for trial of the right of property. See article RIGHT OF PROPERTY, TRIAL OF.

3. Mann v. Flower, 26 Minn. 479, holding that where a stranger desires to enjoin an action in a court where he seeks his remedy, he must do so by a separate proceeding.

Where, however, he desires to enjoin the execution of process by the sheriff, he may apply by petition in the original cause for an order. Platto v. Deuster, 22 Wis. 482; Endter v. Lennon, 46 Wis. 299. See also Smith v. American L. Ins., etc., Co., Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 307; Lane v. Clark, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 309.

4. Lannes v. Courege, 31 La. Ann. 74; Le Blanc v. Dashiell, 14 La. 274; Hazard v. Agricultural Bank, 11 Rob. (La.) 326.

In an action relating to land, between devisees of a testator and parties deriving title from the executor, the executor may not be compelled to intervene. Bennett v. Kiber, 76 Tex. 385.

5. Des Moines Ins. Co. v. Lent, 75 Iowa 522.

Such Petition Not Lis Pendens. — Thus where one creditor sues to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, another creditor who comes in and alleges that the conveyance is also fraudulent as to him, and asks for similar relief, is not an intervener, but a mere interloper, and therefore his petition gives no constructive notice under the doctrine of lis pendens. Des Moines Ins. Co. v. Lent, 75 Iowa 522.

Where There Is No Privity of contract between the plaintiff and an intervener in a suit, and the matter of complaint or cause of action sought to be enforced by the latter against the defendant is a contract between such intervener and the defendant, distinct from that which is the subject of litigation between the plaintiff and defendant, the petition of the intervener cannot be maintained. Burditt v. Glasscock, 25 Tex. Supp. 45.

Failure of Petition to Show Right to Intervene. — So where a petition of intervention does not state facts entitling the intervener to intervention, the petition must be treated the same as a complaint which fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and therefore an objection to its sufficiency can be taken at any time, even in the Supreme Court. Harlan v. Eureka Min. Co., 10 Nev. 92.

5. Waiver of Right. — The right to intervene may be waived.¹

IV. TIME FOR INTERVENTION — Under Statutes. — A person may become a party by intervention in an action or controversy between others only during the pendency of the action.² He may intervene after issue has been joined, provided in doing so he does not retard the principal suit.³ His application must, however, be denied if made after the trial has commenced,⁴ after final judgment has been rendered,⁵ or after the case has been duly dismissed⁶ or settled.⁷ If the original plaintiff was not

1. In Meissner v. Meissner, 68 Wis. 336, it was held that a failure by a creditor to intervene with other creditors, induced by a condition or promise by the creditor against whom he fails to intervene, waives the right to intervene.

3. Brooks v. Hager, 5 Cal. 281; Coburn v. Smart, 53 Cal. 742; Boyd v. Heine, 41 La. Ann. 393; Baker v. Texarkana Nat. Bank, 74 Fed. Rep. 598.

A petition to intervene may be filed either before or after issue joined. Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo. App. 471.

Co.*, 75 Iowa 722; Carswell v. Neville, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 445; Van Bibber v. Geer, 12 Tex. 15; Wright v. Neathery, 14 Tex. 211.

In Coburn v. Smart, 53 Cal. 742, it is held that the right to intervene may be exercised at any time before the trial of the action has commenced, if the complaint in intervention tender only such an issue as is already joined by the answer of the defendant on file.

Petition Filed the Day Before Trial. — In Van Bibber v. Geer, 12 Tex. 15, it was held that when a petition was not filed until the day before the trial, nor brought to the notice of the court until the case was called for trial, and this neglect was not accounted for, the court was not bound to receive it. See also Smith v. Strickland, 19 La. Ann. 118; Smith v. Gale, 144 U. S. 509.

After Final Decree. — In Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo. App. 471, it was held that intervention cannot be allowed several months after a final decree has been entered.

After Final Order. — In California it has been held that if an action be tried by a District Court without a jury, and counsel for the plaintiff be instructed by the court to draw a judgment in his favor, but, before the judgment was finally passed, a stranger claiming to have succeeded to the title of the defendant moves for a stay of proceedings and to be allowed to intervene, and the motion is allowed, the Supreme Court will not by mandamus compel the District Court to set aside the order and enter a final judgment in the case. People v. Sexton, 37 Cal. 532.

After Interlocutory Judgment. — The objection that an intervention cannot be permitted after final judgment does not apply in the case of an interlocutory judgment, and intervention may be made by a party interested after entry of such judgment. Clarke v. Baird, 98 Cal. 642.

Coincident with Judgment. — In Hocker v. Kelley, 14 Cal. 164, it was held that where the suit had been pending for some time, an application made just as the plaintiff was taking judgment was properly refused.

After Appeal. — In Cowan v. Lowry, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 620, it was held that after appeal from a justice to the Circuit Court, a petition of intervention in the Circuit Court was properly refused.

6. Harris v. Cronk, 17 Neb. 475; Lambie v. Wibert, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 225. See also Fayerweather v. Monson, 61 Conn. 431.

7. If an agreement is made between the parties to an action by which the controversy is settled, third parties cannot intervene. The court cannot, by allowing the intervention at that time, transform proceedings by intervention barred by the statute of limitations a third party may intervene after the expiration of the statutory limit.¹

In Equity.—A petition to intervene in an equitable proceeding comes too late after the case has been appealed.² It has been held that where such persons as stockholders and the like, who are not satisfied with the action had in their behalf by those entrusted with their interests, wish to intervene in a suit to protect their own interests, they must act with due diligence, and an application to intervene made when the whole case is about to be closed by the court may properly be refused by reason of the delay.³

V. LEAVE TO INTERVENE—1. Necessity for.—A party desiring to intervene should first obtain leave from the court to file his petition.⁴ The mere filing of a petition for leave to intervene in a suit in equity, in the absence of an order granting such petition, does not make the petitioner a party to the suit.⁵ The original parties are entitled to be heard on the question of his admission, into original proceedings. If the proposed interveners have rights which require protection, they should commence an original action in the ordinary way for that purpose. Henry v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 42 Iowa 33. See also Palmer v. Albee, 50 Iowa 429.

1. Foote v. O'Rourke, 59 Tex. 216, holding that a suit brought on a promissory note before the limitation was complete will inure to the benefit of an intervener interested in the recovery who intervened in the action after the expiration of the four years from the time when the statute began to run.

2. After Appeal.—When the people are not a party to the record, and the case has been appealed, the attorney-general will not be allowed to intervene in the Supreme Court. Such intervention should begin in the court having original jurisdiction. Blatchford v. Newberry, 100 Ill. 484, holding that in a cause brought before the Appellate Court, none save such as are parties to the record in the Appellate Court have a right to be heard. If there are interests such as would make it proper for other parties to intervene in the cause, such intervention must begin in the court of original jurisdiction, and cannot be allowed in the Appellate Court.

4. Stone v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 234; Dietrich v. Steam Dredge, etc., 14 Mont. 261; Bradley v. Trous- dale, 15 La. Ann. 206; Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112.

Failure to Obtain Leave.—In Bradley v. Trousdale, 15 La. Ann. 206, it was held that a judgment cannot be rendered on a petition of intervention which has been filed without leave of the court and has not been served or put at issue.

In Dietrich v. Steam Dredge, etc., 14 Mont. 261, it was held that one interested in a matter in controversy does not become an intervener by the filing without leave of court of a demurrer to the complaint.

Presumption of Leave.—In Grove v. Foutch, 6 Colo. App. 357, the court said: "Jurisdiction does not, in such cases, depend upon the record of the permission. The permission is presumed where nothing to the contrary appears and the court has assumed jurisdiction. This would certainly be the case when it occurred without objection and no exception was taken."

Error in Refusing—How Cured.—Error in striking out the complaint of intervention is cured by allowing the person filing such complaint to defend in the name of his predecessor in interest. Muller v. Carey, 58 Cal. 538.

5. Doyle's Petition, 14 R. I. 55.

Order that Cause Shall Stand Over.—When a person applies to be made a party to a suit in equity and an order is made that the cause stand over, with liberty to the complainant to amend his bill by adding proper parties if he should be so advised, such order does and he should follow up his petition by procuring an order of notice to them, and setting it down for hearing.¹ Although there are numerous cases in which persons have been treated as parties to a suit after having filed a petition of intervention, yet in all such cases they have acted or been recognized as parties in the subsequent proceedings.² The court should grant leave to a party desiring to intervene, unless it is evident that there is no legal foundation for the request.³

2. Appeal from Order Refusing Leave. — It was formerly held in some jurisdictions that no appeal would lie from an order denying leave to intervene, on the ground that such order was not a final judgment.⁴ A different rule, however, seems to have been established by later decisions, according to which one whose petition for leave to intervene is denied may have an immediate right of appeal.⁵

VI. OBJECTIONS TO INTERVENTION — 1. When to Be Taken. — The objection that certain parties cannot intervene must be made in the court below, and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.⁶

Waiver. — Although leave to intervene in a suit in equity should properly be granted by an order, yet the want of an order where it has not been objected to, and the proceeding has gone on to its conclusion, will not be ground for reversal. Myers & Fenn, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 205.

3. Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 98 Mich. 173. See also Oatman v. Epps, 15 Oregon 437.

Form of Order. — In Ex p. Jordan, 94 U. S. 248, an order granting leave to intervene is set out.

Allowance by Ex Parte Order. — In Spanagel v. Reay, 47 Cal. 608, it is held that an ex parte order may be made allowing a petition in intervention to be filed.

Allowance by Order Nunc Pro Tunc. — Though an intervener ought first to obtain permission to file his petition, yet the court may, by order nunc pro tunc, authorize and validate the intervention and filing of such petition, though filed without permission. Stone v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 234, holding that an order refusing to strike out a petition of intervention filed without permission and an order overruling a demurrer to such petition are together equivalent to a nunc pro tunc order granting permission to intervene.

Mandamus Not Proper. — In People v. Sexton, 37 Cal. 532, it is held that a motion for leave to file an intervention presents a judicial question which will not be reviewed by the appellate court on petition for a writ of mandamus.

6. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 227; Smith v. Penny, 44 Cal. 161; Donner v. Palmer, 51 Cal. 629. See article EXCEPTIONS AND OBJECTIONS, vol. 8, p. 157.

In Herman v. Pfister, 2 La. 456, it was held that if a petition in intervention be answered on the merits, and the cause be tried in relation to them, the right of the party to intervene cannot be questioned on appeal.

Intervention in Equity. — An objection to a petition to intervene in an equitable proceeding should be made by the parties in the court below. French v. Gapen, 105 U. S. 525. See also Myers v. Fenn, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 205.

After Answer and Submission on Merits. — In Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co., 96 Ala. 357, it was held that an objection that the court erred in allowing certain persons to intervene on

2. Waiver of Right to Object. — By failure to object at the proper time the right of objection will be held to have been waived.¹

VII. PETITION — 1. In General. — Intervention is either by petition or complaint.²

2. Essential Averments — Generally. — Such petition or complaint must show affirmatively by averment that the rights of the applicant are involved in the cause which is being litigated, and that he is entitled to the relief which he asks.³

In Equity. — A petition to intervene in a suit in equity should show the nature of the original suit,⁴ and should pray for the relief desired.⁵ It is immaterial that the petition is styled a petition in the nature of a cross-bill, unless it sets up facts not imperfect petitions should have been raised before or at the time of the answer, and comes too late after answer and submission on the merits.

Separate Petitions in Distinct Cases. — A party cannot by one petition intervene in several distinct and unconsolidated actions. Rosenbaum v. Adams, 61 Iowa 382.

Petition Filed in Name of Agent. — A principal cannot intervene in an action under a petition filed by his agent in his own name. Rosenbaum v. Adams, 61 Iowa 382.

3. Smith v. Allen, 28 Tex. 497; People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 256; Ward v. Healy, 114 Cal. 191; Shepard v. Murray County, 33 Minn. 519; Clapp v. Phelps, 19 La. Ann. 461, the case last cited holding that an intervener must set out his demand as clearly and as explicitly as a plaintiff.

Where an intervener claims to be an innocent purchaser without notice, his pleading will be insufficient unless it contains proper averments to that effect. Coffey v. Greenfield, 62 Cal. 602.

Effect of Failure to Aver Such Facts. — Where the petition for intervention states no fact entitling the intervener to become a party to the suit, the failure of the court to rule upon such petition, although erroneous, will not justify the reversal of the judgment. Wellborn v. Eskey, 25 Neb. 195.

Verification of Petition. — Smith v. Allen, 28 Tex. 501, where the court said: "No authority has been cited that a petition to intervene must be verified by affidavit. It is believed that the practice has been to intervene upon leave of the court, and that affidavits have not been required as a condition upon which the leave to intervene is granted."

4. Ransom v. Winn, 18 How. (U. S.) 295.

5. French v. Gapen, 105 U. S. 519. In this case the petition is set out in full.

"While a petition of intervention need not be as formal as a bill or complaint, and should, perhaps, be distinguished for brevity, it yet should exhibit all the material facts which are relied upon for the specific relief invoked, embodying, either by recital or by reference, so much of the record in the original suit in which the petition is filed as is essential to show a right to the particular relief demanded by the petition." Empire Distilling Co. v. McNulta, 77 Fed. Rep. 703.

Must Present a Case of Substantial Equity. — In Davis v. Sullivan, 33 N. J. Eq. 569, it was held that a party who, having acquired an interest during the pendency of the suit, applies under the Chancery Act to be made a party in order to move to open the decree must present, in his petition, a case of substantial equity. See also Guest v. Hewitt, 27 N. J. Eq. 479, holding that a party coming into a case by petition, by force of section 41 of the Chancery Act, providing that "such person shall be bound by all orders and proceedings in the cause against the party whose interest he has acquired," is no further alleged in the original bill, which, though they relate to the subject matter of the original bill, are made the basis for affirmative relief.¹

3. Amendment. — It is within the discretion of the court to allow an intervenor to amend his complaint or petition at the trial to conform to the proofs, and it is no error to allow such amendment.²

Proceeding Subsequent to Filing of Petition. — Where, subsequently to the filing of the petition of intervention, proceedings have been had under the original bill which would fortify the right of the intervening petitioner, either to the particular relief demanded or to some other relief, the matter should be incorporated into the petition of intervention by amendment.³

VIII. SERVICE OF PETITION — In General. — The petition in intervention should be served on the party against whom it is directed, in order that he may be able to answer to the same.⁴ Parties properly before the court are, however, required to take notice of a petition of intervention filed by leave of the court.⁵ Although in many cases persons have been allowed to intervene in equitable proceedings without any special notice of the application,⁶ yet the better practice would seem to be to require notice.⁷

bound by the previous orders and proceedings in the cause than the party whose interest he has acquired would have been bound.

Questions Not Founded on Matter in Petition. — In Clyde v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 55 Fed. Rep. 445, it was held that questions which may be argued will not be considered unless the matters to which they apply are set forth in the petition.

1. Fidelity Trust, etc., Co. v. Mobile St. R. Co., 53 Fed. Rep. 850.

2. Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488.

Supplemental Petition. — In Joliet Iron, etc., Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 51 Iowa 300, it was held that where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties it might render judgment in favor of an intervenor on an amended petition, setting up an award had upon an agreement of arbitration made subsequently to the filing of the original petition of intervention.

3. Empire Distilling Co. v. McNulta, 77 Fed. Rep. 702.

4. Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo. App. 471; Bradley v. Trousdale, 15 La. Ann. 206. See also Chism v. Ong, 33 La. Ann. 702.

In Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, it was held that where a petition is filed by a stranger to a cause asking relief against a defendant in such cause on new matter set out in the petition, process to answer such petition must be served on the defendant, unless waived by appearance or otherwise.

Trial Before Service of Petition. — When an intervention is allowed, a trial before service of the petition of intervention on the adverse party is premature, but an erroneous procedure in that respect does not affect the question of jurisdiction. Ah Goon v. Superior Ct., 61 Cal. 555.

5. Fleming v. Seeligson, 57 Tex. 524.

6. Lombard Invest. Co. v. Seaboard Mfg. Co., 74 Fed. Rep. 325; McLeod v. New Albany, 66 Fed. Rep. 378.

The parties to an original bill are bound to take notice of a petition in intervention filed in the suit. McLeod v. New Albany, 66 Fed. Rep. 378.

7. Doyle's Petition, 14 R. I. 55.

In Lombard Invest. Co. v. Seaboard Mfg. Co., 74 Fed. Rep. 325, it was held that it is not necessary, though it is the better practice, to give notice to the parties to the cause of a petition for leave to intervene in a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The court said: "The practice has been to allow parties to intervene without any special notice of the application therefor, other parties to the cause having always the right to object to the intervention and to move the court to vacate the order allowing it."

Service by Substitution. — In the case of an intervention by beneficiaries of a trust in a suit in equity affecting the trust property, it was held that by leave of court service may be had by substitution upon the complainant's attorney, when the complainant is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.¹

IX. DEMURRER TO PETITION. — If the petition is defective it may be demurred to like an original complaint.²

X. DISMISSAL OF PETITION — By Intervener. — If no issue is raised as against the intervener he may dismiss his petition.³ And he will not be estopped by the judgment rendered in the case from subsequently insisting upon the matters contained in his petition of intervention.⁴

On Motion. — If the petition fails to show a right to intervene the remedy is by a motion to dismiss.⁵

Dismissal Without Prejudice. — A decree dismissing an intervention "without prejudice" means simply that the intervener may institute another suit to enforce his alleged rights, and may, at best, perhaps, intervene again on the same cause of action in the same cause.⁶

XI. ANSWER TO PETITION. — After the petition or complaint has been filed by leave of the court and served upon the parties to the action, such parties may answer or demur as if it were an original complaint or petition.⁷ Where the allegations of the complaint are not denied by the answer, the facts which it alleges are held to be admitted, and a finding thereon is unnecessary.⁸

1. Fidelity Trust, etc., Co. v. Mobile St. R. Co., 53 Fed. Rep. 850.

2. Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo. App. 471; Ragland v. Wisrock, 61 Tex. 391.

A petition to intervene may be demurred to for failure to state a cause of action or ground of intervention, as the case may be. Shepard v. Murray County, 33 Minn. 519, decided under the provisions of the Gen. Stat. Minn. (1894), § 5273, that an "intervention shall be by complaint, * * * and all the pleadings therein shall be governed by the same principles and rules as obtain in other pleadings."
